On the 26th of November the French Government addressed a note to that of Switzerland, urging the immediate liberation of the prisoners. Meantime the English Government had assumed an attitude which differed essentially from that of the Government of France. The message then describes the state of the question at the present moment.

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15, 1857.

SENATE.

Mr. Seward, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the protection of steamboats from damage or destruction by fire. Among other things, it provides that all woodwork shall be removed a certain distance from the furnace and flues; the fire rooms and passages to be protected with iron, and in the event of fire, the flames to be extinguished by steam appliances to be worked by machinery outside the fire room. The act to take effect one year after its passage.

On motion of Mr. Pugh, a resolution was adopted, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate what would be the annual income of the Government according to such estimates as he may be able to make, if one-fifth of the duties on such imported articles, authorized by the Tariff act of July, 1846, should be remitted, what if one-fourth should be remitted, and what if one third should be remitted.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the House bill providing for the settlement of officers of the Revolutionary army.

Mr. Foster earnestly supported the measure, placing in a strong light the sufferings of those who periled their lives in the struggle, arguing that in consequence of the depreciation of the value of the certificates in which they were paid, they were justly entitled to the consideration of Congress.

Mr. Pugh offered an amendment, striking out the first and second sections, and inserting, "There shall be paid to each of the surviving soldiers embraced by the resolution, of Congress of the 22d of March, 1783, the difference between the amounts specified in the certificates issued to him, under the terms of the said resolution and the value of the said certificates in money at the tine it was issued and received. Adopted by a vote of 26 against 21.

Mr. Cass said that when first the bill was introduced he favored it, but the investigation which he had undergone had satisfied him that it was improper. He should therefore vote against the whole of it, unless justice be rendered to soldiers as well as officers.

There was a debate on other amendments but without taking the question on the bill the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Pelton presented a memorial from two hundred ship owners, merchants and pilots of New York, recommending the passage of the "Rogers' Marine Signal" bill.

The House passed the Senate bill with amendments, relative to foreign coins. It provides that quarter, eighth and sixteenth dollar pieces shall be received by the Federal officers at twenty, ten and five cents, but not again paid out. The new cent to consist of eighty-eight parts of copper and twelve nickel, and the coinage of half-cent pieces to cease.

Mr. Chapman introduced a bill for the construction of a wagon road from the South Pass in the Rocky Mountains, in Nebraska Territory, via Great Salt Lake Valley to Honey Lake Valley, on the eastern portion of the State of California; and for the establishment of military posts thereon, and making further appropriation for the completion of the Territorial Road now in process of construction from opposite Council Bluff, Iowa, to New Fort Kamey.

Mr. Sneed from the Mileage Committee, reported a bill increasing the penalty for the voluntary absence of members of either House; making a deduction of $25 a day from their compensation, whether a Sunday shall intervene or both branches have adjourned over a day or more; exception to be made in case of the sickness of members or their families.

The House went into Committee on the Tariff bill. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 16.

The Senate took up Mr. Houston's resolution calling on the Secretary of the Navy to state what number of desertions from the Navy had taken place since the passage of the act to promote the efficiency of that branch of the public service, &c.

The resolution was laid aside for the special order, being the bill providing for the settlement of claims of the officers of the Revolution.

Mr. Pugh, of Ohio, moved the postponement of the consideration of this bill until the first Monday in December next, which was carried—yeas 24, nays 23.

The presiding officer laid before the Senate a letter from the President of the Joint Convention of the Pennsylvania Legislature, giving information relative to the election of Mr. Cameron as Senator.

Several private bills were passed, when the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House was engaged in the consideration of private bills. Thirteen were passed.

Mr. Kelsey, of New York, rising to a question of privilege, offered a preamble setting forth that Joseph L. Chester had been duly summoned before the Corruption Investigation Committee, and had neglected, and concluding with the resolution that the Speaker issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms, commanding him to take into custody the body of the said Chester wherever found, and the same forthwith bring to the bar of the House, to answer for contempt of its authority.

Mr. Florence, of Pa., inquired where was the authority for all this?

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., believing that the House had no such power, moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. Paine, of N. C., demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMullin, of Va., regarded this as a very important question, and time should be afforded to look into it. His motion to adjourn received a decided negative.

At the instance of Mr. Orr, of S. C., the precept addressed by the Speaker to the Sergeant-at-Arms commanding the latter to summon Chester, was read.

The precept was returnad by the Sergeant-at-Arms with the endorsement that he had served the summons.

Mr. Orr was permitted to make a statement. He said the Committee had not acted in this matter without looking fully into the authorities, which they thought, fully sustained them in the application they had made. A case occurred in 1817 or 1818 to this effect: A party applied to Lewis Williams, a member of the House, and proposed to pay him a pecuniary consideration to make a favorable report on a certain bill. Mr. Williams brought the fact to the attention of the House, which ordered the arrest of the party, in the language of the resolution now before the House, which the present committee copied from proceedings in that case. The party was brought before the House and after trial was reprimanded only by the Speaker of the House, because there were mitigating circumstances. After his discharge from custody, he instituted an action against the Sergeant-at-Arms for false imprisonment. The case was tried in the United States Circuit Court, and decided against the plaintiff, and on appeal to the Supreme Court that tribunal decided that the House had the power to act as it had done, and that it was properly exercised. The Sergeant-at-Arms was protected and the complaint dismissed. The witness in the present case was subpoenaed but failed to appear. If the House had not the power to enforce the attendance of witnesses the investigation was a mockery, and he (Orr) should not continue a member of the committee. If it had not the power to enforce recusants to testify to facts within their knowledge the investigation would fall to the ground.

Mr. Broom, of Pa., wished to make a statement relative to Mr. Chester, but Mr. Jones, of Tenn., said they wanted to hear nothing about him now.

Mr. Harris, of Ill.—When the witness purges himself of the contempt I will hear the explanation.

Cries of "Hear," "Hear."

Mr. Broom—I was informed this morning that Mr. Chester was sick and unable to be present before the committee. I would ask the committee whether they can produce evidence that Mr. Chester refused to appear!

Mr. Paine—That is of no consequence to the matter before the House.

The House refused today the resolution on the table, and then passed it nearly unanimously. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Jan. 17.

Mr. Otero introduced a bill granting lands to New Mexico, Kansas and Missouri for railroad purposes.

On motion of Mr. Greenwood, a resolution was adopted calling on the President for a complete list of persons charged with the disbursement of public money; also, a list of all those who have failed for more than twelve months to settle their accounts, and the reasons for such neglect.

The House, by a vote of 93 against 81, tabled the Senate bill allowing fishing bounties to six vessels which failed to complete their voyages.

The House was then brought to an abrupt adjournment by the sudden illness of Mr. Giddings, of Ohio, while he was making a speech on a private bill. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 19.

The Chair laid before the Senate a communication from the presiding officers of the Delaware Legislature, announcing the election of Mr. Bayard as Senator from that State for six years, and Mr. Bates to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Clayton.

The Senate then discussed and passed the Diplomatic and Consular bill. An ineffectual effort was made to restore the appropriation stricken out by the House, giving a salary of $1,000 to each of the twenty-five consular pupils. An amendment was added to the bill repealing so much of the former law as authorizes the appointment of such officers.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

On motion of Mr. Taylor, of La., a resolution was adopted instructing the Post Office Committee to inquire and report on the general subject of the transportation of the mail to San Francisco, and whether it is not now expedient to enter into a contract for weekly mails from New York and New Orleans to San Francisco, by way of Tehauntepec, whenever the said road shall be completed.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Walker, of Ala., which was adopted, making a similar inquiry relative to a weekly mail from Mobile to San Francisco.

Mr. Morrell, of Vermont, offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the President to inform the House whether resistance, organized or otherwise, has been made, or is to be apprehended against the official authorities of Utah, and to communicate all correspondence relative to the appointment or declination of office in that Territory since January, 1852, and whether the laws thereof are practically administered with impartial justice to all the inhabitants there.

The first Tuesday of February was then set apart for the consideration of business relative to the District of Columbia.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill for the relief of sick and disabled seamen.

Mr. Fuller, of Me., then entered into an explanation of the bill establishing collection districts in the United States, designating ports of entry and delivery, and for other measures. The object of the bill he said was to codify the numerous existing laws on the subject, and to simplify and improve them so as to make them accord with the present condition of commerce.

On motion of Mr. Kelsey the Corruption Investigating Committee was granted leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 20.

Mr. Clay, of Ala., introduced a bill repealing all laws or parts of laws allowing bounties to vessels employed on the Banks or other cod fisheries. Mr. C. was strong in his denunciation of the "codfish aristocracy" of Maine and Massachusetts plundering the treasury.

Mr. Seward tried to shew that the advantages of the laws of cod fisheries fell to the lot of the poor; hence it was in his opinion, more appropriate to talk of the "codfish democracy."

Mr. Fessenden, of Me., joining against Mr. Clay, the latter gentleman promised at a future day abundant evidence in support of his charges.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill to establish a naval depot at Brunswick, Ga., was discussed for two hours; but without coming to any conclusion upon it the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the bill extending the land laws to the lands lying east of the Cascade Mountains.

The House then took up the adverse report on the petition of the inhabitants of Arizona, praying for the establishment of a Territorial government, and other business in accordance with the special order relative to Territories.

The House passed bills appropriating $30,000 for a penitentiary at Nebraska; establishing three additional land districts in that Territory, and for completing and opening roads in Oregon, Washington and Minnesota Territories. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 21.

Mr. James S. Green, elected Senator from Missouri in place of Mr. Atchison, appeared and was qualified.

Mr. Seward, of N. Y., presented a petition from the Geographical Society of the city of New York, protesting against the coinage of three dollar and three cent pieces, and praying that none but decimal coins may be issued from the mint. Referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Submarine Telegraph Bill was then taken up.

Mr. Hunter, of Va., thought the bill required some amendment, as it left the whole matter at the discretion of the President. He was in favor of inserting some limitation in the bill, as he feared the United States might go beyond what was originally designed unless this precaution was taken.

Mr. Collamer, of Vt., replied there was this limitation, that this government should afford the company no more aid than was afforded by the British government.

Mr. Seward, of N. Y., moved to amend the bill, to obviate objections, with the proviso, that the contract to be made by the British government shall not be different from that already proposed by that government to the New York and Newfoundland Telegraph Company. Mr. S. stated that the wire for this telegraph was already made, and the whole enterprise had heretofore been conducted and managed with American capital. On the 4th of July next, if the bill pass, there will be a girdle around the world. It is proposed to lend vessels belonging to the United States navy, as the British government will lend her vessels, to lay down this wire, because there are not in the commercial marine vessels suitable for that work. If we do not make this contract, the British government will have priority of messages, and we shall have to pay for the use of the line in accordance with the contract which they may make—but if we do make this contract we shall stand upon terms of equality with that government.

Mr. Seward's amendment was adopted.

Following this was a spirited debate upon the necessity of arranging with Great Britain for some guarantee, that in case of war the United States should have the free use of the Telegraph as in peace.

Without final action the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Orr, of S. C., from the Corruption Investigating Committee, rose to submit a report and resolution, also a bill, saying he meant to ask for their immediate consideration.

Mr. Grow, of Pa., raised the question that such matter could not now be introduced, this being one of the three days specially set apart for the consideration of Territorial business.

Mr. Orr, with a view of relieving Mr. Grow's apprehensions, gave as his opinion that the matter to which he wished to call the attention of the House would not occupy the entire day.

The Speaker overruled Mr. Grow's point, and said the Committee have a right to report the fact that obstacles were thrown in the way of their investigation, and to apply to the House for a remedy.

The report of the Committee was then read, the publication of which, on account of space and the still more lengthy debate, is deferred. Mr. Simonton, the correspondent of the N. Y. Times, persisting in his refusal to answer the questions of the Committee, was brought before the House, heard in his own defence, and taken charge of by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

After an interesting time the House adjourned.

Terrible Riot at Albion, N. Y.

ALBION, N. Y., Jan. 16—8 P. M.

A terrible riot is now going on in Main street between a party of Americans and a party of Irish. Knives and other weapons are being freely used.

It appears that this is pay day for the Irish laborers on the canal. They went in crowds to be paid and have been drinking all day, and this evening found themselves rife for a row. We cannot learn that anything but whiskey is at the bottom of the riot. Two Irishmen have been killed, and four Americans so injured that they are not expected to recover.

BANGOR, Jan. 19.

This afternoon, Sheriff Gilmore forcibly broke open the vaults of the Exchange Bank and seized $6,900 in specie, on a writ in favor of John Demerrit of Boston. Demerrit holds a bill of the Bank of the amount of $7,000, pledged to him as collateral security by A. K. Norris, of Wisconsin; and failing to get satisfaction, attached the specie. The Bank officers refused to give up the keys of the vault and the officers had to work some hours to get an entrance. The proceedings caused considerable excitement.

Shocking Poisoning Case in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 21.

A terrible tragedy occurred here to-day. A druggist filled a prescription ordered by Arnold, a German physician, for a child. The child took the medicine and died immediately. Arnold took the remainder of the medicine to the druggist, and told him he had made a fatal mistake. The druggist persisted that the medicine was right, and to show his confidence in his correctness, he swallowed a portion himself. He was immediately attacked with horrible convulsions, and died in five minutes. The doctor, who merely tasted the preparation, and spit it from his mouth, was also attacked, and with difficulty saved. The affair is occasioning great excitement. The druggist had mixed cyannuret of potassium with lemon juice, developing enough prussic acid in the preparation to have killed three hundred people.

[We deeply sympathize with brother Dulin in his affliction, and feel in such moments the value of the hope which the latter day gospel inspires, and which to us would be our only consolation in bereavement. That brother Dulin's own life may be spared to reach Zion and pass through the holy ordinances of God's house for himself and family, is our most sincere prayer, in which we are certain his friends will devoutly join.—ED.]

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament."

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue, de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concerna dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Christ Is Coming.

Wait the news, ye heavenly breezes—
Wait the news from land to land:
Christ is coming! Hallelujah!
All must yield to his command.

Spread the news, ye waves of ocean—
Spread the news from shore to shore:
Christ is coming! Hallelujah!
He shall reign for evermore.

Sound the news, ye pealing thunders—
Sound the news from pole to pole:
Christ is coming! Hallelujah!
Let the thrilling echoes roll.

Dart the news, ye vivid lightnings—
Dart the news from sky to sky:
Christ is coming! Hallelujah!
Let the welcome tidings fly.

Bear the news, ye holy angels—
Bear the news from world to world:
Christ is coming! Hallelujah!
Satan must from power be hurl'd.

Hear the news, ye sons of Adam—
Hear the news from God to man:
Christ is coming! Hallelujah!
Safety's in the Gospel Plan.

LIVERPOOL. HENRY W.

DISCOURSE
BY PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR,

Delivered at the First Meeting of the New York Conference, November 2, 1856.

REPORTED BY ELDER WM. J. SILVER.

THIS being the first Conference that has assembled here for a number of years, it may be necessary to make a few remarks in relation to those phases or changes so common to us as a people. Some years ago, there was a flourishing church in this city, and a Conference denominated the "New York Conference;" but as our religion differs very materially from that of the Christian world, so do our habits and locations; had we pursued the course of the religious denominations of the day, we should at this time have had many churches in this city with large congregations attached to them; and had Mormonism been something stationary, and confined itself to peculiar localities, this would have been the case, not only here, but all over the world. I remember very well, some years ago, after preaching for a short time in a European city, a number of gentlemen waiting upon me as a committee, and addressing me somewhat as follows:

"Mr. Taylor: a number of gentlemen in our city are very much interested in your preaching, as we consider that you unfold the Scriptures in a more lucid and satisfactory manner, and take a more just, Scriptural and comprehensive view of sacred things, than we have ever heard any other person do; we have conversed upon the subject in a meeting held in relation to it, and being very desirous to retain you in our midst, we, as a committee, are authorized to lay before you the following propositons: 'One gentleman in this city offers a lot to put up a church; another, stone; another will furnish fifty carpenters for two weeks; others offer money, and we have no doubt, but that if you will consent to stay with us, we can soon build you a good church, without any trouble or inconvenience to yourself, and place it at your disposal."' I replied, "Gentlemen, I am much obliged to you for your kind and generous offer, but I perceive you do not fully understand our principles, which include a gathering, and consequently impose a necessity upon all those who embrace them and live their religion, to go to Zion. I seek to build a church, not of stone, brick, mortar and wood, but of living stones, to be gathered together, and placed in the Zion of our God; and although I appreciate your liberality and good feelings, I must beg leave to decline your offer."

The faithful in this city who years ago composed this Conference, are now removed, with very few exceptions, so that on my arrival here, nearly two years ago, I found but two or three of the old stock remaining, whom I could acknowledge as Mormons. Great changes have taken place since that time, and a new era has commenced in the history of the New York church, as is evident from the transactions of this Conference The most of the present assemblage being composed of emigrants from Europe, on their way to Zion, we have here representatives of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, the Isle of Man, Jersey, France, Germany and Switzerland, all on the way to the same place, having the same object in view, although resting here for a season. Besides this, the arrival of the Elders into these parts, administering again the words of life and salvation, has caused quite a revival in the old branches around. The latent dormant principles of Mormonism have again sprung into life, the light of eternal truth is again filling the Saints' hearts with love and gratitude towards the great Eloheim, the august dispenser of so many rich and marvellous mercies. Having drank out of the well of living water, they all possess the same spirit.

Our Conference has been a good and an interesting one; the Spirit of God has been in our midst, and unity prevailed in our councils. As we are here a conglomeration, a living tableau of different nations, it may not be amiss to ask ourselves a few questions.

Professing to be Saints of the Most High, we have to understand something about the principles of truth, and comprehend our true position. As intelligent beings, it is necessary that we should know something about our organization, our origin and our destiny; that we should comprehend fully our relationship to God, and the various duties devolving upon us in all the ramifications of life, and discover the way of bringing our actions in the strictest harmony and conformity with the designs of Jehovah, that we may be the true and faithful redex of His divine will, and thus gain His approbation while moving in our respective spheres. That we may understand the reason of every step we take, comprehend every doctrine we believe in, every principle we practice and every ordinance we attend to, that not as foolish, but as wise men, we may fill the measure of our creation, and thus prove ourselves worthy of salvation in the Eternal Worlds.

We, as individuals, have assembled here, in connection with Church business, for the purpose of lifting up our hearts to God in gratitude for His tender mercies towards us. Many have come some distance from their homes to the meeting in this city. As a people, as Saints of the Most High, we have, or should have a definite object in view, and it may not be amiss for each and every one of us to inquire; Why am I a Mormon? Why am I associated with the Saints of the Latter Days? Why have I left my former home, profession and faith, endured reproach and obloquy, and been pronounced a fanatic, by the world, forsaken by my friends, and probably disowned by my kindred, since I might not only have done without it, but have sailed along with perfect ease and a fair breeze with a calm sea, without inconvenience to myself, my friends, my family, or my neighbors? Why have I stemmed the tide of popular opinion, perhaps dissolved my social and family ties, probably left the land of my birth, the home of my childhood; crossed the trackless ocean, and landed among a nation by whom I am as much despised, stigmatized and shunned on account of my religion, as in my native land, and associated myself with a people scorned, ostracised and persecuted by the majority of mankind? Some great controlling principle of action must have operated and impelled me forward, some unknown, hidden spring of the human soul been touched that is unobserved by the world. For not only does it operate upon individuals, but also upon families and communities; it has germinated, grown, spread, swelled and increased like a gigantic avalanche, until it has gathered together a mighty host; it has enlarged itself into a Territory of these United States, and is now standing at the door of Congress, asking for amdission as one of the Confederation, as a brilliant star in the Constellation of this Union. Yet these thousands have suffered not only individually, but as a community. They have passed through greater ordeals of privation, persecution and hardship; they have endured more mobbing, injustice, cruelty and imposition, than any other people in the United States, or all combined; they have been defrauded of millions upon millions of dollars worth of property, without redress; they have been robbed, plundered, whipped, kidnapped, banished, murdered, disinherited and disfranchised time and time again, without sympathy, or a friendly hand stretched forth for their protection, and yet they are one; they have again risen out of the ocean of unheard-of, unparalleled sufferings like a Phœnix out of its ashes; they have again united, again gathered together, and by some mysterious, incomprehensible influence, have been, and are now cemented. As a swarm of bees, when scattered, gather again around the Queen bee, so the Mormons have, when driven, gathered around their Prophets and Apostles, and are again united. In the first instance, instinct may be the cause, what is it in the latter? The world have tried systems and organizations almost without number, and have failed in every instance. Those coming under our immediate observation, such as Socialism, Fourierism, Communism, etc. have all accomplished nothing, and fallen to pieces; although aided by circumstances, wealth, talent, the press, philosophy and individual interest. Where are they now? What has become of "Robert Owen" and his system? What of Cabet and and his system? What of Fourierism. The latter has had the support of one of the most popular and influential journals of the present day, the "New York Tribune," to assist in the organization of the conflicting elements of society, into a consistent order. Where are they now? They are broken up; and what caused their entire failure? They have been let alone, and have quietly fallen to pieces; and why? Because they have not the elements of strength within them; they were devoid of those principles which impart life, light and intelligence, as the human system when lacking some of its vital energies, so dwindles and decays a social or philosophic system, when destitute of the true energetic life-giving principle. It is so with all the rest, they have not been persecuted, they have been left unomolested and let alone, and yet they are broken up, whilst the Mormons, although driven by mobs of ruthless savages, have increased, and still continue to spread and extend, till they have become an objec of terror to their former persecutors.

Mormonism is indeed a problem difficult of solution by this present generation, for while discord and confusion exist everywhere else, politically, socially, philosophically and religiously, the Mormons are a unit. Have we had any confusion during our Conference? No. There has not been one dissenting voice; all is harmony and union; the same spirit prevailed at the Philadelphia Conference, and it is so in Great Salt Lake City; in the latter place, the business is transacted for the entire Church throughout the world, without a dissenting voice. Is this the case with other parties? No. From a small conclave, to a large Conference associated with any other party, they are full of contention and strife and from a small body of a dozen pot-house politicians, throughout all their various clubs, in their State Legislatures and in Congress, division, disunion and discord prevails; vituperations, invectives, bitterness and bullyism abound. They say, division is healthy and good; it may be so, we do not covet it; we have found out the value of union, and appreciate its worth.

Why, I again ask, are the Mormons united? Let us search into this matter; there must be some cause for it. In order to do this, we will commence at the foundation, and examine the thing first individually; for all large, material bodies are composed of very small atoms, so our church, although large, is made up of individual members. Those members form organizations and churches; and those organizations and churches united, form the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Let us then commence individually, by asking the question, Why am I a Mormon? Very few of us were born or educated Mormons; we, most of us, had other associations and principles; we believed in other doctrines and ordinances, and floated along the popular current of the day.

Mormonism found us enwrapt in all the diversity of notions, creeds, dogmas, and theories; we heard, we believed and obeyed, but before we proceed with the details of the cause, we shall have to search behind this for a first moving shall have to search behind this for a first moving cause, whence came Mormonism? An answer to this question may be found in the simple, but important fact of a young, illiterate man, having had a revelation from God communicated to him by an holy angel, unfolding the true position of the religious world, describing it in a state of apostacy, and revealing the pure, simple, primitive gospel, as it existed in the days of our Saviour and His Apostles. He was ordained, and ordained others to the sublime calling of the ministry by the Holy Priesthood, and through revelations from God, visions and the ministering of angels he restored the fullness of the Everlasting Gospel, as it was preached by the Apostles and others having authority anciently with the same gifts and blessings, the same Priesthood, the same ordinances and organization. Like the ancient disciples, the Elders of this church went every where preaching the words of eternal life.

Many in the United States and in England believed the testimony of the Elders; their words were to you, as a sweet, mellifious balm, like droppings from the sanctuary, or soft, melodious music to the ear, bringing comfort and consolation to your souls. You were told that those men were deceivers, and Joseph Smith an impostor; stories of a golden Bible, of money-diggers and false Prophets, of whom many should arise in the last days, came, as it were, floating in the air, and reached your ears. After having heard that flood of falsehood, you went to see those men, and found them to be, in very deed, the salt of the earth; they presented to you draughts from the fountain of eternal truth, and brought to your remembrance, things new and old; they unvelled to your view the sacred writings of inspired men; your souls were lit up with the intelligence of heaven, so that you could comprehend the ancient gospel in all its primitive beauty and harmony; your hearts expanded wide as eternity; the sun of divine truth broke upon you in all his brilliancy and grandeur, the rays of which dispersed mist and darkness, and illuminated the inmost chambers of your souls, with visions of celestial glory. At first, this was very pleasant; but when you reflected on your circumstances, you found that consequences thus involved, placed you in another position; you thought of what your friends had told you, that you were deceived and deluded, and that, in a matter of so much importance, you should be very careful, but on a second reflection, did false Prophets ever bring the fullness of the gospel? No. An impure fountain cannot give pure water. Principles, which in all their bearings tend to save and exalt man, must necessarily emanate from the source of eternal light. You reasoned these men have the truth, the same as Jesus brought, and others have it not, but tell us there is no need of it, and you concluded that it must be true, for the Scriptures say, "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrines of Christ, hath not God; he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son," and these men brought the true doctrine of Christ.

Notwithstanding the rumors that were brought in opposition, you found it to be Scriptural in all its parts, and necessarily reasoned, that it was impossible for so many separate and distinct truths, to make one grand lie. Through obedience to the truth, you became involved in a variety of difficulties; you were often deprived of the means of gaining a livelihood; the ties of friendship and consanguinity were dissolved, inasmuch as parents often refused assisting their offspring in the wild struggle of life; children turned often a deaf ear to the voice of humanity, by forgetting their filial duties, and leaving those to whom they owed their existence in this world, unprotected, unsupported and bereaved in their old age, if they should dare to show themselves intelligent self-agents, having a mind of their own, and striking the pathway of eternal truth. But as the sun when having been obscured, shines with greater resplendency, and presents himself to the observer more brilliant and glorious from behind the clouds, so appeared the truth, after having penetrated the mist and darkness of of superstitious notions, more rich, pure, radiant and beautiful.

You realized then to a certain extent your accountability; you became aware of your being possessed of an immortal soul, the knowledge of Heaven began to dawn upon your intellect, you felt that you were destined to occupy a prominent place in the arena of humanity, and you said to yourselves shall I confine my mind to a nut shell; shall I allow the divine ennobling principles that are burning in my soul to be paralyzed by sordid pigmean notions; shall I swerve from the path of truth and yield to the falsehood of man, or shall the noble principles in me bow in servile submission to the threats of a corrupt priesthood, a servile press, debasing popular opinions or the threats of infuriate ruffians? No: Confiding in the arm of Omnipotence, as the rock of salvation, I will dare the combined opposition of men and devils, I will show my energy, my obedience, by embracing the principles of truth.

In the name of the most High God, I will do His will, commit myself to Him. I will be His servant; this people shall be my people; their God shall be my God; where they go, I will go also; I will suffer if they suffer; I will rejoice if they rejoice; and where they die there will I be buried. These are the feelings which thousands have had, though some have found the trial too strong and have shrunk from the conflict and given way, making a shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience, while thousands and tens of thousands have held fast to the truth and defied the powers of earth and hell, putting their trust in God; leaning upon the arm of Omnipotence and saying my strength is in Jehovah, and on him will I rely. You had faith and were baptized for the remission of sins; you received of His spirit by the imposition of hands; that spirit opened the visions of futurity to your minds; you understood the Scriptures; you read them with new eyes; you looked at them through another medium; you felt a spirit, a power, an intelligence, a union which you had never known before. The Holy Ghost was your comforter; your mind became calm, serene, and contented through the benign influence of that divine element. You found yourselves moving in another sphere, your thoughts, your views, your feelings, your very existence was changed, it was a new birth, you were indeed born again of the water and of the spirit. The veil of Time was withdrawn from your eyes, the Future, the Present and the Past arose out of the ocean of eternity, unfolding to your enraptured gaze through the vista of centuries, things that had transpired and things that had to come, and you began to long after principles emanating from celestial spheres, you wanted to have a knowledge of the great, sublime and eternal Light, whose radiant brilliancy illuminates the immeasurable amplitudes of the universe.

As a member of the Church of Christ, you had some interest at stake; you began to realize your position and responsibility, to live for eternity as a mortal and immortal being; to discover, that that great, omnipotent Being whom you so much dreaded, was not so austere, was not so rigid as you had supposed Him to be, not so awful and inaccessible; you began to look upon God whom you formerly had hardly dared to approach, as your kind and benign parent who is willing to give a responsive tone to every consistent prayer; you felt that you were His child, you called upon Him as a father and then you understood the saying of Jesus where he says, "I go unto my Father and your Father; and to my God and your God." That they all may be one; as thou, the Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be One in us. "You began to learn that it was good to be in subjection to God; you knew that if your children asked for bread, you would not give them a stone, nor for fish serpents; how much more then could you trust your Heavenly Father who knows all our wants even before we ask Him. These were your feelings, this was your position. You knew that you had received the gift of the Holy Ghost, the spirit of the living God. You breathed a new atmosphere, you had commenced a new life, and felt like a child happy and contented, full of hope and anticipation of a glorious future. You knew you had entered the threshhold of eternal life; you realized to some extent your position as a mortal and immortal being. You felt to exclaim, 'God is my Father, even the Father of my spirit, I am His child, I will endeavor to please Him, by doing His will and thus show myself worthy of His name.'" When such feelings spring up in the bosom of man, all is right with him; as an eternal being, inspired by the hopes of celestial glory, he will pass safe through all the ordeals of this probation.

What is the object of man, on entering the Kingdom of God? Is it to acquire wealth, to surround himself with the temporal comforts of this life, and thus merely realize the gratification of his sensual appetite? No, his object is, to leave the sphere of pigmean notions, to soar like the eagle free and independent in the fields of intelligence, to rise in the scale of being, to get acquainted with principles leading to a knowledge, power, glory and happiness of divine perfection, and thus secure an eternal inheritance for himself, his progenitors and his posterity in the celestial Kingdom of God. One of the most important principles taught by the Elders of this Church, is the gathering up to Zion in order to receive instructions at the fountain head, where you can drink out of the well of living water, where the revelations of God are given as a guide to His people, to prepare them for the glorious future where they shall move in more exalted spheres and act their parts in a grander drama, where the sun of immortality and celestial happiness will shine in increasing resplendence through the infinite progression of man's advancement and exaltation. Previous to your departure, you hesitated and asked yourselves—shall I leave my friends, my relations—shall I bid adieu to the parental roof that gave me shelter during my infantine years; dispose of my farm, my house, my possession and exchange the scenes of childhood, the place of my home for the land of the stranger. And while in a train of such reflections, many felt as bad as the young man to whom Jesus spoke, who said that he had kept all the commandments of God from his youth up, and asked what else he lacked; but when the command came forth "go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor;" it was too great a sacrifice, too severe a trial, and he went away sorrowfully. Such is the case also with many of the Saints, and many who want to be Saints. The question has often been ask-d of me, can I not stop here and be saved? There were others, who, being more enlightened and energetic, possessed altogether different feelings: the spirit had opened their understandings; their whole desire was to fulfill the law of God, and they exclaimed, "let me go to Zion—I will leave my home, my family, and my friends, and like Abraham of old, I will go to the land which God has appointed for the gathering of His people," and it was literally as the prophets had said, that they would gather out "one of a city and two of a family to Zion," from whence light, truth and intelligence should spread unto all nations; where His House should be established in the tops of the mountains and be exalted above the hills, and all nations should go up thereto. That the ships of Tarshish should bring them from afar, and that they should fly as doves to the windows, that they should come upon mules, dromedaries and swift beasts, upon litters, also with the lame, the halt and the blind, the woman with the child and the suckling together.

The spirit of God when burning in your bosoms, prompted you to continue your journey, and when people pronounced you deluded, and Joseph Smith an impostor, you remembered that Jesus was spoken of by the Jews as being possessed of the devil, as having cast out devils through Beelzebub, the prince of devils, and you experienced that, if a delusion, it was a very happy and consoling one. Inspired by the spirit of God and unmindful of the scorn and derision of your friends; unmindful of the powerful opposition of this benighted generation, you bade adieu to the shores of your fatherland; riding the billowy ocean, you took your wives and children across the mighty deep, and in the midst of a commotion of the elements you felt to rejoice, because you knew God to be at the helm; thus you hurried on, in order to get to Zion, you felt and knew you were right, although you scarcely comprehended why. On your arrival on a foreign shore amidst the chilling blasts of winterly winds, or the colder and more chilly and freezing breath of a beartless world, you still felt buoyed up and sustained by the same omniscient, all-powerful hand; your trust was still in the great I Am; you felt His comforting, cheering presence; you heard the cry of deceivers here, we were called impostors and every other approbrious name, but you would not believe it any more than in your own land. The same spirit operated upon you as a consoling refreshing and invigorating stimulus enabling you to surmount all the trials and difficulties which arose round you like the mountain waves of a tempestuous ocean. This spirit also revealed to you, that it was right to gather. In relation to the operation of the spirit upon the minds of those who have obeyed the Gospel, let me refer you to a circumstance that came under my observation. I was preaching in Liverpool some years ago, on the first principles only, and had not even mentioned the doctrine of gathering, when a sister who had recently been baptized, told me, that she had seen, in a dream, a number of Saints and myself among them, on board a ship at the docks ready to sail for America, and wished to know the interpretation of it, which I promised I would give at a future time. This was revealed to her through the simple operation of the spirit of God, even as was promised, by the apostles of Jesus Christ and the prophets before them, that, as God saith, "I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: And on my servants and on my hand-maidens I will pour out in those days of my spirit, and they shall prophecy."

This was the kind of feeling which animated those who rendered obedience to the Gospel; and it still operates upon those who covenant to serve the Lord and be one with His people. I know what your feelings are, when the spirit of God influences you, it leads you to seek to do the will of God.

You have striven and struggled and endured; you have fasted and prayed and persevered; you have exerted the energies of both body and mind to accomplish the will of God, and to save yourselves and families. The still small voice of the Lord operated upon your minds and told you to gather together, and while under the influence of that divine spirit you felt you could not rest without making the attempt, and thus companies from a hundred to five thousand at a time, have gone up to Zion. The spirit of the world is division, disunion, disharmony, disorder in religion, in politics, in everything else, while the Scriptures say, "if you are not one, you are none of mine," This spirit has not only operated upon one but upon the whole, not only individually but collectively, and this united, extended and almost universal operation has led, drawn and impelled the people together. Like the operations of light, air and heat, its influence has been felt everywhere and has operated alike upon all, and like the Great Luminary of the day, it has chased away the darkness, gloom and uncertainty from the human mind and wherever its genial rays penetrated, life, light, and intelligence have been the result, and as light makes itself manifest everywhere and the rays of the sun, with the moisture promote vegetation and cause all nature to bloom, so does the vivifying influence of the spirit of God, wherever felt and enjoyed, exhilerate, quicken, vivify, instruct and guide alike all who come under its influence, and as the sun not only enlightens, warms, and fructifies one plant or herb, but all creation, so the same spirit that enlightens one Saint, does the whole, and consequently leads them to the same thing—they are so many separate parts, yet one, and when united like the stones of Solomon's temple, each one finds his place under the direction of the great architect without confusion, the Mormon Church is emphatically E pluribus unum.

The world think us strangely deluded to leave our homes, to do and suffer as much as we do for this cause, and many who can conceive no higher acme than worldly emoluments, consider us to have some speculation in view. Some days ago, I was reading a novel, wherein an Elder was represented as trying to induce the people by fine words, alluring promises, and a variety of worldly inducements to gather to Zion. Why, the man who wrote such nonsense, knew as much of what he was writing about as a bull's foot about pictures Did you ever hear any Elder try to persuade you to emigrate to Utah by representing it as an El Dorado, by portraying the natural advantages of that place as those of a second Utopia, where, on your arrival, you would have nothing to do but to gather the sweet fruits of a chimerical paradise, instead of gaining your living by honest labor? No. Your answer would give the lie to this statement; you have obtained a knowledge for yourselves. Some gained this knowledge by the administration of angels; to some, it was revealed by the Spirit of God; to some, by dreams; to others, by visions; to some, by the power of Scriptural evidence and an array of truth, which they found impossible to resist. These are the influences which combined, have brought this people to obey the truth.

Thus, each individual being strong separately, they are as invulnerable as the adamantine when united. Mormonism is not that wishy-washy, milk-and-water accommodating thing that sectarian religion is, which can be received or rejected at pleasure. A Mormon's religion is the beginning, the middle and the end of all things, with him it is interwoven with his life, his existence in time and eternity, his faith is built on the rock of eternal ages, and, like the ancient disciples, he knows nothing else. The people at one time followed after Jesus in great numbers; they thought that he must be a wonderful man who could exert so much power; and they followed him, hoping to obtain some great gain. After he had fed five thousand people with five loaves and a few small fishes, they expected that He would give them all they required, and that they would be spared the trouble of working to obtain a livelihood. But when He said—"The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head"—they soon went back and walked no more with him; they found other business to attend to; in fact, they felt disappointed, and thought the speculation was not going to turn out so well as they had anticipated. And when they had all departed, then Jesus said to His disciples, "Will ye also go away?" Peter answered Him, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." The foregoing would be the individual reasons, and in them will be found the answer to the question, Why am I a Mormon? In view of these things, the question arises. What has gathered this people together in the midst of unparalleled persecutions which they have had to pass through, when all the powers of Church and State have been brought to bear upon them; when they have been mobbed, robbed, persecuted, and driven; when the pulpit and the press have rejoiced over the news, and the whole nation felt jubilant that the Mormons were destroyed as they supposed? The answer would be, that it is composed of so many strong, unyielding, invulnerable parts The individual experience of the separate parts when combined, has formed a mighty phalanx. And when oppressed, driven and scattered, mobbed, robbed and disfranchised, there was a spirit within us that others knew not of. That spirit led us again to unite, our object was the building up of the Kingdom of God; we knew that God had spoken, that His purposes would be accomplished, and that the puerile efforts of man could not frustrate the designs of Jehovah, and when persecuted in one place we fled to another; and, like bees who follow the Queen bee, wherever the Presidency and Apostles have gone, there the people have followed; and, notwithstanding their repeated mobbings and drivings, they still live, and will continue to live, and no power on this side of heaven can help it.

Sometimes you sing, "Whither shall we follow, follow, follow; all the way to Zion; we will follow Thee." It is feelings like these which lead you on; it is under the influence of such feelings that the feeble, the infirm and the aged have gone with hand-carts over 1200 miles; it was while such feelings prevailed in their bosoms, that the Spirit of God was their shield and buckler, and the dangers and difficulties vanished like the mist before the sun. When Jesus asked the disciples who He was, and Peter replied: "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God." He answered, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but My Father who is in Heaven; thou art Peter, and on this rock will I build My Church." On what rock? On Peter? No. Peter would have been a very poor rock to build a church upon, and so would any man. It was upon the Rock of Revelation that Jesus said He would build His Church, even direct communication from God to His Church. whereby it might always be led and guided in the right way, ever with a living spirit and Priesthood.

Some say they know us to be deceivers and impostors, and assert that mesmerism is the connecting link of the heterogenious beings, constituting the Church of Christ, that through the medium of mesmeric influence, our bodies and minds are kept in subjection; if this be the case, why do not those would-be wise men use mesmeric influence to control other religionists and politicians? You say you know that this is the Church and Kingdom of God, and I have heard thousands upon thousands testify the same thing. Why are the Mormons gathered together and form thus a picture of unequalled union, harmony and order, a living phalanx of a continually increasing power? It is because of the principle of direct communication with Heaven; they are built upon this rock, even the Rock of Revelation, and this principle became in them an intuitive knowledge, in relation to the things pertaining to an eternal salvation, and thus they know for themselves that this is the truth and not delusion. It is also by visions, by the ministring of angels, by dreams and by the Spirit of the Lord, that they know that the sacred records found by the Prophet Joseph Smith are true, and of Divine origin. This is the secret of our union; this is the reason why they have left the comfortable fireside of their homes; this is the reason why they have endured robbing, distranchisement, banishment exile and death; this is the reason why so many latterly have exposed their wives and children to the inclemency of the weather; to the sweeping rains; the drifting snow and the howling winds when journeying across the wilderness in order to be with the people of God, to reach their mountain home. They have received a knowledge for themselves, and that knowledge was a soothing balm in days of affliction; it was the secret spring of joy and happiness; it was the stimulus of new exertions, the shield against dangers and difficulties. Jesus said to the Samaritan woman at the well, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith unto thee, Give to me drink, thou wouldst have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water, which would be in thee a well of water, springing up into everlasting life." You have drunk of this well, it flows in your own bosoms, and opens up a communication between you and your God, as developed in the Scriptures.

Let me here speak of a simple principle; there are three that bear record on earth; the water, the spirit and the blood, and these three are one; and there are three that bear record in heaven; the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one. Thus, there are three in heaven and three on the earth. The Spirit of the Lord is one of the witnesses both in heaven and on earth. When a man is confirmed, he receives the witness of the Divine Spirit, and thus, if lived up to, a connecting link is established between man and God. This Spirit when cultivated, will germinate, grow, swell and blossom like a beautiful flower in you; it will always be your friend, your protector and your guide; it will enlighten your minds, enlarge your knowledge, capacitate you for the discharge of your duties; it will be your shield against the temptations of the adversary; it will always lift up your souls with satisfaction, contentment and energy, so that happiness and every other emanation of Divine principle will spring up in you as from a well of living water leading into everlasting life Therefore, no matter how disagreeable it may be to your feelings, no matter how much it may interfere with your worldly interests, always follow the call of that silent but true monitor, for those who are led by the Spirit of God, are the Sons of God. This Spirit guides and directs all the faithful everywhere; it guides and sustains the Authorities of the Church; it directs and instructs all Presidents and Elders who yield to its influence, and is an instructor and comforter to all the people, it agrees with nature, reason and common-sense; it is Scripturally and philosophically correct. I want to be so plain as to be understood, but it is veiled to them who do not comprehend; but you understand the principle of it, you know at least as much as the blind man did—"Whether this man be wicked or not, I do not know; but I do know, that inasmuch as I was blind, now I see." You now feel by the power of the Spirit, that that Divine element is productive of love and union, and, "By this all men shall know that ye are My disciples, if ye love one another, and the world hate you even as they hated Me before you, because you are Mine."

It is through the medium of the Priesthood that this Church has been sustained. We speak of our individual experience, how the Spirit of God has operated, and how it has placed us in the position we now occupy.

I have dwelt for some time on the simple, undivided operation of the Spirit of God, individually, and with the Church combined; let me now draw your attention to another principle which has always exerted an almost unbounded influence in the true church of God, wherever that church has existed in its purity, viz., a living Priesthood which is as necessary to sustain and give strength and power to the Church, as the body is to carry into execution the will and operations of the spirit, and as the spirit is not and cannot be perfect without the body, so the Church is not perfect without the Priesthood. I wish to show you another principle, viz., that there is order, and not confusion in the Kingdom of God, who has been pleased to appoint Prophets, Apostles, Pastors with Elders, Deacons and others, formerly and latterly, for the work of the Ministry, for the perfecting of the Saints and the edifying of the body of Christ, till we come to the fullness of the stature of a perfect man, as Jesus said; "You are My witnesses, as is also the Holy Ghost," so are the Elders of this Church when filled with the Spirit of God, and clothed with the power of their mission to overcome all opposition, every power and every influence.

A man knowing that he is chosen of God, set apart and ordained of Him to do His work, and realizing that he is inspired and taught by the Spirit of God, feels confident, unwavering in His cause, and like the Apostles of old, he speaks as one having authority, and not as the Scribes. I remember some years ago holding a discussion with some ministers in France, after meeting their puerile remarks for some time, I told them, that, although a stranger and alone in a foreign land, I was prepared to defend Mormonism against anything and everything they could bring up. Mr. Cleeve, a Methodist Clergyman, said, "Mr. Taylor, you are a bold man." I replied, "Sir, Truth makes a man bold." When a man has advanced principles that he knows to be true and invulnerable, he feels comfortable and easy, under all circumstances, bold and defiant to all opposition. No persons have ever been placed in more trying circumstances than the Elders in this Church, yet none are more bold, fearless and independent. Possessing the principles of eternal truth, and knowing that they are called of God as special messengers of the nations of the earth, they boldly defy all opposition that may be brought to bear against them.

Let us notice the position of Joseph Smith; in him we discover as striking an example of the wisdom and intelligence of God, as in any person or principle that can be adduced. Brought up a poor farmer's boy with very limited advantages of education, he nevertheless introduced a system of religion that was bold, energetic and commanding, and that struck at the root of every other religion, it overthrew existing theories, dogmas and creeds that had been framed by the united wisdom of the most talented, educated and erudite men of this and preceding generations. They were swept away by it like mist before the sunshine; Religionists, Politicians and Philosophers were baffled alike by the intelligence that flowed from him. It might with great propriety be said as formerly; "Whence hath this man this wisdom" The great secret was, that God had restored the Everlasting Gospel, associated with which was the everlasting or Melchisidec Priesthood, which Priesthood is the government of God in the heavens or on the earth, and whose privilege it is to receive communications from the heavens; Joseph Smith, therefore, being instructed of the Lord was made acquainted with correct doctrines, ordinances and principles; was taught how to build up, organize, regulate and control all the affairs connected with the Church and kingdom of God on the earth, whether it related to doctrines, ordinances, offices, organizations or governments, and he has presented a system of law, order and government that the combined wisdom and intelligence of the world cannot overturn. This intellectual, comprehensive system, came without ostentation or empty parade. Joseph Smith simply declared that he had a revelation from God; that the Heavens had been opened, and Holy Angels had appeared to him and others, revealing the fulness of the Everlasting Gospel. Some of the religionists sneered, others mocked, some reviled and persecuted, and so-called ministers of the Gospel, were foremost of the crowd; but having in it the elements of truth, and opening up and unfolding principles of strength and power, connected with the intelligences of Heaven, it rolled forth to the consternation and dismay of its opposers and persecutors. When I speak of Mormonism being incontrovertible, I speak advisedly. I know what I say. I have preached it in the principal cities of these United States and in several European nations; I have grappled with the talent and wisdom of this generation, and I know that the doctrines of Mormonism are invulnerable, and I am at the defiance, either of the Priests or the press to successfully controvert what I say. I well remember having had a conversation with a clergyman in Liverpool, England, who being defeated, asked a brother minister; "Why is it that these Mormons so easily oust us in every position that we take?" To which he replied; "I can account for it on no other principle than the following; I believe that a number of smart, shrewd Yankees have got together, and have united all their shrewdness, wisdom and intelligence, and thus formed the system of Mormonism, and it is so Scriptural that we cannot overturn it, but it is of course an imposture." If Mormonism is an imposture, why is it that these Englishmen who possess superior education and unite the intelligence of the Nation in their Colleges and Universities could not concoct a system that the Green Mountain Yankees could not controvert. This sounds very much like the language of the Pharasee to the blind man; "Give God the glory, we know this man is a sinner." The secret is, Joseph Smith's system is of God; theirs is of man. This man did not know the secret springs of action, nor the spirit which revealed this intelligence; and men generally reject those very principles from which we receive our intelligence. We have our Book of Mormon, our Book of Doctrine and Covenants; both containing doctrines and principles of which the world are wofully ignorant; we have also a living Priesthood, whereby we are preserved from error, instructed in the will of God, whereby hercsies are exposed and false spirits detected. The world say we are fools and fanatics. Never mind, gentlemen, we are quite willing to remain so; we covet neither your wisdom nor piety; we don't want them either in this world or in the next; for while you are seeking wisdom from ancient philosophy and man-made religion with its creeds, forms and dogmas, we are aspiring after divine intelligence; after a knowledge of our nature, origin and destiny; we desire to know our relation to the past, present and future; the organization of spirit, of matter, of body and spirit separate and united; of angels, spirits, men and devils, the philosophy of the earth and the heavens, of time and eternity.

We are aiming at a philosophy, that will unite us with our progenitors, seal blessings upon our posterity and celestialize the earth. It is through the medium of the Holy Priesthood, that these things will be accomplished; it leads, teaches, instructs, edifies, guides, admonishes protects; it spreads, grows, expands, it governs in this world and in all worlds; it ascends to the highest heaven and dives to the lowest hell; it comphehends all truth and revels in the intelligence of the Gods, and what little we have communicated, is for our temporary guidance to lead us to a higher, nobler and more exalted sphere. There is an Elias spoken of, that was to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers. Elias signifies a restorer, this restoration of all things has been spoken of by all the prophets, since the world was. These prophets held the Holy Priesthood, and being all guided by the same spirit, all testified of the same things, and all rejoiced in the time, when the earth would be delivered from the dominion of Satan, when anarchy, confusion, disease, death and the devil should be destroyed, and when the earth would resume its paradisaic glory, and Him whose right it is to rule, should possess it. Previous to this the Elias must come, a time of restoration; the hearts of the children must be turned to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children. Our fathers who are dead, through the Everlasting Priesthood, which officiates in time and in eternity, must operate for us, and we for them and their posterity, who are many of them our fathers, who have died without the Priesthood and Gospel. They preach the Gospel to the spirits in prison, as Jesus did, and we have to be baptized for them on earth. They officiate for us, and we for them; "they without us cannot be made perfect, nor we without them." Our Priesthood and Gospel reaches heaven and earth; past, present and future, time and eternity. If I have children, I feel like blessing them, as Abraham did, and our Gospel and Priesthood teaches us how. And who are this Priesthood? They are simply ordinary men, but taught and instructed of God. There is no honor devolving upon them, in consequence of what they do; they are simply operated upon. Joseph Smith claimed no wisdom of his own; he was an instrument in the hands of God, and was operated upon simply like a musical instrument in the hands of a skilful musician. He was obedient to the will of God and followed His direction and command. Much has been said about

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JAN. 31, 1857.

To Everybody.

LAST week we spoke plainly and freely of our financial position through publishing THE MORMON; we think it not amiss now, to call the attention of the elders everywhere to the advantages to be derived from the extension of its circulation. Though we must ever view with satisfaction an increased circulation and a consequent augmentation of our dollars, we should be indeed sorry if such held the first position in our minds. Our mission with THE MORMON has been to defend the interests of the Saints in general, to set before the world the true position of the inhabitants of Utah, to expose the motives of those who attack her institutions, and to oppose the folly and wickedness of those who would deny the hardy mountaineers their political rights. We have fearlessly set forth and defended the doctrines of the Church, and demonstrated their superior claims, on the moral and intellectual God-fearing portion of society, over those of the man-made doctrines of christendom. We have endeavored to impart instruction to the Saints upon daily duties, as individuals, and as members of the Kingdom of God, encouraging all to morality and the practise of everything that ennobles humanity. We have cheered the faithful toiling laborer with hope; we have imparted useful hints to the not-over ardent, and take some credit fo discouraging and frightening from our community any who might have had a penchant for loafing. How well we have discharged our duties in these particulars our readers can judge; we are, however, satisfied that our labors have not been in vain.

In addition to what we have been able to do in our editorial capacity, the columns of THE MORMON have been open to a host of elders who have by correspondence increased the interest of the Saints in each other; who, widely separated by space, have felt closely allied by the same cementing spirit that is destined to unite in One the Hosts of Heaven with the faithful and pure of the earth. The varied contributions on doctrine, history, and science have likewise had their influence in increasing the intelligence of the Saints. In addition to our summaries of what has been transpiring on the earth, we have been choice in our selections from exchanges which have, in general, been graced with the rich and refining effusions of Israel's poets and poetesses; withal, we think THE MORMON has played an important role during the short term of its existence. While penning these lines the thought forces itself upon our mind that no member of the Kingdom of God could righteously stand neutral, unmoved, and see all this light extinguished, this testimony, this instruction and entertainment withheld from the Saints and the world while his hand might have supplied the needful.

We wish the elders and all who have the priesthood to see that the Saints read THE MORMON. There are thousands of European Saints now living in the States who have only a very imperfect knowledge of the institutions of this country. If they mean to "act well their part" in the Kingdom of God they will yet require a thorough understanding of American institutions and American men, and we know of no means through which they can become more easy acquainted with both than by the newspaper. To ponder over huge volumes of history is an occupation to which only the few can devote their time, and by which only those who have had disciplined habits of reading can profit much; but all can find instruction with entertainment and imperceptibly realize that their store of facts—of men, manners, institutions and cotemporaneous history is on the increase by a regular perusal of the weekly newspaper. It is very well to be acquainted with the dimensions of Noah's ark, and not amiss to be able to tell how many Sampson slew with the ass's jaw; but we think it quite as advantageous to a man's reputation for common sense if he can tell the extent of Utah—his future home, whether it lies east or west, north or south of New York, something of its climate, the occupation of its inhabitants, their history, where they came from, how they came to go to such an uninviting spot, how they live, what is the trouble with their enemies, why the latter cannot speak a good word of Utah, and a thousand and one things that every Saint should know, not only to be able to render an answer to those who may ask, but that such facts may stand by them in an hour of trial. In fact no one can fully appreciate a standing in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints without being acquainted with its origin, and in some measure conversant with its history, with the men who have acted for and against it, where they are, what recompense they have had for faithfulness, or what measure for unfaithfulness; in brief, we cannot conceive how any person can feel otherwise than interested, and deeply interested, in picking up items of information—of the past and present. To the brethren who visit the Saints we say: See to this matter; see that the people committed to your charge are properly instructed, that they grow in wisdom and in the knowledge of the Truth, that they purchase THE MORMON if they can, and we doubt much if many cannot, and read it; if they cannot purchase it, make arrangements to see it, and above all things read it, and ponder over it. We give diversity of teaching, everything in its time and place, and looking at the Saints as intelligent beings, and not as children, we have not been nor do not intend to be stereotyped, and repeat every week the same things; when, therefore, any member of the Church fails to receive our paper we have labored one week for nothing, so far as their instruction and benefit is concerned, and that member is behind the others, less qualified to understand new moves, for the new has ever relation with what has preceded it, and is more or less the consequence of the past. Furthermore, our labors are expected to produce their fruits, and as certain as we labor we look for results. If the labor has not been received the results cannot flow, and disappointment and misunderstanding follows.

The Kingdom of God anciently was not received by many of the wise and the noble according to the flesh, yet the testimony of Christ was carried to the uttermost parts of the then known earth, and defended before the ignorant, the learned and the impious, by men in general educated by their own labors, and qualified as ambassadors by the Holy Ghost dwelling in them. To-day it is the same, and they who laudibly desire the honor that cometh from above must neither be slothful nor weary in well doing, in qualifying themselves for every good work. Utah is taking her position, and rightful influences must be brought to bear upon those who mean to do right; the struggle between truth and lies, light and darkness is at our doors; let, therefore, all who favor Zion spread abroad THE MORMON, remembering our motto, "IT IS BETTER TO REPRESENT OURSELVES THAN TO BE REPRESENTED BY OTHERS."

The Plains.

ON the assurance of a telegraphic despatch, we announced last week the arrival of the Salt Lake mail at Independence, but by correspondence we learn that it was only the conductor, Mr. Ferguson, that had arrived there on the 29th Dec.: the mails having been left at Marysville through a Mr. Marshall, by some process of law, attaching the mules for some affairs between him and Magraw—the proprietor and conductor. How long the mails were detained or what have become of them we know nothing, but this much we do know, that we have not received either letters or papers from Utah since the above announcement. We regret exceedingly that anything should have prevented the speedy delivery of this mail, as many, with ourself, are deeply interested in receiving definite intelligence of the true position of the late emigrants on the plains, and the circumstances attending the latter part of their journey. We have read of the sufferings of travellers and surveyors on the plains and in the western territories from the early fall of snow, piercing cold of an unusually severe winter, and are apprehensive that the latter portion of our emigration has not escaped. The accounts of the Mormon suffering on the plains, are written with such rejoicing and unmistakeable enmity to Mormonism that we entertain the hope that the calamity is much less than our enemies wish it. As the Saints are ever deeply interested in the well being of their brethren we shall, in the absence of Salt Lake advices, quote from an outsider:

Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.

INDEPENDENCE, Jan. 4, 1856.

The arrival of the Salt Lake mail here, on the 29th of December, I neglected to mention when I last wrote you. From the conductor, Mr. Ferguson, I have obtained a statement of the trip, which, considering the character of weather and amount of snow on the plains, was one requiring no little fortitude on the part of those in charge of the mail, to bring it (or any part of it) safely through. Accompanied by Mr. Briggs, and a few others, the conductor left Salt Lake on the 1st of November. A few miles from the city, at the canon of Wasack Range, they found snow to the depth of two or three, and even eight feet, through which they were compelled to travel for some distance, and, after much detention, reached Fort Laramie on Nov. 19. They desired an escort, but none being provided, they pushed on; at Cottonwood Spring met the outward-bound mail, under the charge of Jones, a little after which they encountered a snow-storm of much violence, impeding their progress, so much so that they were seven days in making eighty-five miles; they arrived at Fort Kearney December 11. While delaying on account of a storm at Kearney, a man in the employ of Mr. Dyer, the Sutler, was driven before the storm, while going from the store to his quarters, and doubtless perished, as he has not been seen since. Quite a number in and around the post have been injured by the extreme cold of the season. Accompanied by Lieut. Kelton, Q. M., and Dr. Page, of Fort Laramie, the mail party left Kearney and reached here without much interruption on last Monday. On their way in, near Bear River, they met the third hand-cart train of Mormons going west.

The fourth and fifth trains were met at the three crossings of Sweet Water, in a very different condition from those in advance. They were suffering beyond measure for the want of provisions and on account of the cold. They were very badly clothed, and in consequence of the hardships, many of them were dying; in one camp they buried fifteen in one day. The mode of burial, since they cannot dig the frozen ground, is to lay the bodies in heaps, pile over them willows and heaps of stones. Gov. Brigham Young, learning something of their condition, dispatched some men and provisions to their relief; but these were met by the mail party returning to the city again, having been turned back by the violence of the storms they encountered. What the poor creatures will do, or what will become of them, it is hard to tell. Under delusion, they have left their homes in foreign lands, and to satisfy a whim of the Governor, undertook a journey of thousands of miles, not half provisioned or fitted for a trip that, even in good weather is difficult enough, let alone at this inclement season of the year.

No local news of interest. Thermometer six degrees below zero on Saturday morning last. Z. M.

The spirit of the above is manifest to every one; of that, therefore, we take no notice; but while we think it very probable that numbers of the Saints have died on the plains, as by recent despatches, we are certain that others have, through being caught by an early winter, we think it quite as probable that the losses will turn out to be much less than such a gloomy account would warrant us to apprehend.

The mail conductor says he met the third company at Bear River, the fourth and fifth companies at the three crossings of the Sweet Water—the two latter in a very bad condition. Previous to meeting them, he says that he met the teams with provisions, clothing, &c., from G. S. L. City, returning, because of the violence of the storms they encountered, leaving it to be inferred by: "What the poor creatures will do, or what will become of them;" that the two last companies had been abandoned to their own impoverished resources. This may be true, but we don't believe it. In addition to the confidence we have in the perseverance, the bravery, the humanity of the Utonians, we have information that confirms our doubts in the mail conductor's or correspondent's conclusions.

The Western Standard, of San Francisco, Cal., publishes a letter from President Wilford Woodruff, of G. S. L. City, dated Nov. 5th, five days after this mail conductor left, in which he states that two men had arrived in the city from the third company, and that before they left, the assistance from Salt Lake City had arrived. Though we cannot dispute the assertion that the mail conductor met a company returning, we are confident that out of nearly two hundred and fifty teams sent out from the city with provisions, blankets, clothing, &c., some of them would fulfil their mission. There is, in our mind, on this no manner of doubt. The conductor says that the fourth and fifth companies were met at the crossings of the Sweet Water, and they were travelling west, which, being placed with the fact that the assistance had reached the third company, which was only some days in advance, there is not the slightest doubt that the emigrants would get assistance. Another thing should be borne in mind, that the last company, Capt. Hunt's, had fifty wagons. These, no doubt, had both extra provisions and clothing.

We are prepared to hear of deaths by the way; but of starvation from lack of food we don't believe it. Our opinion, which we have more than once expressed before in this paper, was and still is that the emigrants started too late; but we sincerely hope that when all is known things will be much better than some anticipate.

Florence Courier.

THE above is the name of a new weekly paper which has recently commenced in Florence, and published by James C. Mitchell, Esq., who we presume is editor and proprietor. It is a neat little sheet, and, for a frontier paper, well filled with useful articles on various topics associated with the rising progress of that infant country and the thriving city of Florence after which it is called. It has for its motto:

"WE WOULD RATHER BE IN THE RIGHT PLACE ON ROCK BOTTOM THAN HAVE THE CAPITOL OF THE TERRITORY."

This is certainly very significant, and has a special reference to the location of the city, which may emphatically be said to be "founded on a rock," as the Missouri river, in this place, runs over a rock bottom. It is also evidently designed as a fling at Omaha, a rival city some few miles below, where the capitol at present is located. As the Pacific Railroad goes through Florence city, and is located on this rock bottom, they feel that they possess all the local advantages, and wish everybody to understand that, inasmuch as their "city is founded on a rock, it cannot be moved."

The present number before us, No. 2, besides being well filled with good selected matter on the first page, gives a leader rather in the shape of a prospectus, defining its policy and views, which may be summed up briefly as follows:

"The Courier will be independent in all things, except in its adhesion to principle and truth," as also "in regard to men and matters political." It will also discuss freely "the acts and policy of our present and future national administration." It will be equally free in its praise or censure of the administration Territorial. "It will be an unyielding advocate of the removal of the capital and its re-location at a point further in the direction of the declining sun." The Platte Valley Route to the Western Ocean will be urged by the Courier as the one to be selected for the location of the Pacific Railroad. Besides all this, it states that "all the various branches of productive industry—agricultural, mechanical and manufacturing—will receive a share of our attention." The last which we shall quote we like as well as any. We do like to see a man have independence enough to say what he thinks: "In matters political and in regard to National and Territorial policy, we have no desire or occasion to consult anybody but ourself as to what we shall say; and we are not acquainted with anybody else whom we shall make it a point to please."

The above is followed by a large and interesting article on the Legislature; then follows another on the New Year, and another on "Our Railroad;" besides communications, &c. Then we have nearly two columns of advertisements. The third page contains a description of The Courier Ball, held at the Willet House at Christmas, which seems to have been a brilliant affair. The remainder of the paper is made up of advertisements; three or four columns of which are exclusively for the city of Florence—advertising stores of various kinds, hotels, a daily stage line, a bank, land and general agents, fruit and ornamental trees, select school, steam mills, and all the various trades and professions.

We mention the above, not only to do pleasure and justice to the enterprising and gentlemanly editor, with whom we have the pleasure of an acquaintance, James C. Mitchell, Esq., who is Secretary of the "Florence Land Company;" but also at the same time to show the go-a-head-i-tive-ness of our western men.

A little over two years ago, as we passed through it en route for New York, and Florence was merely a city in name, containing only some three or four houses. Now it has its mills, its hotels, its stores, its professional men, its artizans and mechanics, its bank, and its newspaper, with a railroad already surveyed and located. We selected it as the most eligible point of outfit for the Saints; we counseled their going that way; we are glad to find that we were not mistaken—and from various sources, we are happy to learn that our brethren have received much kindness from the citizens of Florence, and especially from James C. Mitchell, Esq., the editor of the Florence Courier. We heartily wish him success in his new enterprise. We have put the paper into our exchange list, and shall look with interest over its pages.

The Florence Courier is published every Thursday morning at Florence, Nebraska Territory, by James C. Mitchell. Office on State street, adjoining the Willet House. Terms—Two dollars per year in advance.

The War with China.

SINCE our last issue, detailed accounts of the bombardment of Canton have arrived. Sir Michael Seymour lays before the British Government a report of his proceedings with the Celestials, and his reasons for that course, and with apparent fairness. The Celestial reasons for taking the men off the lorcha have likewise been published. There is little interest in relating what this ship-of-war did and how that captain distinguished himself in the demolition of clay walls, &c.; the only thing that need be said is that Admiral Seymour seemed very desirous of sparing the inhabitants of Canton, while, at the same time, he was very determined to teach the authorities that he had the power, as well as the will, to make the forbidden entrance into the city. Having accomplished that much he considered that he had done enough till he received further orders from home. At the last advices he was thus resting on his oars and ready for self-defence. The English papers in the patronage or under the influence of that Government favor the steps of Sir Michael, and some of our city papers seem jubilant in the prospect of extending commerce, though it should be achieved by shedding of Chinese blood—a thing of little consequence in their estimation—as stout grown-up lads and lasses could be purchased at the ports for three and four dollars per head!! The English journals favorable to the outbreak of war are apparently exceedingly pleased with the opportunity of making a better bargain with China than that which terminated the last war. We have read the despatches from Sir Michael, from the English Consul, Parkes, from the Plenipotentiary, Sir John Bowring, and are forced to the conclusion that this last step of the British navy is bullyism. If the Chinese have not fulfilled their treaty the British should have made them do so on that score alone; but to take the refusal of the Viceroy Yeh to give up the men of the lorcha, when he had good grounds for detaining and examining them as pirates and smugglers, is mean and outrageous. The quarrel began in the defence of men (Chinese) sailing under the British flag, and the lorcha being owned by an Englishman. The Chinese authorities affirm that the register that protected the lorcha was obtained by fraud, to enable them to pursue their unlawful calling unchallenged: the English authorities say nothing in reply to the charge of fraud; but it leaks out that the term for which the register was granted had in reality expired some time before. If the register entitled the lorcha to British protection, the expired register could afford it none. The Chinese may be awkward mules to deal with; but if they don't choose to have "barbarians" come into their cities, nor the representatives of "barbarians" to live in the city of the Celestial Empire, that is there business; and the proceeding of the English Consul shows the pride and arrogance of superiority that had no business there. Had the case been reversed, China strong enough to whip the powers that are against her, there would have been a cry about right, right. It is just as we anticipated and said last week, when the telegraphic despatches were published—the Ambassadors wanted nothing else than a row to penetrate further into the Empire.

Nicaragua.

THE steamships James Adger that followed the disabled Tennessee to take the passengers, merchandize and recruits by the latter to San Juan del Norte, returned to this port on Saturday evening, and brings lengthy details of the fighting and incidents of war in Nicaragua. Brigadier-General Henningsen's report to President-General Walker of the circumstances attending his burning of Granada, the manner in which himself and company were besieged for nearly twenty days, in the Guadalupe Church, and their ultimate reunion with the army of filibusters set forth a picture of the horrors of Central American warfare. Gen. H. gives a seemingly plain statement of the whole affair, not forgetting to reflect great glory on the greater portion of the officers, and visiting with condemnation the disobedient. The substance of all is briefly: Henningsen's men in taking the valuables from Granada, previous to its destruction, discovered arms and ammunition unexpectedly, upon which they broke into cellars and caves and as unexpectedly discovered to their great joy, but greater hurt, abundance of wine and brandy. While drunk, disorderly and helpless, the enemy came upon them, made sad havoc, and drove them from the Church. After some days, the filibusters regained possession of their shelter and burned the city around. Cholera broke out in the Church and of 30 attacked, at one time, 20 succumbed. In the midst of troubles Henningsen shewed himself a brave and wise General. To overtures made to him by the allied generals to surrender he replied, that if they did not surrender in two hours, he should before six months hang them all as high as Haman. On the 11th Dec. Col. Walker, with a small company fought his way to Henningsen's beseiged camp in Granada: united their forces and cleared the way to the river side and got on board the steamer in the possession of Walker. Being then all united they started for Rivas, about nine miles from Virgin Bay, and as they advanced the allies vacated without much opposition.

Walker is reported to have at Rivas under his command 1200 men, well clothed, in good spirits, and has abundance of amunition and provisions, and at Punta Arenas there are about 300 men under Col. Longbridge. They are in excellent spirits and purpose marching before long, into Costa Rica—so say friends. The accounts from some who have returned are of a very opposite character, and report that desertions are numerous and frequent.

Com. Vanderbilt's representatives have with the assistance of the Costa Ricans taken possession of the steamboats on the transit route, so there will be war at home between the rival companies.

The Illinois arrived here on Wednesday from Aspinwall, bringing the Allied accounts of the Nicaraguan affairs. They represent Walker as hedged up in Rivas. Costa Rica had offered him terms of capitulation, which they expected he would accept. Walker's loss of the steamboats has put him in the straightest place he has yet occupied; from his difficulties there seems but little hope of escape—yet fillibusterism has been often down and got upon again. The last throw of the dice is near.

Judge Appleby.

As many of the Saints in the Eastern States no doubt have been looking for the Judge to visit them ere this, and not being acquainted with the reasons why he has not, we would say for their information, that since his return from Pennsylvania and Delaware, at the end of the year, he has visited the Saints on Long Island and Connecticut, and has been assisting in the office here, where he is at the present writing. He purposes leaving here on Saturday for his tour through the Eastern States, and will visit all the branches of the Church that his time and circumstances will permit.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE Corruption Investigating Committee seem bent on doing business. When they have a witness before them that will not answer, they immediately proceed to the House for authority to compel, and return fully armed for pains and penalties. The spirit they manifest indicates that they can see things worth ferreting out. Let them go deep. Simonton, of the Daily Times, is confined by order of Congress in the watch-room of the capitol—a not at all comfortable place. There are loud suspicions that he has good reasons for being silent, and self is not the smallest.

The Hon. John Appleton, of Maine, is to be "sole editor and proprietor" of the Washington Union after the 4th of March. Major Nicholson, the present occupant of the editorial chair, says: "Our retirement is voluntary and in pursuance of a resolution long since made."

"The National Kansas Committee" met at the Astor House on Friday and Saturday of last week, to hear the Secretary's report of past proceedings, and to adopt the necessary measures for the future. Ninety thousand dollars had been received since July last, of which eighty-one thousand had been expended in forwarding emigrants and furnishing supplies to needy settlers of the "Free-soil" faith.

Mr. Buchanan reached Washington on Tuesday, to look about, hear and reflect for a few days. He will, no doubt, learn something there. No lack of worshippers. Mr. Preston S. Brooks, of South Carolina, died suddenly there the same day. He had been unwell for a few days only, and was apparently recovering rapidly, but was suddenly seized with the croup, and in ten minutes ceased to breathe. Mr. Brooks' relation with Mr. Sumner will, no doubt, serve for nigger-religious-bancombe a few months. Uncertain is human life. He was young, and it may be said "hearty and hale," as his previous indisposition was slight.

Last week we published a short article from a city cotemporary on the frequency of robberies and murders in England, which, to that writer, appeared inexplicable, without taking into account the extreme difference of situation of the first or high class and third or low class into which English society was divided. Close upon this our city papers abound with accounts of daring highway robberies that can't be outdone if even they can be matched in London. So frequent have these become of late that even Horace, who has long got credit for adding to his philosophical theories that of non-resistance, comes out in favor of "the righteous immolation of one or two" of the "garroters," and hints strongly that the people of New York may shortly imitate the inhabitants of San Francisco, and treat them to hemp over a lamp-post—at the same time he gives a hint to the authorities that it may not, in such moments of excitement and exasperation, be too well for them. No person is safe in New York after the stores are closed, and those who must or will be out are arming for self-defense. Revolvers and knives are in great demand.

The late severe snow storm has caused great damage at sea, and the huge masses of ice along our coast has been perilous to incoming vessels. The Black Warrior, on her last trip from Havana to this port, suffered severely. She arrived here on Monday morning, without masts; bulwarks and everything moveable on the deck having been washed away. In the midst of the severe gale with which she had to contend, her fuel gave out, and planks, berths, dining-tables, and other furniture had to be used to keep up the steam. We are extremely sorry to learn by this arrival, there is rather sombre news of the health of Dr. Kane; little hopes are entertained of his recovery. The steamship Marion, in her outward run from this port to Charleston, suffered excessively likewise from the snow storm. She had to lay to off Cape Hatteras for twenty-six hours. Everything on deck was covered with ice to the depth of six or seven inches. Four horses on deck were frozen to death. Reports come in from all directions along the sea coast of vessels being seen in distress, wrecks, and entire losses. A European steamer is reported ashore, or stuck in the ice, near Sanscoty Head, Nantucket.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

THE news from the old world are somewhat varied and interesting. In addition to China, of which we speak elsewhere. The Prusso-Swiss war is reported as touching an arrangement without measuring arms. At our last writing on the difficulty it was known that Napoleon had sent a messenger to the Swiss Federal Council, but his message had not got to the public. The last news brings the report that the Emperor, urged by the English government, have proposed to the Federal Council to release the prisoners at their request, and, these governments promise to influence the King of Prussian to renounce in return all pretensions to Neufchatel; but should he not accept their recommendations after the Council has thus liberated the prisoners, they wont let him march his army on Switzerland. The Swiss were willing to accede to such an honorable termination of the difficulty, but from Frederick William nothing had been heard. Napoleon's saucy note to the Federal Council is regarded as his most damaging blunder.

The Conference of Paris closed on the 6th inst., having signed a protocol which is expected to terminate all the difficulties in fulfillment of the treaty of peace of March last. Russia cedes Bolgrad and Tabak to Moldavia, and receives the town of Komrat, on the right bank of the river Yalpuck, with a territory of 300 square verst. The Isle of Serpents is decided as belonging to the mouths of the Danube, and goes with them. The new boundaries shall be fixed, and the Austrian troops and British fleet shall have evacuated Turkish territory by the 30th of March next. Immediately thereafter the Conference will reassemble at Paris, to ratify these proceedings.

Mr. Charles Morret, an American gentleman, patentee of the vulcanized India-rubber, was shot by a soldier of the 88th regiment on guard, at the debtor's prison rue de Clichy, Paris, on the 30th Decr. Mr. M. was standing with his hands in his pockets at one of the windows of the prison, which is public to all the inmates. It appears that the soldier acted under an entire misconception of his duty. He remembered that when on guard in criminal prisons he had been ordered to fire upon any prisoner who put his head out of the window and refused to retire when warned to do so, and he most unfortunately fancied that these orders were in force at Clichy. The debtor was to have been released the following day.

The death of Mr. Joseph Brotherton, M. P. for Salford, Manchester, is reported by last mail. He was in conversation with friends in an omnibus when he took suddenly ill, and before he could be taken out, life was extinct. He was one of the earliest members of the Corn Law League, and a consistent, ever-diligent, radical member of the House of Commons. His death will be much deplored by the reformers of England.

By telegraph via Trieste news had been received in England of a great battle near Bayuk, between the Russians and Circassians. The former retreated, with a loss of nearly 2000 men and several guns, the attack being made by a Circassian corps of 10,000 strong.

On the evening of the 3d inst. the Archbishop of Paris was assassinated by a discharged priest, named Verges, of the diocese of Meaux. The Archbishop was entering, in procession, into the church of St. Etienne du Mont, when the assassin, in plain clothes, approached him, lifted aside the prelate's cape, and plunged a knife into his heart, exclaiming, "Down with the Goddess!" an expression which the murderer afterwards explained to refer to the doctrine of the immaculate conception. The Archbishop fell to the pavement, and, faintly muttering, "Ah malheureux!" expired. It seems from his examination that, as he had been considered unsound in doctrine, the Archbishop had hindered his preferment some considerable time before. It is very probable that he will be considered as being somewhat insane. The funeral of the murdered Archbishop took place on the 10th inst. in the cathedral of Notre Dame, with great pomp, and amidst throngs of people. The trial of the assassin is expected to take place about the 25th of the present month.

A hurricane was experienced at Malta on the 4th inst., during which some ships sunk and 300 boats were dashed to pieces against the quays.

The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia is expected to visit Paris shortly. He is now in Berlin.

A Looking Glass.

In which to examine ourselves, to see whether we be in the faith.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Sir: I find in my travels in the United States, many who profess to be brethren, or members of the church of the Saints. Among these there are a few who appear to me to deceive themselves, and think they are in the faith when they are not.

If we enquire of a man whether he is in the faith, he will say, O yes, I am firm in the faith of "Mormonism." I cannot consistently be any thing else. I can see as clear as the noonday sun, that the doctrine is scriptural, and that other modern systems are inconsistent with themselves, with each other and with the Bible. Now this same man, who considers himself thus firm in the faith, being a man of means, will not lift a finger in the cause which he professes to believe. Or if he does, it is in a small way, and but very seldom—it is also done grudgingly—and in many cases because somebody urged, or teased him into the measure. He does nothing willingly or voluntarily, except, perhaps the customary hospitality, of lodging and of feeding the Elders.

When it comes to clothing an Elder, or bearing his travelling expenses, or assisting to support his family, it is out of the question, the man never dreams of such a thing.

When tithing or donations are called for, or when he is required to sell out and gather with the saints, he never makes a move. In short, he never thinks of co-operating with the Priesthood and Kingdom of God.

If he is questioned to the point, it will be found that he does not exactly believe in the gathering, or in tithing, or in some other peculiarities of the faith.

Well, Brother, what is the peculiar system which you do believe? Or what is "Mormonism, as embraced by you?

Why! Sir, I believe in the first principles,—the Bible doctrines of faith, repentance, baptism for remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, &c. I also believe in praying, going to meeting, singing, preaching, &c. and in living a moral life. But all this has very little to do with money, or with gathering to some particular place, a co-operating with the body of the saints in temporal affairs. If I sing and pray on, I shall inherit the Kingdom of God at last.

Now it appears to me that such an one is deceiving himself, and that, in reality, he is not in the faith at all.

Let us look at this kind of faith in the mirror of another age and see what it will amount to. Noah, for instance, was a prophet, a preacher of righteousness. He, of course, taught first principles, as all God's messengers do. He required repentance, and the fruits of righteousness. He, no doubt, required the converts to obey the ordinances of God—to live morally, go to meeting, sing, pray, preach &c. But he also foretold the destruction of the wicked, and the way of escape, or the means of temporal salvation for the righteous.

His followers must, therefore, not only believe and repent, and obey the ordinances, and live moral lives, and attend church, and pray, but they must close their business, gather up their means, withdraw from the fellowship of the world, and cease to intermarry with them, if they would save their children.

They must actually remove to the vicinity of the Ark with all their means, and there be dictated by the authority of Noah, his agents and assistants, so as to co-operate with others in the same interests, in all their means and labors. Thus an ark could be prepared, with all its water, provisions, &c. for man and beast, and fowl and creeping thing. They must, perhaps produce food to support the hands while they labored on the ark, or they must burn coal, or work in the smith's shop, to make and repair the tools, or to manufacture the nails, pins, and spikes; or they must make a road to the forest, or assist in felling trees and hewing and transporting timbers, or sawing plank; or perhaps it would fall to their lot to work on the body of the ark, inside or out; or in planing and fitting flooring, or decking, or partition ceilings, or stalls for animals, or storage rooms. Or they might perhaps work in the cooper's shop in preparing water casks, or in the meadows in cutting hay for the animals, or in gathering it and storing it away in the ark; or in drying meats and fruits, and gathering grains and other provisions. Or it is possible they might be appointed to travel and preach, and warn the world; or to select and purchase cattle or horses, sheep or swine, male and female, for the preservation of the best breeds of these animals. And finally they must put themselves and their families on board, with all the necessaries of life. And if they had any gold or silver or precious jewels left after all these outlays, they must, if they would preserve them, bring them on board, and treasure them up in the ark. Thus it is evident that they must be wholly dictated to by the leaders or prophets, in their labors, and in all their temporal affairs and interests.

Now let us suppose, in the days of Noah some converts who received the first principles of Noah's preaching, who believed and repented and lived moral lives, and obeyed the ordinances; and who attended church, sung, prayed, preached, commented on the old prophecies of Enoch and Seth, &c.

In process of time Noah, being too busy with the ark to go himself, sends out missionaries to these pious branches of the Church, or professed Noahites, to instruct them in their duty, and to enquire if they were firm in the faith of Noahism. O yes, says every one of them, we are firm Noahites. Well, then, says the messenger, God requires you to sell your possessions and gather up your means, and emigrate to the vicinity of the ark, and devote your money, your goods, your time, and your entire interests in furthering the Cause of the Ark, &c. But, as this will take some little time, you are invited in the mean time to furnish what ready means you can consistently spare, in pushing forward the great work of temporal salvation; that we, through faithfulness, may be heirs of the world when it is cleansed from the wicked by water.

O, say the professed Noahites, then it is our money and goods, and labors that you are after, is it? You wish to control our temporal interests!—Well, Sir, you can go home again and inform Mr. Noah, that it is only in spiritual things, or in matters of religion that we are willing to be dictated. We profess to be able to manage our own affairs, and no man shall dictate our financial matters nor teach us where to emigrate, or when or where to go or come. "We are individual sovereigns," and no man shall rule over us. Not but what we are firm believers in Noahism. That is, we believe in the first principles just as he has laid them down; we believe in faith, repentance and obedience to the ordinances. We also believe in a moral life, and in going to church, singing, praying, preaching, &c. but nothing more.

But still, lest you might consider us indifferent or unfriendly, we will treat you with hospitality. But as to clothing, traveling expenses, and aid for your families while you are round warning the world, or teaching us, you must run in debt for it, or do without it, or get it where you can; we have no concern in that matter. But—stop a moment—let me see—here is a dollar for you; we wish to be liberal—and finally, come to take second thought, we will donate a few dimes to the building of the ark; but you must consider it a mere charity on our part, and thank and bless us for it. We, of course, have no personal interest in the matter, but we wish to be charitable to our brethren. O!—By the bye, we wish you to stay till to-morrow; a wedding comes off.—Our daughter is going to be married to a rich gentleman; he is not exactly a Noahite, but he is a very fine man, a real gentleman; he thinks every thing of our daughter and will make a most excellent husband. Besides, this is the last single daughter we have. The others have all "married well," and are very well situated in life, although none of them exactly believe Noahism, but they come to meeting once in a while just to please us,—in short they are very friendly.

The messenger sees how it is, stays to the wedding, pities all parties, but cannot enlighten them. He finally blesses them for their hospitality and charity, returns to Noah to report progress.

Now query:—What would Noah say of these Noahites?

Why! he would doubtless say: Poor blind souls, they are to be pitied. They think they are Noahites, but alas, they deceive themselves. We will thank and bless them for their little kindnesses and charities, and will struggle on as well as we can in our duties of building the ark and warning the world.

These professed Noahites have no real faith: they are not, in fact, Noahites at all. They are not fit for the Kingdom of God, and to be joint heirs with us to a new world after the flood. They must, therefore, with all their prayers, religion, morality and charity, perish with the disobedient and miss salvation in the Kingdom of God.

At length the ark is finished, furnished and peopled. The obedient sail off in triumph over the fragments of a ruined world, and finally become heirs of a whole earth, when it is cleansed by water.

The professed Noahites lose their lives and all their property. Their sons and daughters, mixed up with the world, although they "married well," raised up children and heaped up property to perish with them in the flood.

"And so," said Jesus, "shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man."

"Mormonism" has come forth, not only to call people to believe in Jesus Christ, repent, live a moral life, obey the ordinances of God, go to church, sing, pray and preach; but it has come forth to prepare the way for the coming of the Son of Man. It has come to gather the Saints and build up the kingdom of God as a strong-hold, or refuge, in the day when the wicked are overthrown. If a person has any interest at all in the Kingdom of God, all his interests are in it. He cannot consistently have any interests outside of it.

In short, if a man believes "Mormonism" at all, he must believe, not only in faith, repentance and baptism, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and morality, prayer and singing; but in the utter overthrow of the present political, religious, moral and social institutions, and the building up of the Kingdom of God, and its righteousness in their stead, to stand for ever. Therefore he can have no interests, motives or affections aside from the same.

Such a man, as soon as he sees the light of the Kingdom, will begin, with all his might, mind and strength to shape his affairs, and to place himself, his family, his property, his labors, and all his interests, in a situation to be controlled and properly directed by the Lord and his servants, in a way to co-operate with others who are interested in the same joint interests.

He will, in the mean time, if a man of means, in all wisdom and prudence, assist the Elders in their travels and missions, and bear their expenses and burthens. He will tithe himself, and also donate liberally from time to time, while he is getting ready to gather with the saints. He will say to his son or daughter, do not marry out of the Church, and raise up children to perish with Great Babylon, for all corrupt institutions are about to be overthrown.

He will, in short, to use a figure,

Spend his treasures and his labors purely to build and provision the Ark and warn the world: and then will get into it himself with his family and all his remaining treasures. And thus he will lay the foundation of permanent riches, and become a joint heir with the Saints in the inheritance of a renovated world, when the wicked are cleared out of it by the judgments of the Almighty.

Yours &c. P. P. PRATT.

FOR THE MORMON.

Pride.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

WHETHER we confine ourselves to the limited range of our operations, or take an extensive view of humanity at large, we find that Pride is more or less showing its JANUS face, that is to say, it presents itself either in the color of a genuine, ennobling stimulus, or as the emblem and personification of self-conceit and foolishness.

True and honest Pride is originating in a sense discerning to a certain extent, the intellectual, moral, as well as material relations to that sublime INTELLIGENCE, that governs the Universe, and unfolds unto us, in a most emphatic manner, the inexhaustible stores of its vast creation. It is true Pride which opens the contemplative vein of man, and raises his thoughts from the trivial scale of common place topics, to the sublime works of Nature, upon which it looks, as the grand arena, where the most refractory matter becomes pliant and ductile under the forming hands of the great I AM. It causes man to enter the most barren and unpromising fields of inquiry, and, by dispelling obscurities which appeared impenetrable, and removing obstacles which seemed to be unsurmountable, to convert them into rich and inexhaustible springs of knowledge, power and happiness. True Pride caused Herschel, Arago and others, to examine the glittering train of celestial scenery; to trace the course of the thousands of luminaries, when shining forth in successive splendor, and kindling the whole firmament into the most beautiful glow. It is true Pride which prompts the philosopher's inquiring mind to investigate the process of water being moulded into hail or consolidated into ice, endeavoring thus to lift the lucid veil of Nature. True Pride causes man to visit and explore the tropics, where great heat and moisture combine their influence, in order to exhibit that magnitude, exuberance and splendor which is so prodigious and amazing to the eye of Europeans; where trees of gigantic dimensions grow, crowned with differently tinted leaves and blossoms of the most brilliant dyes, each shooting upwards to a great height, as if striving to escape from the embrace of others, by which it is surrounded; where the parasitical vine performs the friendly office of clothing the parching soil with the unfading foliage of its graceful tufts, and spicy groves breathe a charming wind of sweets. When possessed of true Pride, we endeavor to advance in the scale of being, by improving our mind and refining our taste, so that we may appreciate and relish the beauty of noble sentiments and compositions, and avoid carefully every thing that might tend to unhinge our thinking faculties and disturb our intellectual economy.

False Pride is the over-estimation of certain mental, physical and material gifts or advantages, if such they are, with an outward show of overbearing haughtiness, which is originating in a soul full of selfishness, self conceit and narrow-mindedness. False Pride, unmindful of the intelligence, virtue and acquirements of others, is continually, and, with the greatest self-complacency, looking in the mirror of its own littleness, and only basking itself in the feeble light of its foolishness. Those persons are generally overbearing towards their fellow-beings, whose minds are as barren as the desert, so that they cannot see their own weaknesses and incapacities; they generally occupy the most trivial place in the scale of creation, having neither the intellect nor the energy, to acquire a prominent place in the museum of mental excellence. Nothing is so ridiculous as to see people of quite inferior mental and physical advantages, who are merely by favorable circumstances, placed in a temporary prominent position, claim that tribute of admiration, which is only due to true merit. Let me ask here, has any person a right to be possessed of false Pride, and be overbearing towards his fellow-beings? No. Supposing a man has, by fortune or birth, become rich, or received titles or rank, has he a reason or cause whatever to be proud? Certainly not. Because it was not through his own merits, but merely through favorable circumstances, that he came in possession of those material advantages. Further, has a man, however endowed he may be with natural gifts, a reason or cause to boast of those blessings, and sneer or despise those of inferior capacities? Certainly not. Because he received those talents not through his own exertions, but from God, in order to make good use of them, so as to benefit himself and his fellow-beings. And on the other hand, in relation to a person of limited capacities; it was not his fault, that he was not more richly endowed, but it was owing to the wisdom of that Supreme Being, who has introduced endless gradations in the physical and mental creation. False Pride tends to alienate man from his fellow-beings, to dissolve the ties of friendship and consanguinity, and to destroy social feelings. Children, when favored by fortune, are often forgetful of their filial duties, because they are ashamed of their parents being poor and destitute brothers, when in high positions, despise often their brothers, because they have not been so successful in the struggle of life, and move perhaps in an humbler sphere; friends are often forgotten by friends, when surrounded by the luxuries of Mammon, or the power of influence. Society is divided in Castes, because the nobleman, from false Pride, does not deign to associate with the commoner; and the rich and the powerful shun as much the intercourse with the poor and the destitute as the Brahmin does that of the Pariah, for fear he and his family might get contaminated.

False Pride is like the canker-worm corroding the intellectual beauty of man, leading him beyond the bounds of common-sense and reason; it is that treacherous friend who makes man appear ridiculous and contemptible in the eyes of every person of honesty and sound judgment; it is that pernicious principle which causes man to look upon himself as a beau ideal of virtue and intelligence, and rejecting every axiom of truth emanating from any other source but his dear own self, it implies an intellectual and moral stagnation, a standing still in the scale of being, and is thus very fatal in its consequences.

History illustrates emphatically, by some faithfully recorded examples, the absurdity of false Pride. XERXES, the Persian despot, when waging war with the brave and noble Spartans, in his puny Pride, ordered the ferocious waves of the sea to be lashed with iron chains, on account of their disobedience to his will. The emperor PAUL of Russia, when on a tour through his vast dominions, ordered the dignitaries of his empire, and even the ambassadors of foreign powers who came to meet him, to get out of their carriages and bend down before him in the humble attitude of contrite subjects. The RAJPOOT, a certain caste in the East Indies, will have no intercourse whatever with the SHUDRA and PARIAH, nor even will he touch them or eat food they have cooked, for fear of getting polluted. Pride caused the rulers of Egypt to divide the people into four classes, viz., the priests, the military class, the artificers and the husbandmen, whose rank and office were hereditary and unchangeable. The Romans were divided in Patricians and Plebeians. And all these classes avoided, from false Pride, each others' society as much as possible, one caste thinking itself better, nobler and purer than the other, so that persons of inferior rank or class were not even permitted to sit at the same table with the nobility, for fear their escutcheon and birth-purity might become polluted. The same foolish notions of false Pride prevail to a great extent among the aristocracy of the present day. When the celebrated countess Rossi, the former Miss Sontag, made her first debut in a select circle of the Viennese nobility, a certain lady remarked with hauteur to her neighbor, regarding the talented artiste, "elle n' est pas nee" (she is of no family), and it took some time before the genius of the countess Rossi could remove the barrier of supposed birth-purity.

When will man listen to Nature's silent but emphatic eloquence, and thus learn to understand his position? How inconsistent, how absurd, to be flushed with false Pride, when surrounded with the pleasing but vain images of worldly charms, and to despise those to whom Fortune has shown itself in less graceful in less agreeable forms!—How often do we not hear, that those, who on account of their talent, genius, prepossessing manners and physical advantages, were the glittering meteors of society, have suddenly been snatched by the icy, clammy hand of death and thus paid the tribute of their mortality! When those fashionable exquisites, the lions of the day, who spent their time in the intoxicating revelries of gorgeous banquet halls, could rise from the silent mansions of the dead, they would lift their bony, clattering hands, and point to their ghastly apparitions as haggard skeletons, and opening their stiffened jaws, they would say with a hoarse, sepulchral voice, "Vain mortals; these are the miserable remnants of our former selves; as brilliant and beautiful as the stars of our earthly career have shone, they are now extinguished; instead of reposing on the downy couches of splendid boudoirs, partaking of the luxuries of life, we are now confined to the solitary recesses of the grave, as rich meals for the worms. Of what use are to us now our former riches, titles, and names? Where are now the graceful and elegant forms of our former bodies? Crumbling into dust, we appear now to you in frightful deformities, and those who did fain seek our company, recoil now in horror. Beware, then, of vanity, of false Pride, and know that everything proves most indisputably the nothingness and perishableness of created things, and that only the beauty and nobility of the soul will shine for ever and ever."

May, then, the Saints always have that Pride, that self-esteem, which shows that they are sons and daughters of the Most High; that they are engaged in a work of eternal progression; may they possess that Pride which teaches them to hold a calm and beneficial intercourse with Heaven, in order to learn from its lectures the great lesson to be wise, noble, and virtuous; to moderate their worldly expectations; to stand disengaged from every undue attachment; to overcome the delusive allurements of wealth and worldly honors, because they are only gaudy tinsels and empty shadows of a perishing world.

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22, 1857.

SENATE.

THE Senate resumed the consideration of the Submarine Telegraph Bill, which after a lengthy discussion was passed by yeas 29, nays 18.

The House bill to "enforce the attendance of witnesses, &c.," was then received, and by unanimous consent referred to the Judiciary Committee, who forthwith called a meeting, and in the course of five minutes reported it without amendment, and asked its immediate consideration.

Mr. Wilson objected, when the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The pending question was on the motion to reconsider the vote by which was passed the resolution directing the Sergeant at Arms to keep Mr. Simonton in close confinement and to lay that motion on the table, decided in the affirmative, by 116 against 77.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill reported from the Select Committee, more effectually to enforce the attendance of witnesses on the summons of either house of Congress, and compel them to give testimony.

Mr. Davis, of Md., from the Select Committee, reported a substitute providing additional pains and penalties to those now authorized. He explained it contemplated definite and efficient punishment. No witness was to be allowed hereafter to wilfully refuse to give testimony or produce any paper, and if he do so he shall be liable to indictment for misdemeanor, and on conviction shall pay a fine of not more than a thousand nor less than a hundred dollars, and be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than twelve nor less than one month. The witness was to be protected from criminal prosecution for any testimony he may give before Congressional Committees, but not relieved from prosecution for perjury. Mr. Davis then called on the House to relieve the committee from the difficulties which stand at the threshhold of their investigation.

Mr. Milson, of Vt., wished to substitute imprisonment in jail instead of the penitentiary, as the latter was used only for felonious offences.

To this the select committee agreed.

The bill passed by yeas 103, nays 12.

The House then passed the bill to establish the office of Surveyor General in Nebraska, and for other purposes. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 23.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the House bill, the more effectually to secure the attendance of witnesses summoned by either House, and compel them to disclose testimony. A very lengthy debate ensued.

The bill was passed—yeas, 46; nays, Messrs. Hall, Pugh, and Wilson. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

In the House the private calendar was taken up.

The House passed twenty-two private bills. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 24.

Mr. Wilson presented the credentials of Mr. Sumner, Senator from Massachusetts for six years from the 4th of March next.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of bills relative to the District of Columbia.

Mr. Fessenden presented the credentials of Amos Nourse, of Maine, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Hamlin. Mr. Nourse then appeared and was qualified.

The Senate then passed sundry private bills of no general interest. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Wakeman presented a petition from many merchants of New York, asking the importation of sugar free of duty.

Mr. Kelsey, of New York, said he understood Mr. Chester had been brought to the city, and desired to be examined before the Select Committee.

The Sergeant-at-Arms having produced Mr. Chester before the bar of the House, pursuant to order, Mr. Kelsey offered a resolution that the Speaker propound to him the questions: "What excuse have you to offer for not appearing before the Select Committee in obedience to their summons on the 14th instant?" and "Are you now ready to appear and answer such proper questions as may be put to you by the said Committee?"

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Letcher moved that witness be required to write out his answers, and to qualify them under oath, which, after considerable discussion, was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms then retired with his prisoner, and private bills were considered till the adjournment. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 26.

Mr. Wilson gave notice of the introduction of a bill to secure the actual settlers the alternate sections of lands reserved in grants to States for railroad purposes.

The Senate discussed the bill establishing a naval depot at Brunswick, Georgia. After a debate, it passed.

On motion of Mr. Seward, it was resolved that the Secretary of War be required to direct topographical engineers to inquire and report whether public interests will be promoted by a survey of the Niagara River, or any part of the same. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Chester having been brought up to the bar by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker propounded to him the questions heretofore ordered to be put, namely: Why he did not appear before the Select Committee in pursuance of the summons of the 14th inst., and whether he was now ready to answer such proper questions as may be put by the Committee.

Mr. Chester's answers under oath were read. His plea for non-appearance was urgent private business at home; and when that was finished, the storm prevented travelling, or he should have returned without the Sergeant-at-Arms. To the second inquiry he was now ready and would answer. These answers being entirely satisfactory, Mr. Chester was discharged from arrest.

Thursday and Saturday were set apart for the consideration of business relative to the Territories, as two former days specified for that purpose were absorbed by questions of privilege.

The House passed the bill to enable property, to a considerable amount, belonging to an emancipated slave, who died intestate, to descend to his slave wife and children, their owners being willing to set them free. The reason for this act is a belief that the property, under the laws of the District of Columbia, rests in the United States without such legislation. Adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 27.

Mr. Wilson presented the petition of the Committee of the Humane Society of Massachusetts, asking Congress to grant $20,000 for establishing and supporting life boat and mortar stations on the coast of that State.

Mr. Wilson said that this society was the oldest in the country. They have sixty life boats, five mortar stations, and several buildings for the safety of shipwrecked seamen.

Mr. Brodhead, of Pa., presented the memorial of Horatio Hubbell, of Pennsylvania, showing that in 1849, in conjunction with Col. John B. Sherburne, he caused to be presented to Congress a paper showing how a submarine telegraph might be consummated and where it might be carried through. He now prays that nothing may be done unless his rights as projector be fully secured, by his being made a member or director of the company. As the subject has passed from the Senate, the memorial was laid on the table.

The Indian Appropriation Bill was taken up. There was a debate, and various amendments made to it. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported an amended tariff bill perfecting the former one, so far as a majority of the committee are concerned. He stated that it reduces the annual revenue fourteen millions of dollars.

The House discussed the bill giving to each branch of Congress the entire control of its contingent fund, without the revision of the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The consideration of the bill was postponed till to-morrow.

The Senate Submarine Telegraph Bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union on the Tariff bill.

Mr. Maxwell, of Fla., defended the positions of the President in his message, and vindicated the principles of the democratic party.

A recess was then taken till 7 o'clock, the evening session being intended for purposes of debate only.

SENATE. Jan. 28.

On motion of Mr. Wilson, it was resolved that the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of sending a Commissioner to the islands of the East India Archipelago, with power to investigate the claims to sovereignty which the government of the Netherlands asserts to possess over most of these islands, and of forming treaties with such independent States and tribes as may be found therein of sufficient power and importance to render such treaties necessary.

Mr. Douglas reported a bill establishing judicial and land districts in the Gadsden purchase. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House merely met and adjourned, owing to the death of the Hon. Preston S. Brooks.

Discourse by Prest. John Taylor.

Concluded from First Page.

Joseph Smith. I was personally acquainted with him for years; I have been with him in public and in private, in prosperity and adversity, at liberty and in prison. I was with him living and with him when he died, and I testify that he lived and died a man of God. I know that he was a Prophet of the Most High God, and spoke as he was moved by the Holy Ghost; for I have seen his prophesies fulfilled and the power of God manifested through him.

The necessity of the Priesthood and its wisdom is established in the organization of this Church, with its Presidency, Twelve Apostles, Seventies, Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons; its Bishops with their courts; its High Council High Priests, Traveling High Council, Elders Council, Priests, Teachers and Deacons Councils; with their several offices, duties and callings, reaching all, extending from centre to circumference and adapting itself to all the ramifications of society in the Church; not only in Zion, but throughout the world. Some have been pleased to term it "an imperium in imperio," be it so; it is the government of God on the earth; the Kingdom of God among men.

But again, there is a spirit and power associated with it, and not unfrequently when the Elders of this Church have gone on a mission, it has been revealed unto them, where they should go, what they should do, what obstacles and success should attend them. And they have found it even so. Again, when Elders have entered strange places, they have frequently been recognized by people whom they had never seen. The Spirit of the Lord has prepared the way before them by dreams, visions, etc. Some years ago, Elder Wilford Woodruff entered a town in England where he was a perfect stranger, and as he proceeded on the street, a woman came and looked at him, exclaiming, "This is him! This is the very man I saw in my dream last night; he is a man of God, and has come with a message of Salvation." Bro. Woodruff feeling very much annoyed, told her to desist; but she cried the more, until she raised nearly the whole town; he baptised quite a number in that place.

The Priesthood understanding the principles, government and order of the Kingdom of God, is to the Church a shield and defense. They are enabled to detect and expose false doctrines, false principles and practices, and false spirits. The gift of the Holy Ghost is a great blessing, but without the living Priesthood, this Church would have been broken into a thousand pieces years ago. Satan possesses great power to deceive. It is not every revelation that is of God, for Satan has the power to transform himself into an angel of light; he can give visions and revelations as well as spiritual manifestations and table rappings. There are many spirits in the world, and it needs the power of discerning them, and the Holy Priesthood, to detect the wrong and adhere to the right. It is because of a lack of this, that so much foolery is established in the world. This is too lengthy a subject for me to dwell upon here. I will merely give you one mark or sign whereby you may know a true from a false spirit. When the Spirit of God rules, there is perfect order; no whispering, peeping, muttering or knocking; nor is there anything fearful or terrific.

There is, moreover, peace and joy imparted to the bosom, and the Spirit is always subject to the Prophet. When you see the body of a man subject to a spirit, and swayed, impelled, led and controlled by it; that spirit is not of God; "For the Spirit of the Prophets is subject to the Prophets," and not the Prophets to them. A spirit cannot turn and twist a Prophet about, and make him mutter, groan and act as an idiot. When the Spirit of the Lord is upon a man, it gives him power and joy through the Holy Ghost; and if he speaks, he will speak reasonably and intelligibly.

If you see a man in this Church with any other spirit, rebuke it in the name of the Lord, and command it to depart. I speak this for the benefit of the Elders, as there are many here present, and Elders, Apostles, Prophets, etc., are placed in the Church for the perfecting of the Saints, the work of the ministry, the edifying of the body of Christ; the correcting of abuses, the rebuking of evil spirits, the regulating and putting in order of everything pertaining to His Church and Kingdom on the earth. The Priesthood ought to be quick lively, energetic, searching out and knowing the position of all things within its jurisdiction, whether for good or evil, strengthening the weak, comforting the afflicted, teaching the ignorant, and rebuking iniquity. There is a great difference between this Church and those of the Sectarian world, and nowhere is it more manifest than in the principle of exposing and rebuking iniquity. In the churches around as well as in the world; if a man holds what is termed a respectable position in society among other churches and does wrong, his evils are winked at or covered over. With us, he is rebuked, and his sins proclaimed upon the house-tops, and, if he is a rascal, no matter how respectable, we turn him out and will not have him among us. In the Valley, a poor man who is good, virtuous and who doing his duty, acts justly and uprightly, is fully admitted into any society, whilst a rich, respectable rascal who does not, is cast out.

I will now proceed to show briefly the operations of our organization upon the earth.

First, there is a President over the whole Church throughout the whole world. Joseph Smith held this position till he was murdered by his enemies. Now Brigham Young holds it, upon whom the mantle of Joseph had fallen, even his spirit and power. Then, there are his two Councilors, Heber C. Kimball and Jedediah M. Grant, forming the First Council in the Church. Then comes the Council of the Twelve Apostles, then the Seventies, Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons as before described. While these Councils are in the performance of their duty, it is their privilege by the Gift of the Holy Ghost to understand all principles connected with the office; for the Gift of the Holy Ghost not only operates upon the private members, but also upon the officers of the Church, teaching, leading, unfolding and developing, and is a searcher of the thoughts and intents of the heart. The intelligence communicated by this spirit has been manifested in thousands of instances. I will mention one with which many here are familiar: Some years ago when the Saints had left Nauvoo, on the road to the Valley, and when we had been for some months on the way, and were encamped in an Indian country, the Pottawatamies, on the banks of the Missouri River, near what is now known as Bluff City, a revelation came to Prest. Young and others, informing them that those having charge of the offices of the Church in England were leading the people astray. Accordingly, Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, and myself were appointed to go forthwith to England; we did so, leaving our families in tents on the banks of the Missouri River. On our arrival in England, we found things precisely as had been manifested. Many of you here are acquainted with the facts, for I saw you there at that time. I refer to the operations of the Joint Stock Company, it commenced in righteousness but men made use of it to further their selfish interests and speculations, and had the evil not been corrected, it would have endangered the prosperity of the whole European Church. These men would have led the people astray, but the Spirit of God revealed it through the Holy Priesthood and it was thus set to right.

In relation to the operations of the Holy Spirit through the Priesthood, it is manifested in all the operations of this Church, in small as well as large matters. By what principle are we daily cemented and united as one? Why is it, that notwithstanding our frequent mobbings and driving, we cannot be broken up? Joseph Smith on being interrogated by a member of Congress, by what power or upon what principle he was enabled to control so many people, replied: "Oh, that is very simple and easy! Why, said the gentleman, that is the most difficult thing we have! Well, Sir, how do you do it? He replied, I teach them correct principles, and they govern themselves. He might have added: I am associated with a Holy Priesthood, God teaches me, I teach them, and they teach the people. I believe in God; they believe in God and we and the people believe in the Lord, they in me, and I in them; we are one, one with the Lord and one with each other. People talk a great deal about government and governors; we can govern ourselves; but our faith and trust is in God, and though liars and defamers represent us as profligate and debauched, frequently have I met with Joseph Smith and others when living, and with the First Presidency and Twelve, and in the midst of trials, persecutions and difficulties we have called upon the Lord for deliverance for His people, and the Lord has heard us, and if we have any blessing, mercy or deliverance, we give God the glory. Many people wonder why the Mormons should have such confidence in their leaders; why they know them and have proved them. Who stood in the front of the battle and breasted every storm when living? Joseph Smith and his associates. Who has been foremost since his death? Brigham Young and his associates. Who has preached the Gospel in your own lands, pioneered the way for you through the wilderness, rebuked the oppressor and maintained your rights? Brigham Young and the Twelve. Who have left their homes, wandered over mountains, deserts, oceans and seas, and at the expense of their health, property and in many instances their lives, have visited you in your homes, and led you and your friends amid unheard toils hardships and privations to this land and to Zion? Brigham Young and his council, the Twelve, and the general Priesthood under their direction, and they have always stood, and do now in the front of the battle. Trust them, why you cannot help but trust them. Sustain the Authorities of this Church, why we all do it; we cannot help it; they sustain and bless us, and we do them; and thus we are one. You have here your Presidents of Branches, Presidents of Conference and the Pastor. In this Branch you have your Council, who know how to manage the affairs connected therewith. Sometimes I am asked, why don't you come more frequently to our Council; there is no need of it, you have received abundant instructions and know how to act in your sphere, and carry on the business pertaining to your Branch. When you govern yourselves, there is no driving, no pulling. Supposing, anybody was to do wrong, you could soon bring him to account. If President Miles were to do wrong, he would soon be brought to an account. Whoever it may be, that does wrong in this Church, he must be dealt with, no matter what his position, or how influential he may be. The teachers office is very important. If they attend promptly to their duty, we can tell where every man is, what he is doing, and so on through the various Presidencies up to the Presidency in Zion. They know what every man there is doing, and so ought we to know here. I can go to President Miles and ask him about such a one, who he is, and what he is doing, and he ought to know all about him, and, if he has done wrong, he may be judged upon that wrong and cut off if necessary, even as a dead branch would be pruned off a tree, that the good may be kept when gathered and preserved.

I have men here at my back who will sustain me while I do right. This is the way all over the world. In England, for instance; every man there is known to those over him; they have a complete system of organization, but without the Priesthood the people would soon be led into error and drawn away.

There are two causes why this people are preserved and united in doing the will of God. The members sustain the Authorities in the Truth, having the witness of the Spirit of God and the Gift of the Holy Ghost, and the Authorities seek by the same Spirit and intelligence the welfare of the people under their charge.

We shall, if faithful, be a kingdom of Priests unto the Most High God, even the offspring of Heaven governed by the wisdom of the eternal God. This Church has withstood the powers of earth and hell combined, all have been arrayed against it, but it still rolls on, for the great God has spoken it, and I tell you in the name of Israel's God, that its course is onward, onward till the Kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdoms of God and Christ. This is what the people cannot understand, but it is perfectly easy to us; we know it as easy as the boy knew his daddy. Some of our folks are very much afraid that they may be mobbed and persecuted for their religion; well, never mind. I never rejoiced more than when I was among mobs; and many a time I did not know whether they were going to let me live two minutes or not. But as for Mormonism, it is worth all that I have, to me and to my family in time and in eternity. Some folks talk about dying; never mind that till the time comes. Why, you could not die if you were to try to. You have voted to uphold and sustain us as Authorities in the Church, and now we expect you to do as we tell you, and no grunting. We are pretty independent, and don't ask any odds of any of you; we do the will of God, and feel happy in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and we feel like crying, "Hallelujah! Hallelujah! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! If we were to get together as Israel did, and shout "Hosannah!" and let out our feelings, the people would wonder what we were about; but there is a time and a place for everything. There is a good time coming. May God bless you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE 100TH PSALM.—The long disputed question whether Purcell or Handel was the author of the grand music of the Old Hundredth has been set at rest by the discovery made a few days since in Lincoln Cathedral library. Purcell died in 1695, and Handel in 1759. But in the Cathedral library a French Psalter, printed in 1546, contains the music of the Old Hundredth, exactly as it is now sung, so that it could not be the production of either of the great musicians to whom it had been attributed.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

A Card to the Saints.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding;" and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Independence.

SONNET—BY ELDER JOHN LYON, OF UTAH.

If to be independent, means a proud,
Unruly spirit, self-will'd and boasting!
Or filled with spleen to see another's good,
Coveting the fortune, fame, or power,
Which others, by industry have attained;
Then let such freedom perish. For my part,
I'd rather be a very slave, and rattle in
My chains, than live to be a thing so mean,
So jarring to the common good of man!
But, if to live above the grov'ling things
Of hatred, envy, and distrust, which rule
The rabid feelings of the rabble crowd;
Then shall we know such independent men
And those whom all may well depend upon.

The Great Powers in a Fright about Switzerland.

The Great Powers of the Continent, we gather from the letter of our Berlin correspondent, are dissatisfied with the line that the English Government has taken in the Swiss question. We are glad to hear it; for the probability is that the Great Powers are dissatisfied with the English Government because it has refused to be made their tool. The truth is that the Great Powers of the Continent—with the exception, perhaps, of Russia—are in a great fright at the prospect of war breaking out in the very heart of Europe. Prussia for that matter is as much afraid as the rest. However the journals of the Government, and the Court Camarilla, at Berlin, may attempt to put a swaggering face upon it, they have their misgivings. It is an awkward thing to have to carry on war when the army in the field is separated from the base of operations by some hundreds of miles of neutral territory, in marching across which the soldiers dare not take the liberties they would in an enemy's territory; and the inhabitants of which are apt to be irritated by the annoying presence of foreign troops, however well those troops may conduct themselves. It is assumed that transit by railway will obviate all difficulties; but it must be remembered that the railway management will be extremely liable to break down under such a new and enormous pressure on its resources. Such a break-down would be rather more serious in the case of troops bound for battle than it was in the case of London holiday-makers crowding to see a naval review. All novel implements of war are quite as dangerous to the army using them as they are to the army against which they are employed. The strategy of railways can only be learned from experience, and the first dabblers in it will have to pay dear for their blunders. Again, the passage of the Prussian troops will cause the suspension of all goods and passenger traffic on the lines along which they move for many days. The inhabitants of Baden and Wurtemberg are already begging their Governments to avert from them the nuisance of this transit. If the mere prospect of such a visitation alarms them, what will its reality do? The Prussians will convert into enemies the populations of all the neutral territories through which they march. These considerations have their full weight with every reasonable man about the King of Prussia's person, and hence the anxiety at Berlin to discover some creditable pretext for abating their Bobadil swagger. All the other princes and potentates—with the exception, perhaps, of Russia—are equally anxious to prevent the Prusso-Swiss quarrel from coming to the arbitrament of blows. Austria already sees in imagination the war of principle spreading into Italy; and France watches with apprehension the state of public opinion on the Rhine and the Rhone. The Kinglets of Germany are still more fluttered. They look back upon the steady course pursued by Prussia for centuries in annexing one inconsiderable patch of territory after another, till she has swelled to her present proportions. That process is still persevered in. Every now and then, we hear of some new Prussian acquisition; one day it is in Hohenzollern, near the Swiss frontier, the next, it is at Jahde, on the shore of the German Ocean. Nothing is too inconsiderable to be rejected. Not far from Wetzlar, Prussia possesses, in the midst of Dramstadt territory, on old mill with some half dozen acres of land attached to it. As much diplomatic obstinacy and finesse was displayed by Prussia in getting firm hold of this miserable messuage as if it had been a principality. The German princes know the meaning of all this too well; they know that it portends the gradual absorption of their territories and their ultimate "mediatisation." They are therefore alarmed at the prospect of Bale being occupied by Prussian troops—Hohenzollern, Hechingen, and other patches of land having already been acquired as stepping stones to it. They are muttering to themselves the words used by the King of Prussia in 1848, "Preussen muss in Deutschland aufgehen." There is not a potentate in Europe but feels—one for one fear, another for another—his heart fluttering for the unimaginable issues of a Prussian invasion of Switzerland. Hence it is that all the Continental Powers are so anxious to avert the outbreak of hostilities. The English Government is as desirous of the continuation of peace as any of them. But the English Government has no sympathy with certain ulterior views of the Continental Powers. With all their fear of war those Powers cannot reconcile themselves to the admission that a small republic, in virtue of its being an independent State, is on a footing of equality with a large kingdom. They deem it insolence in a community of burghers and peasants to expect that a King should make the first overture for reconcilement, even when that King happens to be in the wrong. They therefore insist upon Switzerland's beginning by asking pardon of the King of Prussia for having refused to allow him to insult her. Now this Switzerland is determined not to do; and in this determination England believes Switzerland to be right. It is not the mere honor of the thing; neither Swiss nor Englishmen are given to make much of mere punctillo. But the Swiss have to deal with a Government which for centuries treasured up every concession made by every State with which it has to deal, in order to turn that concession to account on some future day in its schemes of territorial acquisition. If the Federal Government were at the request of the Great Powers, to liberate the Neufchatel prisoners without trial, they would confess that those men acted righteously when they rose in arms to subvert the existing Government of Neufchatel and reinstall the King of Prussia. Such a confession would be treasured up by the Prussian Government, and would be brought forward on the first occasion when the Federal Government was unprepared to resist demand for the cession of Neufchatel. What guarantee is offered the Swiss that no such demand shall ever be made? The words forsooth of the Emperors of France and Austria and of the King of Prussia! "For decency's sake add a handful of thistledown to give a little weight to such pledges." Switzerland therefore says: Let the King of Prussia first renounce all claims to Neufchatel, and then we will gladly make him a present of the silly hotheads we have caged. And the English Government say, that in making this stipulation, Switzerland only obeys a prudent instinct of self-preservation. The English government, therefore—we would gladly infer from the grumbling of continental diplomacy—insists that the first step in mutual concession shall be taken, not by Switzerland, but by the King of Prussia. We have no right to ask of the Swiss to sacrifice themselves for the Liberal cause in Europe. But we believe that the policy which for the sake of the Liberal cause we would wish to see them adopt, is that which is most likely to prove conducive to their own preservation. It is to maintain unshrinkingly the calm and dauntless attitude they have assumed. If they waver they are lost. At the first symptoms of intimidation on their part Prussia will advance and lay hold of Bale and Schaffhausen. Austria will next, under the pretext that this military occupation of Swiss territory by Prussia endangered the balance of European power, march her troops into the Ticinese and the country of the Grisons. She would no sooner have made this movement than the Emperor of the French would lay his hands on Geneva and Neufchatel. The truth is, that France and Austria, when abjuring Prussia to abstain from invading Switzerland, remind us irresistibly of schoolboys exhorting a comrade to abstain from robbing an orchard. If the obstinate urchin persists, the young moralists are pretty sure to accept a share of the spoils. The French, Austrian and Prussian Governments all hate Switzerland equally in their hearts. Its prosperity under republican institutions is an eye-sore to them. The asylum it affords to political refugees keeps them in a state of chronic alarm. They are all of them eager to re-enact in Switzerland, in the nineteenth century, the infamous game of partition played in Poland in the eighteenth. "The Swiss," writes our special correspondent from Geneva, "look to England as the only Power whose voice may yet be heard against the immoderate pretentions of their enemies in the councils of Europe." Devoutly do we pray that this confidence may not be misplaced. We will hope that the English Government will act in a manner worthy of the occasion. And we believe that our otherwise acute and well-informed correspondent is in error when he assumes that England would take umbrage at any proposal of the American Union to share in the negotiations. The recent conduct of the Cabinets at Washington and St. James' proves that both are equally anxious for cordial concert and co-operation. If a Congress is to decide on the Prusso-Swiss controversy, it appears to us that the Swiss have a right to demand that representatives of the United States should take part in its deliberations. The only republican Government in Europe is surely entitled to insist upon having one republican judge a member of the tribunal to whose decision it shall submit its case in a litigation with a crowned head.—[London Daily News.

The Chinese Sugar-Plant.

The cultivation of the Sorghum, or Chinese sugar-plant, has thus far proved so decidedly successful in this country, not only in the South, where it seems to have been demonstrated that two crops or cuttings of sugar-bearing stalks can be obtained in one season from the same roots of that year's planting, but even so far north as Minnesota, where it is testified that good syrup was made in 1856 from stalks hardly a hundred days from the seed, that we are impelled to urge upon our farmers and gardeners the importance of early attention to the procuring of seed and planting for the season just before us. Let us all grow seed this year, so that it can never more be so scarce that speculators may run it up to an exorbitant price. A great deal remains to be settled with regard to this plant, especially the best mode of converting its saccharine properties into crystallized sugar; and it is highly probable that better varieties of it will ultimately be discovered, at least for certain localities, than that now current in this country. For the present, however, it is advisable to continue and extend the cultivation of that which is accessible, and thus test the effect of acclimation on the character of the plant and the sweetness of its juices. We suspect that for Louisana, Florida and Texas, the Sorghum of Southern Africa will ultimately be found preferable to that obtained from France by our Patent Office, and from China by France. If it prove true that this plant, or certain varieties of it can be grown from year to year in semi-tropical latitudes from the same root, as the cane is grown in the West Indies, and that two or more sugar-yielding stalks may be cut from that root each season, then there can be little doubt that our Southern States are destined still to lead the North in the production of sugar. For the present, however, it suffices that the Sorghum may be grown wherever Indian corn will usually ripen—that its abundant juice makes a very pleasant syrup or molasses, to which it is easily reduced by boiling away four-fifths of it in the ordinary mode of sugar-making from the sap of the maple—and that the leaves and stalks, whether green or dry, of the Sorghum make an admirable fodder for cattle, horses or hogs, while the seeds are eaten with avidity by fowls also, to justify the general interest evinced in its cultivation. We propose, therefore, to condense into the smallest space some practical directions to the prospective cultivator—as follows:

1. Seed.—If there be a seed-store within your reach, your easiest way is to send and buy what seed you want. In planting to raise seed (the first year's object,) a pound will suffice for an acre; and this ought not to cost more than a dollar. But beware of impostors and swindlers, for bushels of broom-corn and kindred seeds will be palmed off as that of the Sorghum. Where you cannot readily obtain seed in this way, write to your Member of Congress asking him to send you a paper, and he will generally be able to do so. If not, the Secretary of your State Agricultural Society may be able to supply you.

2. Planting.—Choose a warm, mellow soil, such as you would confidently expect to grow at least fifty bushels of Indian corn to the acre. Plow early, plow deep and thoroughly. Plant as early as you could venture to plant corn. If you have a hot-bed, start a little seed in one corner of it. If you plant considerably, put in your seed at different times—say in this latitude, one-quarter each on the 1st, 10th and 20th of May and 1st of June respectively. Plant (for seed) in hills, six seeds to the hill, and at distances of four feet each way. Try some five feet apart east and west (so as to let in the sun between the rows,) and some in drills—say four to five feet apart east and west, with the seeds six inches apart in the drill, and thin the plants to one foot apart. If you have seed in abundance, sow a little in drills two feet apart, the seeds in the drill but two or three inches apart. Cover lightly, as the seed rots if covered deeply. Keep the hens at a distance, or it will come up too soon.

3. Tillage.—The Sorghum comes up looking very puny—much like broom-corn or barn-grass. If you set a blockhead to weed it, he will probably pull it up and report that it never germinated. Cultivate like Indian corn—only faithfully. If suckers start, a majority say pinch them or pull them off—that is, in growing for seed. This need not be done in growing for sugar.

4. Harvesting.—Whenever the seed shall be hard and black, cut off the upper part of the stalks, say three feet long, and hang them up like broom-corn, in a dry chamber, suspended from the ceiling, so as to be out of the way of rats, &c. Now cut up your stalks, pull off the leaves, and satisfy yourself that all manner of stock will eat them; cut up a few of the stalks as you would corn-stalks, and try a little experiment with them; and put the rest of the stalks through any kind of a crushing-mill that may be handy—a cider-mill would be better than nothing—catch the juice and instantly warm it over a slow fire in a large kettle, skimming off the scum so long as any shall rise. Then boil the juice about four-fifths away, as if it were maple sap. Use a little lime or lime-water to neutralize the phosphoric acid, which otherwise will give a slightly acid but not unpleasant taste to the syrup. Save some syrup without thus neutralizing the acid, as you may like it better that way. Don't waste the scum but throw it to the pigs where it will make at least excellent manure. Feed the pumice or crushed stalks to your cattle; and, having thus cleared the ground, be ready to plant or sow extensively next Spring.

5. Fodder.—We estimate that, whenever seed shall be sufficiently abundant, any rich, warm land will produce a third more fodder per acre if sown with Sorghum than if sown with Indian corn, and that the Sorghum is at least twenty-five per cent. more nutritious than the corn. But all that can be effected this year is to grow a good supply of seed, and prove that this plant is valuable both for syrup and fodder. Next year will be soon enough for most cultivators to think of sowing for fodder or grinding for sugar.

One word of caution to experimenters: Don't run the thing into the ground. The Sorghum will prove a valuable addition to our crops, if we don't render it odious by some Multicaulis foolery. But wheat, Indian corn and clover are not going out of fashion for some years yet.—[New York Tribune, Jan. 31.

New Postage Act.

We have received for publication the following instructions to Postmasters:

TRANSIENT PRINTED MATTER, ETC.

1. Books, not weighing over four pounds, may be sent in the mail prepaid by postage stamps, at one cent an ounce any distance in the United States under three thousand miles, and at two cents an ounce over three thousand miles, provided they are put up without cover or wrapper, or in a cover or wrapper open at the ends or sides, so that their character may be determined without removing the wrapper.

2. Small newspapers and periodicals, published monthly or oftner, and pamphlets containing not more than sixteen octavo pages each, when put up in single packages, weighing at least eight ounces, to one address, and prepaid by postage stamps, may be sent to any part of the United States at one-half cent an ounce or fraction of an ounce.

3. Unsealed circulars, advertisements, business cards, transient newspapers and every other article of transient printed matter, (except books and packages of small publications,) as above, not weighing over three ounces, sent in the mail to any part of the United States, are chargeable with one cent postage each, to be prepaid by postage stamps. Where more than one circular is printed on a sheet, or a circular and letter, each must be charged with a single rate. This applies to lottery and other kindred sheets assuming the form and name of newspapers; and the miscellaneous matter in such sheets must also be charged with one rate. A business card on an unsealed envelope of a circular subjects the entire packet to letter postage. Any transient matter, like a circular or handbill, inclosed in or with a periodical or newspaper sent to a subscriber, or to any person subjects the whole package to letter postage; and whenever subject to letter postage from being sealed or from any other cause whatever, all printed matter, without exception must be prepaid or excluded from the mail. It is the duty of the Postmaster at the mailing office, as well as at the office of delivery, carefully to examine all printed matter in order to see that it is charged with the proper rate of postage and to detect fraud. At offices where postage stamps cannot be procured, Postmasters are authorized to receive money in prepayment of postage on transient matter, but they should be careful to keep a supply of stamps on hand.

4. It is no part of the duty of a Postmaster to receive and deliver to subscribers any other newspapers than those which come in the mail, or to put the address on newspapers sent to clubs, or to deliver them from a furnished list; nor should he do either, even through courtesy, unless it may be done without interfering with the legitimate business of his office.

Discoveries in Central America of Monuments of Antiquity.

Mr. E. G. Squier has sent to the London Athenæum the translation of a letter, received from Don Jose Antonio Urrutia, cura of Jutiapa, State of Guatemala, Central America, giving an account of some ancient monuments found in his parish. The existence of these monuments being now for the first time made known to the world, and the general interest surrounding former discoveries in that direction, will render the communication, no doubt, acceptable to our readers.—N. Y. Herald, Jan. 28, '57.

Jutiapa, Guatemala, Jan. 8.

Sir—Sharing in those archæological tastes which fortunately are spreading in this country, so rich in monuments of an ancient civilization, I have lately devoted some time to the study of the antiquities falling within the extensive parish under my charge, and of which I propose to give you some brief notices; first, in reference to the fine ruins, hitherto unknown, of the very ancient city called Cinaca Mecallo.

To the southward, and not far from the town of Comapa, are some steep mountains, the bases of which are washed by the large river Paz or Paza, which constitutes the boundary between Guatemala and San Salvador. Upon the highest of these mountains is an extensive plain, drained by a multitude of small streams, the waters of which, uniting in a common channel, are precipitated over a ledge of rocks, fifteen yards in height, and mingle with those of the river, forming one of the most beautiful cataracts in this department. Upon the highest part of this plain are found the remains of an ancient city of the primitive inhabitants of America, which have successfully resisted the attacks of time, and the heavy walls of which seem ostentatiously to defy the operations of the elements. The very lofty position of these ruins, from which may be traced the majestic course of the river which flows at the base of the mountains even to the sea, and from which the eye traverses the wide plains dotted with villages of the neighboring State of San Salvador, taking in the volcanoes of Chingo and Izalco, the American Vesuvius, with its plume of smoke rising to mid heaven, and including the lakes of Huija and Atescatempo—this position lends additional intesest to the ruins, since it indicates a high appreciation of the grand and beautiful on the part of the builders of the ancient city.

The place where these ruins are found, as I have said, is known by the name of Cinaca-Mecallo, which, in the mixed idiom of Mam and Mexican, now spoken by the people of this district, signifies knotted rope (cordel enudado)—given perhaps by the primitive inhabitants in consequence of the many vines found in these mountains, and used in binding together the frames of the huts and houses of the people.

The walls, or remains of the wall of the city, describe an oval figure, within which various roads or streets may be traced, various subterranean passages, and many ruined edifices. The materials of construction are principally thin stone, or a species of slate, united by a kind of cement, which, in color and consistence, resembles melted lead (plomo derritido). Amongst the monuments, there are three which claim special notice. The first of these is a temple, consecrated to the sun, chiefly excavated in the solid rock, and having its door opening towards the east. On the archway of the entrance, which is formed of slabs united to each other, are found sculptured representations of the sun and moon, and in the interior are found some hieroglyphics. This monument is known amongst the Indians as Teotunal, "stone of the sun." Besides the bassi rilievi, these stones bear hieroglyphics painted with a kind of red varnish, which, notwithstanding its long exposure to the weather, remains unimpaired. Many of the stones found in excavating, in all parts of these ruins, are painted with this varnish.

Of the subterranean passages found amongst these ruins, there is one which has become celebrated, and is still the subject of many popular stories, as having been the retreat of a celebrated bandit, named Partideno, who was finally captured here by the people of Comapa. Desiring to explore this passage, and in spite of the entreaties of the superstitious Indians not to venture in, I provided myself with a hatchet and torch of pine, and entered. After many difficulties I succeeded in reaching a kind of saloon, where I found various blocks of stone carved with the arms of the ancient Indians, in all respects similar to others which I had previously found in other parts of the ruins, and sent to the President of Guatemala in 1853.

The second notable object, and which is no less worthy of attention, is a great slab of stone, covered with inscriptions or hieroglyphics, which, from the little knowledge I have been able to obtain of their meaning, appear to me to convey only representations of the economy of human life (la pintura de la economia de la vida humana). The first is a tree, symbol of life; the last a skull, emblem of death.

The third object is a wild animal resembling a tiger, sculptured in a stone or rock of great size, and which I conjecture was intended as a monument commemorative of some great victory. The reasons for this conjecture are these:—In this town (Comapa), as in most of the Indian towns, the custom is still general of preserving a knowledge of great events in their history, by means of representations called bailes (dances), which are, in fact, dances in the public squares, on the days or evenings of great solemnities. It is most interesting, for one who understands something of the language, to participate in these bailes, as he can thereby obtain some knowledge of the most remote traditions and events in the history of the Indians. In one of these bailes, which I have several times witnessed, is represented a great battle. The company, dressed in the skins, and wearing the heads of animals on their own, are divided into two sections, and arranged against each other. Before commencing the attack, one party makes propositions of peace to the other, which are rejected. The signal of battle is then given, accompanied with wild shouts. After a long contest, victory declares in favor of the party which bears the head of a deer. At the end of the representation the vanquished party leaves the ground, and the other, with a pole, traces in the sand the figure of some animal. The carved representation of an animal to which I have referred, and the distance from the ruined city where it is found, induce me to believe that this monument refers to the same event with the baile which I have described.

These, sir, are the most remarkable objects found in the ancient and ruined city. Outside of the walls, and in a little plain not far distant, are a number of mounds which, doubtless, are the burial places of the dead. The proportions of these rude sepulchres, unshaded by cypresses and unmarked by chiselled stones, nevertheless convey to us the probable position and influence of the dead whom they cover. It is a custom still preserved amongst the Indians to throw a handful of earth or stone upon the grave of the distinguished dead, as a tribute to their memory. The more numerous these contributions, the higher the tumulus which is thus gradually accumulated.

I have thus given you a few of the notes which I have made upon the ancient ruins in this department. I hope soon to have the pleasure of sending you others. Meantime, I may mention that I have, agreeably to promise, sent copies of some of the hieroglyphics, which I have alluded to above, to Guatemala, to the care of the Abbe Brasseur de Bourbourg.

Your obedient servant, &c.,

Jose Antonio Urrutia.

Japanese High Priest.

The Moniteur de la Flotte publishes the contents of a letter of July 15th, from Simoda, a part of Japan open to foreigners, giving an account of an event of great interest to the followers of the religion of Singto, a Pagan sect of the extreme East, having under its rule forty millions of souls. The letter says:—"The vast empire of Japan is governed by an hereditary and absolute Prince named Koribo or Emperor, and residing at Yeddo in the island of Niphon. Independently of the Emperor, another personage in that country is of first rate importance—The Dairi, or sovereign-pontiff of Japan, supreme head of the religion of Singto. He is regarded as a god on earth, who never dies, but who, from time to time, renovates his soul. On July first, 1856, the Dairi fell ill; on the 3d he got much worse, and immediately the priest spread the news that the Dairi had placed himself in communication with the great gods of heaven, and was about to renew his soul in the bosom of Ten-Sio Dai-Tsin, the highest of all these divinities. The crowd hastened to the palace where the Dairi was lying in an immense bed of state, with his robes on, and the gauze vail covering his face. The priests remained praying in turns, in the midst of the burning perfumes and other practices of their religion. On the 5th of July, at nine in the morning, the Dairi expired, and immediately after breathing his last, the high priest announced that his soul had gone to pay a visit to the gods, but would speedily return. A dead silence then succeeded; and at the end of about ten minutes, the high priest, surrounded by the sacred college, threw a large white linen cloth over the body, and the moment after, withdrawing it, discovered to the eyes of the multitude another form altogether similar to that of the late Dairi, but full of life and health. This new head of the Church at once sat up in the bed, then rose altogether, and proceeding to an altar placed at one side ascended it, and gave his benediction to the multitude, who uttered shouts of joy. By a stratagem easily managed, the priests had substituted for the deceased Dairi the person of his son, his natural heir. A trap door had let down one body, and raised the other, without the people being able, in the midst of the prostrations called for by their form of worship, to perceive the deception.—British and Foreign News.

A Sea-Sickness Cure.

Dr. Landerer, a medical man at Athens, announces that he has discovered a sovereign specific against sea-sickness. His remedy is to give from 10 to 12 drops of chloroform in water. The chloroform in most cases removes nausea, and persons who have taken the remedy soon become able to stand up and get accustomed to the movement of the vessel. Should the sickness return a fresh dose is to be taken. It was tried on 20 passengers on a very rough voyage from Zea to Athens, and all, with the exception of two were cured by one dose. The minority, two ladies, were able to resist the feeling of illness on taking the second dose.

Thubr is a tree in South America whose fruit resembles roast beef in taste; the butter tree grows in Africa, and the bread tree is to be found in the South Sea Islands. A person once observed that if they could but be grafted one into the other, a sandwich tree might be produced.

Angels or Spiritual Manifestations.

WE had the following communication forwarded to us some time ago, and thinking that it might be interesting to many of our readers, we deem it proper to lay it before them, withholding the name and address. We do so not only to answer the gentleman, but to lay before our readers principles that may be of use to them. We have for some time thought of writing a work upon spiritualism, and entering into a regular disquisition of the subject, in all its various bearings; this we have not yet accomplished, or we should have been aided very materially in our examination of the principles contained in the following document. By those conversant with such matters, it will easily be discovered that in jumping unceremoniously into such a subject as the spirit friends of the writer have, involving the operation and manifestations of spirits, or angels, their associations and relationship to man; scanning the motives and acts of God, in the organization of worlds and of man; dilating on the nature, properties, and acts of angels and men, as well as discanting on the destiny of the human family; involving spiritual manifestations, and some of the most obstruse, psycological phenomena, it is very difficult to be correctly understood in the small space allotted in a weekly journal. We do not, therefore, profess to enter into a scientific and philosophical disquisition of the subject, and must simply, for the present, content ourselves with a more limited view. For unless we go to the oracles of Isis in Egypt, to that of Jupiter Ammon in Delphi, and others, or to the ancient soothsayers, wizards, witches, necromancers, or magicians, we can go nowhere else. The Bible, indeed, reveals more of spiritual agency and manifestations than any other ancient book, or than all put together. We shall, therefore, refer briefly to it and to late revelations made to us as a people. This may not be satisfactory to our inquiring friend; but this we cannot help, as we have neither time nor space at present for a scientific and philosophical investigation, and, as we understand it, the gentleman wants our views. We will say, however, at the commencement, we believe in spiritual agencies and manifestations; but we believe that all correct spiritual manifestations are subject to, and controlled by law. We believe, too, that the gentleman is sincere in his faith. We quote:

"PA., Jan. 12, 1857.

"MR. JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Sir: Three years ago this coming spring I became conscious of the presence of an invisible intelligence, which claimed to be spirits or angels. They first manifested themselves by controlling my hand to write words and sentences. After a time I could hear them speak to me in whispers like. They spoke to me much concerning my duty to myself and my fellow-men; and also concerning the destiny of man.

"I subjoin a small part of what I wrote by their dictation, which may not prove wholly uninteresting to you. It certainly was not to me at the time I wrote it; for it contained many things which were new to me. I do not claim for it perfection of diction, according to the rules established by men; but I do claim that it contains some truth, and it is the mighty principle which must prevail, sooner or later, if God is omnipotent, all-wise, and all-just."

The following communication does indeed contain some truth; but it is not, therefore, necessarily all true. The question naturally arises: "How are we to find out and designate truth from error?" This is the great difficulty with all modern spiritual manifestations; there is no order, no rule, no sure test. "Truth will," of course, "prevail." But what is truth? What are these spiritual manifestations? Who is capable of judging them? Who shall separate the pure from the impure, the evil from the good, the truth from falsehood? The wheat and chaff are all thrown together; where is the fanning-mill? for the spirits come in every form and shape, and offer every variety of teaching. They differ among themselves as to their tests, and in their teachings are as impotent and dissimilar as sectarian ministers. We have had false statements made to ourself by men who told us that they received their information from spirits. For some rules on this subject, we refer to an article written by P. P. Pratt, in No. 49, of THE MORMON, Jan. 24. President Pratt remarks, "that there is order in the kingdom of God and in the spiritual manifestations of the true saints." By obedience to the gospel and through the gift of the Holy Ghost the mind of a saint is enlightened, his views and feelings are changed; he is "born again of the spirit;" "the Spirit takes of the things of God and shows them unto him;" he is indeed "led by the spirit;" and, being under its influences, he becomes prepared by degrees for spiritual manifestations: but to take a man who has no knowledge of spiritual manifestations, and to manifest a spiritual power and influence is opening so large and new a field to him, that it is morally impossible for him to comprehend it; he indeed knows that there is a power as Paul knew when he was struck down and blinded; such a man needs the teaching of an Ananias, an accredited servant of God, and thereafter obeying the gospel he receives legitimate manifestations, visions, ministering of angels, revelations, a knowledge of heavenly mysteries, and knows the difference between true and false spirits. John says: "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits;" again: "there are many spirits gone forth into the world." But again:

"My spirit friends gave no names, but called themselves 'the heavenly host.'"

We must confess that we are not very much in love with the appellation of those spiritual advisers; not that we object to the appellation or name, as such, but because there is a principle involved in it. We are aware that the term "heaven" may apply to the atmosphere by which we are surrounded, underneath the clouds, or, in scripture phraseology, "the firmament of heaven." Hence God made "fowls that may fly above the earth, in the open firmament of heaven."—Gen. i. 20. See also Jer. ix. 10; Luke xiii. 19. But when the Heavenly Hosts are mentioned, there is something more to be understood than the mere location; angels are called "the angels of Heaven." The hosts or multitudes of heaven has a specific signification in scripture. In 1 Kings xxii. 19, we have the following: "And he said hear thou therefore the word of the Lord; I saw the Lord sitting on His throne, and all the hosts of Heaven standing by Him; on his right hand and on His left." Thus it would seem that the Hosts of Heaven or the Heavenly Host were angels that stood in the presence of God. Again, when "the angel of the Lord" came to announce to the shepherds the birth of Jesus, there came with him "a multitude of the Heavenly Host praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will toward men."—Luke ii. They were important personages; they came on an important mission; that mission was open, clear, and definitely understood; it was not any seizure of the hand or whispering. Now, whatever good intentions the spirits referred to by our friend might have had, we do not believe that they were messengers of the Lord; much less can we believe that they were the Heavenly Hosts or any part of them. And as a man would very much fall in our esteem by using a falsehood, even for a good purpose, so would spirits: Truth needs no subterfuge. If they had come as departed spirits of friends or relations, without such pretensions, it would have been more honest.

"They began their communication as follows:

"God wrote his unfathomable truths on the book of nature, and man has learned but the alphabet of its unnumbered pages. He made unnumbered worlds where nature's boundless map displays them to our admiring gaze. Man understands not that all these were made for him; and more than he has ever dreamed of are his; he has but to wait. In God's time he will journey hence to better worlds than this, where mind in musical harmony unites with mind, and happiness untold flows like a river whose waters are never dry. When God made man he was undeveloped, and in mind what we have seen; and he viewed him in his undeveloped state, not as a heathen, but as a feeble infant making its first efforts to walk!

Nature manifests the power of God while it proves man's weakness. The mind of man hath not yet conceived its magnificent powers; yet with all its power, hidden and revealed, it could not make a world, nor mar the face of nature!"

The latter part of this is strictly true. Nature does indeed prove the power of God and man's weakness; neither can man conceive the magnificence of his own mind. Some of the phraseology seems to partake of the hyperbolical; we let it pass as too indistinct for our comprehension. There is one statement, however, that we must criticise. "He made unnumbered worlds" . . . . "Man understands not that all these worlds were made for him."

All these worlds were not made for man who dwells on this earth. This earth was made for its inhabitants; it will become purified and celestialized, and "the meek shall inherit the earth," so says Jesus; a new Jerusalem will be prepared for those who are worthy to inhabit it, but it will come down to this earth; this earth will become purified and celestialized, and celestial bodies will inhabit it. Furthermore, however poetical it may be to read it, "mind" does not "unite with mind in musical harmony" in the spirit world any more than here, only with congenial spirits. Spirits are discordant there, as much as here; and if there is one thing more than another in which confusion is confounded, it is in the modern manifestations of spirits. None but those united by the pure gospel are one. Their union is the union produced by virtue, purity, truth, faith in God, the gospel, and the gift of the Holy Ghost. Can the benevolent, the pure, the humane, the merciful, the just, unite with those, hereafter described, as "tyrants," as "savage, wicked usurpers of rights," who "destroy innocent babes in their mothers' arms," "make widows and orphans," "put cities in ruins, and bathe a world in blood?" No. There are bodies celestial, terrestrial and telestial, the glory of the sun, moon and stars; and the scriptures inform us that "every man will be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body." This is in accordance with justice and equity; the other would not be.

"How weak, then, and insignificant is man to boast of power! God made him to prove his love! What nature reveals has been made known to show the love of God!"

The first part of this is strictly correct. Man is indeed weak to boast of power; but God did not, as expressed, "make man to prove his love." God made man to multiply and increase, to prepare bodies for spirits already created, to accomplish his purposes, and in the stupendous and majestic operation as of the gods to fulfil his destiny, bear his part and fulfil his role among the gods, as an all-powerful, intelligent, eternal, progressive being, as well as to prove His love. "God is," indeed, "love, and they that dwell in God, dwell in love." But that is a truism, a self-existing fact; it is simply one of God's attributes, and existed before man was created.

Nature's revelations show also wisdom, intelligence, prescience, power, and the development of an infinite, intelligent, comprehensive mind, in all its varied denouments and characteristics, as well as love.

"Could love instead of hate inspire your mind, sinful man, rights would not know disturbers, conflicts would not be heard of, and ruinous wars would never blot the face of this beautiful planet; yet there is justice in the universal laws of God. For power could not proceed from the mighty vortex of infinite space of such magnitude and universal influences unless sustained by infinite justice. Could infinite wisdom munificently create a universe in infinite perfection without just laws? Would Omnipotence risk upon unjust laws world on world to roll in infinite space? Ride on secure, frail man, for God is just, and his impartial laws shall control in unerring certainty his shining suns in grand rythmatical harmony and glorious beauty!"

The above is indeed correct. Love is a divine attribute, and were man universally inspired with it, the same order and harmony would exist in the moral world which does now in the physical.

Infinite wisdom could not create a universe so perfect, magnificent and glorious, without infinite power and infinite justice; neither could order and harmony be preserved without just laws. And here we may be permitted to remark, that if "Omnipotence" would not "risk upon unjust laws world upon world to roll in infinite space," that for the same reason He would not risk the teaching of even the very first principles of truth to an unauthorized agency. A world is made up of atoms, and systems from parts; let there be derangement in the first or smaller, and numbers of small derangements would derange a world, and a deranged world would disorganize systems. Truth, to be true as a whole, must be true in all its parts; and, as Pope beautifully portrays creation:

"Whichever link you from the order strike, Tenth on ten-thousandth breaks the chain alike."

Hence, in speaking of some of the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, the apostle John says: "He that transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God; he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son." Here were indeed small principles, but these principles contained the germ of truth, emanated from heaven, and were a part of the government of God; do away with these, and you do away with the germ of order, rule and power; you strike at the foundation on which the stupendous superstructure is raised. Permit us here to proceed a little further. Jesus taught the people to have faith, to repent of their sins, to be baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins, and to have hands laid on their heads for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Now this is all very simple, but it is, nevertheless, pregnant with important consequences. The gift of the Holy Ghost, for instance, opens up a communication between God and man, and puts man in the possession of a knowledge of heavenly things. "It takes of the things of God and shews them unto him." "It brings things past to his remembrance, leads into all truth, and shows him things to come." He is a son of God, inspired by the Holy Spirit. It is indeed a small commencement; but what would be the results, if carried out? In one man it would not, indeed, be much; but put thousands and millions of these single individuals, thus enlightened, together, and, like so many atoms of matter, they would form a great and glorious body, and each one governed by law and inspired of God; they would all be thus inspired and governed. And were this earth under such an influence, and guided by the same master mind that governs worlds and sustains this universe, confusion would be banished, iniquity would hide its hoary head, darkness and error would flee before the brilliant rays of concentrated truth, sorrow, sighing and misery would cease, and the "tabernacle of God be with men."

"Can human wisdom reach God's endless round of unchanging laws? moving the never-ending worlds to infinite notes of harmonious numbers, and host of human beings sorely oppressed from poverty to never-ending riches in celestial spheres in harmony with celestial legions to dwell; raised from penury to glory.

Love, how supremely great! power, wisdom, and justice, how transcendingly lovely! Such wondrous power! such comprehensive wisdom! such sure and universal justice! Sinful man, you cannot escape it. Justice shall be done and you cannot prevent it. Can immortal spirits look with delight on bloody wars? Can savage, wicked usurpers of rights go unpunished? Can dying sinners form governments and compel obedience? Weak, unhappy man! your power does not work the well-being of your race; for selfishness is made your paramount object; you destroy innocent babes in their mother's arms, and pride yourself in your greatness; you make widows and orphans, and boast of your prowess; put cities in ruins, and herald your triumphs. How dreadful to behold a world bathed in blood! How gloomy to see brothers in mortal combat, striving to crush each other to death! Poor sinful man! why will you destroy that which you cannot create? Will the widows you bereave honor your bravery? Can you honor God by making homeless his children? Why, in the name of heaven, will you not learn wisdom of poor grovelling worms, and honor, like them, your oppressed fellow clay? Time will not rest in your joy, tyrannical man! your powers will soon end, and the worms will enjoy your corruption. Make childless mothers while you can; clothe the widow and orphan in mourning; waste cities, and make homeless families. Your time is short, and others will soon take all you have obtained by oppressing unhappy brethren. Death will not respect your honorable name, nor your mighty deeds. You will go hence to be known on earth no more for ever!"

In the above there are some very good exhortations, and at the same time a great deal of unmeaning words; and where principles are touched, some of them are true and some false. In speaking of the views of immortal spirits, it would occupy too much space to discuss them. We are asked, "Can dying sinners form governments and compel obedience?" To this we would simply answer: they have done it in almost all nations, with proof of which the world's history is pregnant. They do now, in Europe and other parts of the globe—of which in Europe, Poland, Hungary, Russia, Austria, Prussia, France and other nations are forcible examples.

In looking over the whole of these communications, we find a strange admixture of truth and error in the principles advanced. Some of the language is indeed beautiful, approaching the sublime; but even in this, there is frequently a rambling, undefined, grandiloquent verbosity, evidently without aim, point, or object. In its analyzation it will not bear the touchstone of truth, nor a strict scriptural and logical scrutiny. In saying this, we express our candid opinion; we are speaking of the communications of these spirits, and mean to cast no reflections upon the gentleman, our present correspondent, who has forwarded them.

We now come to our correspondent's remarks:

"Kind sir, time and space will not permit me to continue the foregoing communication farther at this time. The original covers many pages of foolscap, and treats of a variety of subjects. Others succeeded it, which were mostly of a prophetic nature; they speak of a new order of things, in which shall prevail peace and harmony; they call my attention to the old prophecies, and also to the sayings and teachings of Jesus and the Apostles, and tell me that their predictions are about to be fulfilled, and that the 'latter days' spoken of in scripture are at hand, and that 'God's kingdom' is about to be set up on earth. I claim not to understand what these things mean; for I am not one versed in ancient or modern lore. But I do claim to know that there is a power above man's which can make itself understood as well now as of yore; and I have yet to learn that it is a wicked power.

I have heard much of the sect called Mormons through their enemies; but never a word from a friend of their cause; and from all I have heard I cannot but regard them as a people who have been much slandered and abused. I know nothing definite of their faith or practice; consequently I am unable to determine whether I am a Mormon or not. I live in what is called civilized society; but I am not civilized according to its interpretation of the term. I believe in practical, every-day Christianity; that which 'feeds the hungry, clothes the naked, and binds up the broken hearted.' I find by experience that names are not always things, and that much goes by the name of Christianity which has not its essential attributes."

Practical, every-day Christianity is the only one worth having; if it does not feed the hungry and clothe the naked, it is not Christianity; morality, benevolence and humanity will do this even without Christianity, of which many sceptics are living examples.

In relation to the setting up of the Kingdom of God in the last days—a millennial reign, when peace and harmony shall prevail—this is abundantly contained in the scriptures of both the Old and New Testaments; and many different parties have deduced this from the scriptures, but that is all; there they have left it, for want of a living authority or priesthood—having no commission from on High—and for want also of the Spirit of God or the gift of the Holy Ghost to enlighten their minds. The Mormons have had revelation upon this matter; and their preaching, doctrines, ordinances and general movements, as well as the gathering and setting-up of this kingdom—the Kingdom of God—are based upon this and guided by it.

In relation to your knowledge of an invisible spiritual agency, distinct from that of man's, we do not dispute, neither do we question in the least your sincerity. In relation to Mormonism, we must beg leave to refer you to our publications. Concerning your views of civilization, we can sympathize with you; we are experienced in this matter; as a people, we have drank its bitter cup to the very dregs.

"I am sensible of progress from my infancy, and I believe that man is a progressive being. But I believe all truth to be the same, 'yesterday, to-day, and forever.'

God spake in times to prophets and apostles, and why may he not do the same to-day? It is not for me to say that Mahomet was not his true prophet, sent to a peculiar people, with a peculiar message.

There are practices among that people which are obnoxious to our law makers, and our law makes claim to be christian. Is it the mission of Christians to devastate empires? Is oppression a part of Christianity? If it is, I am no Christian, and must confess that I misunderstand the character and teachings of 'Jesus of Nazareth.' I venerate his character, for I regard him as a peaceable, loving being, and moreover, a TOLERANT BEING! It was not his mission to condemn even the adulterers! Would that men could now, in our time, be like the Master they profess to serve. And yet it is not for me to say that every thing is not as it should be. What we see may be part of God's plan to establish purity permanently on earth. It must be so, and the 'latter days' must be approaching, that the 'millennium' may follow—that glorious era, in which the 'lion and the lamb' are to 'lie down together:' in which 'my people,' saith God, 'shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places.'

I perceive that I am becoming somewhat lengthy, and must therefore draw my epistle to a close. I am indebted to the columns of the Tribune for the knowledge that you and others of your people were residing in New York. And my invisible guardians have directed me to communicate the foregoing facts to you. What their object is, I know not. I am sensible of their presence always on all occasions; I have been directed by them in my business transactions for upwards of two and a half years, and I can truly say that I have led a life of adventure during that time; and every day's experience has strengthened in my mind the conviction that I have a mission to fulfil on earth for the good of my race. Such was the purport of nearly the first communication I had from angels. Indeed, they made me write the leading incidents of my whole future life, a part of which have already been fulfilled. If the rest of them are fulfilled, as I wrote them nearly three years ago, I shall take no mean part in transactions which are to affect the future welfare of the human race on earth.

I was formerly a disbeliever in inspiration, both modern and ancient; I should have continued an infidel to this day, had I not have been made sensible of 'divine presence.' I differ from those who are called 'Spiritualists' in many material points."

You say that "God spake in times past to prophets and apostles, and why may he not do the same to-day?" We know that he has. This is a principle for which the Mormons have contended for the last twenty-six years. They have endured obloquy, reproach, persecution, robbery, banishment, and in many instances death, for the belief and proclamation of this principle. Concerning Mahommet, we beg to leave him in the hands of God; he has fulfilled his role, and God, and not man, must settle that matter.

You ask: "Is it the mission of Christians to devastate empires?" Those nations called Christian do this; but their acts are not christian, according to Christ.

"I hold that there are a 'diversity of gifts by the same spirit,' and that all spirits are the Spirit of God, and that a spirit becomes fully developed and a part of the 'Godhead' as soon as it leaves the clay. I believe the 'word of the Lord,' which came to prophets, was 'angel whispers.' I believe 'the Holy Ghost,' which gave Apostles' utterance, was the power of angels or spirits. And I believe those same angels had 'Jesus in charge,' and directed him in all he said and did.

I live in an obscure quarter of the globe, and am by profession a farmer. I was born in the woods, and have never been out of them much since my boyhood. I am thirty-five years of age, and have a wife and three children; they are daughters, from two and a half to seven years of age. I feel an anxiety about their future welfare, which I cannot express in words. I would have them escape the baneful bond which bound their mother to me; and yet I would see them bearing children, when Nature fits them for that function, and they desire them. Not such children as 'Ishmael' was, but rather such as Isaac was—children of 'promise,' children of 'freedom,' children of God: or, in other words, children of nature, like the birds which 'know no guile.'

I have felt the power of example, as I see examples set before my children which do not please me; yet those examples are not called wicked, but rather respectable and righteous, because fashionable, and sanctioned by laws made by men. Truly, 'a wicked and adulterous generation' hath sprung up, and here am I in the midst of them. Moreover, laws have compelled me to be one of them to a certain extent. And what I am and have been, my children must be, if God in His infinite mercy does not work some miracle for their salvation.

I have no respect for 'Uncle Sam,' or 'Uncle John Bull,' or any other uncle that ever lived in the shape of a usurper and tyrant. I believe in the 'divine right of kings,' when God anoints them, never otherwise. And I hope to live to see one 'reign in righteousness' somewhere. I wish you would tell me whether I am a Mormon or not. If I am, or near enough one to become one of you, I wish you would tell me something about the 'Salt Lake' valley, and your prospects there. I hope to hear from you at all events soon; and if my communications are acceptable, you shall hear from me again."

In regard to this declaration of your faith, we must beg leave to differ with you in many particulars. The following are our reasons:

We do not believe, as you, "that all spirits are the spirit of God." Some spirits are full of uncleanness, corruption, and blasphemy, and thousands and millions are the spirits of devils. See Rev. xvi. 14. In the days of Jesus and his Apostles many devils were cast out of persons that were possessed by them; in one instance a legion was cast out of one man. These devils were evil spirits, that threw men down, controlled their tongues or whole bodies.—Matt. xii. 22; Luke iv. 33–35. The Apostles had power in most instances to cast these out. We have seen human bodies possessed of devils, and have seen them cast out. Such spirits are not the spirits of God. We are told that a third part of the angels in Heaven were cast out for disobedience. Their doom is to exist without bodies, and hence their desire to possess the bodies of others. All the spirits of men do not, when they leave this clay, "become a part of the Godhead." Jesus preached to spirits in prison that had been confined there from the days of Noah.—1 Pet. iii. 19. See also Isaiah xxiv. 21, 22. In Rev. xxi. there is a holy city spoken of, in which God and the Lamb are to dwell; but "there shall not enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of Life."—verse 27. Again, in chap. xxii., "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city; for without are dogs and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whatsoever loveth and maketh a lie." If this is true, there will be a great many in this nation who will not "compose a part of the Godhead." In fact, to be candid, if all the vile, corrupt scum that we see around us are going into heaven and the presence of God, we shall speak for another place.

We do not believe with you, that "the word of the Lord that came to prophets was angels' whispers," nor that the "Holy Ghost which gave Apostles utterance was the power of angels or spirits." The Prophets and Apostles "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," as "the spirit of God gave them utterance"—not angels; there is a difference between angels and the spirit of God; angels are resurrected beings; spiritual personages are those without bodies. The Holy Ghost is an emanation from God, or an operation of the spirit of God, bearing an affinity to, acting in conjunction with, and enlightening, instructing, and comforting man. The Prophets were sometimes operated on solely by this spirit, and came with the "burden of the word of the Lord;" at other times they had visions, as Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and others; at other times angels appeared as to Ananias, Elizabeth, and Paul; as Moses and Elias did to Jesus, Peter, James, and John; as angels did to John on the Isle of Patmos, and also to Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Gideon, and scores of others mentioned in the Old Testament; and to Joseph Smith and others on this continent. When angels came they came openly and made plain declarations. There was no mystery or whispering.

In relation to what you say about angels always having Jesus in charge. You will find in the scriptures that the devil had him in charge in the wilderness—see Matt. iv.—and that afterwards angels of God ministered to him. You will find him alone in the garden, "sweating great drops of blood," and forsaken by angels, and God on the cross, crying, "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me."

In relation to the bonds of which you speak, we do not believe in the present order of marriage; we believe in eternal covenants and relationships; but we believe in fulfilling our present engagements, and we most strenuously believe in purity, chastity, and virtue. See Orson Pratt's work on celestial marriage, P. P. Pratt's, on morals and marriage in Utah. Politically, we believe that all nations are corrupt; but we believe in sustaining all governments where we reside. We believe the United States government is the best human government on the earth; but that it is very corruptly administered; we do not, however, believe that it is the Kingdom of God.

You will perceive, sir, that we have been at considerable pains to unravel or answer your questions. Whatever may be your opinion, we have done it in good faith. You ask—"Am I a Mormon, or near enough to become one?" You are indeed not a Mormon, as you will perceive. But any honest man who is willing to repent of his sins, be baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins, and have hands laid on him for the gift of the Holy Ghost, by those holding authority from Heaven, and then feeling disposed to keep the commandments of God, and live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, can be a Mormon.

Public Meetings.

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS hold their Meetings every SUNDAY, in the large hall of the Assembly Rooms, 561 Broome street, at 3 and 6½ P. M.

To the Priesthood of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in the Eastern States.

AS IT HAS pleased the Lord in His infinite wisdom and goodness, and by His over-ruling Providence to gather many of His servants from other countries to the United States, it seems unto us and unto the servants of the Most High in Zion, that the testimony of those holding the priesthood from abroad, now temporary located in the East, should be joined to that of the Elders who have long labored to spread the Gospel of Christ among those who sit in darkness. To accomplish this, and to give full scope to every one to magnify his holy calling, we wish the Presidents of Conferences to give this their earliest attention, to make it a subject of prayer and calm consideration, that the Lord may manifest by His Spirit the instructions and counsel necessary for the Priesthood to receive in entering upon this field of labor.

Where the Saints are located in considerable numbers, as at Philadelphia, New York and other places, the Presidents of the branch should divide the city or town in districts—4, 6, 8 or 12, as the number of Saints and the magnitude of the place may suggest, and appoint faithful men, zealous of good works, full of fire and the Holy Ghost, to preside over the Saints living in each district; and where any of the brethren can furnish a suitable room for meeting, let the Saints assemble there for testimony, prayer, exhortation, teaching and preaching as the Spirit of the Lord may manifest through him who presides. To these meetings the Saints should invite their neighbors, and working men and working women can invite those with whom they are associated during the day to pass a profitable hour at such a place in the evening.

There are many honest folks now in these States who never heard a good word of the Mormons or Mormonism, and being satisfied that all is not true that has been reported, they are desirous of having an opportunity of learning for themselves and from the Mormons what their principles really are, as it is possible that all they have heard may turn out to be as false as that which they have already proved to be so. We are under obligations, therefore, to the cause we have espoused, to the honest and upright who seek truth and correct principles, and to ourselves, to spread abroad our testimony, and not to hide it up in a napkin or place our light under a bushel.

Every Elder, Priest, Teacher and Deacon is expected to labor in this work, in building up the Saints in their faith, in humbly warning the people against wickedness and in bearing testimony to the work of Salvation which the Lord has begun in these days. No man should hold the priesthood and a standing in this Kingdom without co-operating continually for its advancement by word and deed—idleness is not tolerated in the Kingdom—"Labor while it is called to-day," is the watchword.

We wish all to speak the truth in plainness, simplicity, adding nought to it, nor detracting aught from it to suit any person. If truth is not enough to turn a man from the error of his ways, leave him; if to be ranked on the side of God, Christ, Abraham, ancient prophets and apostles is not glory enough for any one, bear a humble testimony with prudence, and leave him, he yet may be glad to return like the prodigal son, from rioting and slavery to his father's orderly house.

Let the Saints, one and all, purify themselves, and make the light of truth to burst forth on the right hand and upon the left, in cities, towns, villages and cottages let these meetings be held, and the Great Shepherd will pour out His Spirit upon the faithful who bear testimony, and the Holy Ghost will witness to the honest in heart that the truth is with us, and many will be brought to rejoice in the plan of redemption, while the Saints rejoice more abundantly.

To Subscribers.

WE beg to remind our subscribers of the termination of the second volume of THE MORMON, with the issue of our next number. Many subscriptions will then be run out; but believing that we are destined to increase and not to decrease, we shall forward as usual to the present subscribers, and rely upon their honor for a prompt remittance of the new subscription with any arrearages and as many new names as they have received for the commencement of the new volume. We expect promptness now as many were disappointed last year through our not publishing a larger edition of the first and second numbers.

We shall in future expect all orders from Europe for THE MORMON, to come through the office of President Orson Pratt, 42 Islington street, Liverpool, as it is much easier for monies to be paid through that office to us than by isolated remittances. We shall, however, post for subscribers to any portion of the globe as we shall be instructed.

A Horrible Murder in New York.

ANOTHER foul and horrible murder has been added to the long black catalogue of crimes committed in this modern Sodom. At this present writing the murderer is or murderers are still undiscovered; but the examination of persons in the house where the diabolical deed has been committed throws strong suspicion upon more than one person familiar with the building. The papers are making additional pence by publishing a full and particular description of the place of blood, the examination of witnesses, and the crime is the subject of conversation everywhere.

Dr. Harvey Burdell, a respectable and wealthy Dentist of 31 Bond street, is the victim: the parties in custody awaiting the result of the Coroner's investigation, are Mr. John J. Eckel, a person of 36 years of age—dealer in hides and tallow, and Mr. George Vail Snodgrass—son of the Rev. Dr. Snodgrass, of Goshen, Orange Co., N. Y.—a young man about 19 years of age, engaged in a hard-ware store in the city. From the information elicited during the investigation the facts are as follows:

Dr. Burdell was proprietor of the house wherein he was murdered, and occupied the second floor in the practice of his profession, and had there likewise his sleeping room. The remaining portion of the house was rented from him by a Mrs. Cunningham, a widow with two daughters in their teens and two sons. Mrs. C. kept "single gentlemen" boarders, but the only male persons in the house at the time of the murder were the persons above named, and the Hon. Daniel Ullman, who rented a room on the third floor. To Mr. Eckel, Mrs. C. seems to have had no dislike and Miss Helen C. and Mr. Snodgrass were on talking and walking terms. The Dr. was last seen alive there between 5 and 6 P. M. of Friday, and on Saturday morning the boy who kindled the fire and made himself generally useful to the Dr., found his body lying in a pool of blood. Frightened, he made the alarm, assistance came, and the lifeless body when lifted from the floor showed there had been strangulation and no less than fourteen deep and murderous wounds. Twice had the dagger pierced the heart, and by it the juglar vein had been severed. When Mrs. C. and daughters heard the news after breakfast, there was a general time of screaming and fainting at which Mr. Snodgrass made himself serviceable to the ladies; but Mr. Eckel had, according to previous appointment, gone early out on business.

Since the murder, Mrs. C. has exhibited a marriage certificate by which she claims to be Mrs. Burdell, having been privately married by a minister of the Reformed Dutch Church, on the 28th of last October to Dr. B. That she was married to somebody of which the daughter was the only witness, is corroborated by the minister and his servants identifing her as the lady; but of the murdered man being that other person, they cannot swear. The minister having at the time thought there were false whiskers and subsequently found that the name given him was Berdell and not Burdell, as the Dr. was called. The servants in the house of Mrs. C. do not testify of seeing anything like intimacy between the Dr. and Mrs. C., but all witness that they had had words about important papers taken from the Doctor's safe or desk. Mr. Eckel's bedroom was next to that of Mrs. C. on the third floor, and a simple Bridget, from the Emerald Isle, fearing to do her conscience hurt, thought from what she saw that it was right to tell all she thought, and among other things she thought that Mr. Eckel might yet marry Mrs. C., and had reasons for supposing a greater intimacy between them than between Mrs. C. and the Dr. Be it as it may, a murder has been committed in the house, and bloody garments found in an open closet on the attic floor, and important papers in the private secretary of Mr. Eckel. The Dr. generally returned after 10 at night, but on Friday night everybody slept so sound that his return was never heard, and though from the walls and floor besmeared with blood there is every evidence that there had been a severe struggle, not a disturbing sound reached the ear of any of the inmates.

A person living opposite the house heard the cry of murder between 10 and 11 o'clock, Mr. Ullman found all quiet on his return a little after midnight: after 1 A. M., a lady and gentleman returning from a party had their attention attracted to the smell of woollen rags burning. To the fire place in the attic traces of blood have been found from the body of the Dr. and the ashes of the fire place are to be thoroughly examined. While the investigation is proceeding, it is criminal to blame; but there is little doubt of the officers of justice being on the right track.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THERE is nothing very special at home worthy of particular notice. The most that we observe prominently in the papers of the United States, is crime, seduction, duelling, rowdyism, robberies, murder—and the fashionable "garroting," a business which seems to be considerably on the increase everywhere. We have taken particular notice of the Bond street murder in another column, as it certainly has more of the public attention at the present time than anything else—probably on account of the sphere in which the victim and the suspected moved, and what is not unlikely there is money on hand to pay considerable expenses. Other cases of stabbing here and in Brooklyn speak loudly of the times in which we live. We wonder how the public journalists here can screw up enough of brazen-faced imprudence to hatch and publish their stories about Utah, while not a soul of them can move a hundred yards in the dark without apprehension of danger, leaving aside the many offers, yea, petitions to the commission of the foul crime of prostitution which beset every man in "Gotham by gaslight."

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

LITTLE or no news of importance have "come across the seas," since our last issue. The Swiss question is expected to be settled by this time, but nothing definite is known, more than what we have already published. From China there is intelligence of the American Commander of the United States navy there taking possession of some forts, because of the Chinese firing upon an American vessel, and their having beheaded three Americans and hanging their heads over the walls. The latter act probably occurred by mistaking them from the English. The barbarians are waiting the movements of the Celestials and orders from home.

Lord Napier was to leave England on the 7th inst., with his staff of attaches for Washington, and a new batch of Consuls.

Arrivals in Liverpool.

ELDERS Thomas Bullock, James G. Browning, John H. Tippets, William Brown, Henry Harris, Thomas Peirce and Daniel Page, Jr., arrived in Liverpool on the 11th of January.

Correspondence of President E. Snow.

The following correspondence is more of a private than a public nature; but as it is interesting, we have taken the liberty to present it to our readers. We hope our friend will forgive the liberty. And, furthermore, standing in his position and known by so extensive a circle, should he find time from his multitudinous cares to give us an account of any more of his rambles or other items of interest, we shall be most happy to serve them the same:

JANESVILLE, Wis., Jan. 27, 1857.

PRES'T. JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Bro.: I seize a few moments to address you this evening from this cold country, and at this cold season, that you may know that I am not altogether congealed.

I arrived here this evening after a two-days' buffeting of snow drifts, between Chicago and this place, (a distance of 91 miles in a North-Northwestern course) following the lead of two iron horses which were very furious in charging, snorting, bunting, kicking and floundering mid the snow which they ever and anon pitched into. Though often they forced a passage and sent the fragments whirling through the air, they quite as often were perfectly surrounded by the opposing elements, and taken by storm, without the possibility of retreat or escape until an Irish regiment (always kept in reserve) came to the rescue with spades and shovels.

The Winter has thus far been severe through all the West as far as I have been able to learn.

I spent the first Sabbath after I left you, in company with Col. Smith, at Philadelphia, where we added our mite in favor of the MORMON and of the interests of the cause in general.

You are already aware that I spent a week in Washington, the last three days of which, however, more from necessity than inclination, being literally blocked in by the heavy snow-storm of the 19th inst.

On Wednesday the 21st, at 6 o'clock A. M., supposing the coast to be clear, I ventured to start, thinking I had ample time to reach this place and spend the Sabbath with my oldest sister and her family, who resides a few miles northward of this place, but I found all the rail roads on the route there "out of geer," by the storm and severity of the weather, and trains out of time; and crippled engines—smashed-up cars—and broken limbs and noses, were scattered and seen along the various lines between the Atlantic coast and the Great West, so that when I found myself "brought-up standing" with the privilege of spending the Sabbath in Chicago, before a warm fire, I thought myself fortunate that no surgeon had found it necessary to trim off any of my limbs or trepan my skull.

Among the passengers from Chicago, was Capt. Wm. Keneda, late of Lady Franklin's Ship "Prince Albert," who says he fell in with Dr. Kane in the Arctic Seas, and enjoyed in close proximity to him, a few months' "hug" in the ice during the doctor's first voyage in that interesting region. The captain proved to be a very sociable and interesting companion; and while Pat's shovel was clearing the track, he filled up the intervals of time with interesting sketches of his adventures by sea and land in the northern regions. He is now on his way to St. Paul, Minnesota, whence he intends journeying with snow-shoes 670 miles Northwest to the British settlement on the Red River of the North, which he represents to be in a flourishing condition; consisting of ten thousand Europeans, mostly Scotch and French, who carry on an over-land trade with the town of St. Paul. A steamboat is already being built on Red River, and at no very distant period they anticipate, through the patronage of the British and American Governments, that Lake Winnepeg will be connected by steam communication with Superior on the Southeast, and Hudsons Bay on the Northeast.

I spent the week in Washington very agreeably so far as seeing and hearing was concerned and visiting with Col. Smith and Hon. J. M. Bernhisel; but could not effect any satisfactory adjustment of business matters, nor were the departments disposed to favor our undertakings upon the frontiers, or our efforts to facilitate emigration and the transportation of mails and merchandise over the plains. They have a narrow-contracted policy, and an intuitive jealousy of every movement of the Saints, however enterprising, laudible and patriotic. If, however, the Saints, unaided by government patronage, and despite their fears and jealousies, resolutely struggle on as we have done in years past, and succeed in establishing a line of permanent settlements stretching out from the Missouri River to California, they will have accomplished much good for Israel, besides a great national work, in determining the pathway of the iron horse to the Pacific, and hastening the work of encircling the world with steam navigation and electric wires.

After a short visit with my relatives in this vicinity, I expect to return to St. Louis, where I shall be happy to receive any suggestions which you may have for me in reference to future operations, and the great work of God in which we are engaged.

With much love for yourself and associates, I remain, as ever, your Brother and fellow-laborer in Christ, ERASTUS SNOW.

We were about to write a private letter in return, but have concluded to publish that too.

Brother Snow—Who cares about Uncle Sam's jealousy, and twisting and wiggling, and niggardlyness and fears? It is simply the nature of the old man; he has always treated his Utonian nephew in the same way. The rest of the boys keep stuffing his ears so with every kind of lies and gammon, and he hears so much about their little cos, that the old fellow is really, at last, sincerely jealous; and what at first he took to be fun, he actually now believes. Lies have positively overcome his better judgment. Like Joseph, the son of Jacob, the little chap is persecuted, hated, despised, and cast out; and if the boys actually knew of anything that they could do to dispose of him, as Joseph's brethren did of him, to the Ishmaelites, no doubt they would do it. Mormonism is quite as much in the way of many of the rulers of this land, as Joseph was in the way of many of his brethren. Nevertheless, none of them can tell why. Little Ute has never injured them, nor interfered with them. If they have been troubled, it has been merely by a phantom, or perhaps a dream, the same as Joseph, the son of Jacob, had, and they are afraid it will come true. They have tried to make the little fellow angry. Many of the boys have put chips on their shoulders, and dared him to knock them off, but he told them he did not want to fight; they have not only cheated him at marbles, but stolen his; he didn't say much, he merely put his hands in his pockets and whistled "Yankee Doodle." They have thrust their fists under his nose, still he was quiet. They have stolen his dinner and eaten his cakes; all the little fellow then said, "guess you're hungry—there's more where that came from." They got up a fuss with some neighboring boys, and called on him for help, and thought, after all they'd done to him, that he would't fight, and then they would tell Uncle; but wouldn't he, though! The little fellow shouldered his musket, sung "Hail Columbia," and made the Mexicans vamose; still they were vexed that he would fight, because it proved them liars when the little fellow showed his grit; for they always called him coward, because he would not knock chips off their shoulders and make a row among his relations. His reason was, that he lived in hopes that by-and-by they would see their meanness, and own up: he didn't know that they were so tarnation bad. In California he found a big chunk of gold, and they filched it from him and kicked him away; but the little fellow still lives, spite of all their kicking, and snorting and thieving, and is getting quite a chunk of a young feller; and he begins to understand their tricks better, and thinks he is big enough now to be a man and manage his own affairs, and talks as though he could do it a darn'd sight better than they can do it for him, and we partly believe it, for they are a very meddlesome, cantankarous set, and are always fighting and quarrelling with one another, and it's only when they are not doing this that they all turn round and pound him; the poor sneaks; better mind their own business. He begins to step up to 'em, and talks like he was in earnest. He says: "Guess you've poked your fun, and stole my marbles, and driven me from my play-ground, and shown your meanness, long enough; now, darn you, mind your own business; guess I'm some pumpkins; clear out and let me alone, you tarnal, sneaking, lying, plundering possums; I'm not going to be robbed any more; darn you, work for yourselves, and don't come robbing me, you mean cusses; and if Uncle Jonathan don't take care of me, and protect me as he does others, I know who can protect themselves, I guess I does; so stand clear; let me alone, that's all I asks." In fact, the young fellow sometimes gets up his dander; some thought he was so religious he'd stand anything; but he says he won't; and so there. He is a first-rate, honest sort of a fellow; but then he won't stand everything; he's not short of pluck, but he's an almighty kind of an affectionate young fellow, and he never wanted to make a row in the family, and he allers thought as how old Uncle Jonathan would, by-and-by, see how he was imposed on and belied by the boys, and would do him justice; for he really has a mighty regard for the old man, and I've often heard him say, "if any of the youngsters interfered with Nunky Jonathan he'd give 'em fits."

The fact of the matter is, Bro. Snow, we are in the hands of God, and so are the rulers of this nation; we have done our duty both as saints and patriots, and are at the defiance of the world to prove to the contrary; and with all their bluster, their cant and hypocrisy, there is not a man among them who has met, or who dare meet, Mormonism fairly on its issues, either religiously, morally, or politically. There is plenty of valiant men among the Priests, Editors, and Statesmen, who can rant and roar and talk about Mormon abominations, Mormon polygamy, and the unconstitutional acts of Mormons; but not one of the craven herd dare meet it on its issues; they can do nothing but howl; while the potent principles of truth roll on unconquered, uninjured, and unscathed by their incessant whines and false accusations. The truth has prevailed and will prevail, and all is well, all is right, all is peace with us. The Great God is at the helm, and controls all our affairs. Utah and her destinies are in His hands, and so are the rulers of this nation, and so are we; and whilst we diligently do our duty in assisting to roll forth His great purposes, no power on this side of Heaven can stop its onward progress.

Judgments.

UNCHARITABLE animadversions on the affairs of others are in no case so reprehensible as when they are delivered with the view of pointing out the special interference of an overruling power, invisibly punishing those who have strayed from the straight path of duty—"Judge not, lest ye be judged"—is a glorious admonition which should be written deeply in every man's heart, and be for ever acting as a bridle upon our tongues. But to judge our neighbors under an imperfect knowledge of their character and motives is much less criminal than to clench our uncharitable arguments by assuming that the sufferings we are adverting to are produced by the special interposition of the Deity. This is downright profanity, however unintentional, and is certainly little in conformity with the authoritative injunctions given for our moral and religious guidance. Besides being profane—it is presumptuous egotism. We imagine, forsooth, that we can trace the Almighty in the execution of his great and incomprehensible purposes. We pretend to say this is His doing, and that is not His doing. We imagine that He stops the course of events, deranges the universal action of His decrees, in order to bring about a particular circumstance which could not be brought about by any other means. How weak and dangerous are all such imaginings; everything is under the government, and effected by the designs of a supreme Being, who created and overlooks all, but we have no right on that account to place ourselves aloof, as it were, on advantage ground, and say that He has caused such and such an event to happen, expressly to accomplish such and such a design. His ways, we are told, are past finding out, and how unbecoming is it therefore, to arrogate to ourselves ability to point out these ways, and thereupon found our uncharitable conclusions. Notwithstanding the absurdity of thus interpreting what are called "Judgments," there is hardly anything more common, among some classes of people, than a habit of remarking that accidental evils happening to individuals are signal instances of Divine vengeance. "Ay, ay," will they say to one another, on the occasion of a violent death, or, perhaps, an unusually severe disease befalling some unpopular individual, "I always thought a judgment would follow him." The exceedingly wise and virtuous class of people who in this manner publish and comment upon the verdicts of the Creator, are, somehow singularly remiss in recording the evils which in a like manner befall those who, in their opinion, do not require the visitations of the destroying angel, either upon their persons or to their households. If they can see the finger of the Almighty in one instance, they ought to be able to see it in all. The experience of every man proves that misfortunes are rained upon the just as well as the unjust. Who is he that could not say he knows persons of acknowledged depravity of principle and habit, living in affluence, and enjoying all the comforts which this world can bestow, while on the other hand, he sees piety clothed in rags, and begging for bodily sustenance at the corners of the streets? Who is he who has not seen the vicious exempted from personal injury, and the virtuous subjected to cruel tortures? Among the innumerable accidents that occur in a closely-huddled population, of what use is it to select one and say, "This is what the unhappy victim might have expected," and then let hundreds of others pass unnoticed. Has every poor infant who has been run down and mangled by the rapid passing vehicle, deserved its unhappy fate? Have ship-wrecks and conflagrations destroyed the lives of none but the bad? Certainly not. If such things had been, we should be constrained to believe, whenever we saw a friend agonized with pain, but who was not known to have committed any atrocity, that he was now undergoing punishment for some secret but heinous crime, while those who recovered from any grievous disease would ever after be held to have fallen from the ranks of integrity. We should soon lose all sympathy for affliction when peculiarly severe, and turn on our heel remarking, coldly, that it was the inevitable consequence of abandoned courses. Into such inconsistences of judgment, unworthy suspicions, and hardness of heart should we be invariably conducted were we to abandon the rule which has been delivered to us. "Those eighteen men upon whom the Tower of Siloam fell and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you nay, but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Nothing can be more plain than this warning, that we are not to presume to connect the misfortunes or sufferings of any fellow-being, with the actions of his life. We may assure ourselves that we are perfectly safe in leaving the iniquitous to work out their own punishment, which they will sooner or later do either mentally or in their outward circumstances, but as for setting ourselves up as interpreters of how and when this punishment is inflicted that unquestionably comes not within our province. Keeping out of view both the profanity and the presumption of interpreting Divine judgments, it may be noticed the practice has an injurious instead of a beneficial effect upon society. In trying to make it subservient to religious purposes, it is wrested to effect quite opposite ends. We recollect reading a story in an old magazine which illustrates this point in a singularly happy degree. Some missionaries had established a station in an island, and for the greater convenience of instruction began to assemble round them such of the natives as they supposed themselves to have converted; many of these, however, having acted merely under the impulse of curiosity or from the desire of novelty, deserted after a few days' experience of regular agricultural labor and of the religious exercises with which the missionaries endeavored to enlighten them. One man making his escape in the dark, fell and broke his leg. This circumstance was made use of by the preachers, to impress the ignorant people with an awe of the Deity, whose doctrine they taught it was, they declared a manifest judgment against the sufferer for abandoning the faith he had embraced. For a few weeks the representation was not without its effect, but a boat bringing to the island some Bibles which had been translated into the language of the place, was swamped, the rowers drowned, and the books lost. Upon this, the natives, whose confidence in their own creed had been recently considerably shaken, gathered fresh courage. In their controversies with the strange teachers they immediately turned their own weapons against themselves, and argued that the boat was wrecked by the power of the gods of the island, to prevent the introduction of false and dangerous opinions. "The Being whom you worship could only break a poor fellow's leg," said they, "but a more signal judgment is performed by our deities; they have sent to the bottom of the sea the books with which you meant to ensnare us—and have punished with death the men who were impiously conveying them to our shores." What answer could the missionaries return to this application of their own arguments? How incalculable was the mischief they had done to the cause they were sent thither to advance! and how grossly ignorant must they have been of the real doctrines of Christianity, or how shamefully did they pervert them, when they presumed to decide on the character and meaning of the accident which had occurred.

[The foregoing lengthy article has been forwarded to us by "A Constant Reader," friend or foe we don't know. It is with principles we have to deal and not with men, and though we are inclined to believe that the writer is no Mormon we give his communication a place in our paper, as it may serve to give a check to a too great penchant which some have for the practice which he writes.

We have long been convinced that nothing will teach men true principles so effectively as experience, and that same schoolmaster teaches us that all men have not the capacity to receive and appreciate the same intelligence, hence, as a public teacher we believe it our duty to give general instructions, and count on individuals picking up principle connected with the shifting and varying scenes of life by their association with and relation to men and things. While we endorse "A Constant Reader's" sentiments in opposition to the practice of regarding all prosperity the favor of heaven, and all adversity and misfortune its frown we are deeply convinced in the overruling power of God in the nations for the accomplishment of His purposes. An earthly father, if worthy of the name, teaches his children sound moral principles—supporting them by his own example, and as the untutored and inexperienced are comparatively little able to appreciate the advantages of morality, before they have mixed with the world, known it, and in a measure overcome it, the parent naturally holds out inducements to him who will start to do right. Do right and live, sin and die. The youth starts in the struggle of life with the determination to be an honorable man, but soon learns the wickedness of the world and the respectability of error and crime. From inexperience more prone to follow respectability, the easy going crowd than to tread the rugged path almost alone—despised and upbraided he may waver—the parent, if near, speaks, encourages, the youth struggles. To go on honorably is his father's joy, and his parental blessing is with him, strengthing him to overcome the greater trials that may yet lie before him; but let the son renounce the ways of life, and no hand can save him, though many an affectionate tongue might cry repent, turn and live. If in the struggle an overwhelming superior power should threaten the path of him who struggles to do right the fond parent could righteously ward the blow. So we believe in the interference of the Most High. He could raise up a Moses to befriend helpless Israel, and when a Pharoah threatened their destruction, He could shield and protect the weak; but when the weak did wickedly themselves, turned from the path of life, their bones were left in the wilderness. With Kings the Ruler above has interfered, and can, and does, when it seemeth good, raise up one and put down another, and so He can and does act with individuals. He that keeps His commandments, trusts in Him for guidance and deliverance in every time of need, will realize with the ancients Saints and modern Saints that all things do work together for good to those who love God and keep His commandments, even though at the first moment of affliction they themselves may neither see wisdom nor favor in the afflicting rod.—ED.]

FOR THE MORMON.

Salvation.

BY ELDER JOHN HARDLEY.

In this age there is much said about salvation, much that is conflicting and consequently erronous, for the principles of salvation are true, and truth never conflicts with truth.

To seek salvation is a laudable pursuit, but to seek it as men in general do is to grope in the dark, notwithstanding the honesty and integrity of many who desire it above all earthly considerations. Early education has instilled into their minds a superstitious reverence for learned priests and doctors of divinity, hence, they ponder over their voluminous commentaries and accept them as true and infalliable guides, though their authors themselves cannot agree. To be led by such produces darkness rather than light, mystery instead of understanding, with doubt and perplexity following in their wake.

Repentance and faith are true principles when rightly exercised as a part of a great whole, but by no means to be considered sufficient to secure salvation, and he who trusts to them alone is certain to be deceived. Prayer is commendable and much crying there is about it among religionists as the sure and certain means of gaining the favor of heaven and eternal salvation, but a man may pray all the days of his life and yet not be saved and exalted in the Kingdom of God. Christians pray and so do heathens as fervently—are they both, then, through this to obtain salvation? No, say the christians, the heathen worship gods of wood and stone, and such divinities have no power to hear, see or deliver them. But, will the christians demonstrate that the god they worship can do more? He is according to them "without body, parts and passions," without form, no substance, something—or rather an inconceivable nonentity, whose existence is as incomprehensible as the power of the wooden, brass, stone, or golden images, or gods of heathendom. Who can wonder at the confusion, blindness and division of modern Christians? They are totally ignorant of the true and living God that manifested Himself to ancient Israel, and was a Father to Jesus and all upright men and women who kept His commandments. Christians are perversly ignorant of the nature and attributes of Jehovah and His relationship to man, hence, they can never worship Him aright in spirit and in truth, and to expect salvation from prayer addressed to a Being whose existence to them is a perfect haze of mist, is simply ridiculous, to exercise faith in such a Being, based on mistified notions, is a moral impossibility. Alas! what an awful position, in what depth of ignorance is man plunged, and yet missionaries of tract societies and professional preachers boast of christian enlightment! Oh, that men would be wise and seek salvation in the proper channel, that they would walk in the good old paths where they could find rest to their souls. Oh, that the nations would listen and become obedient to the commandments of the Most High, sent forth through Apostles and Prophets now as anciently, then would darkness flee away, the true principles of salvation be food to the mind and the guide posts of life, and men would be no more tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine through those who seek to deceive, and would walk in the fear of God with consciousness of His favor and protection in their practice of righteousness. But, alas! men in this age are no wiser than their forefathers. Already they have killed Prophets and Apostles, and rejected salvation at their hands. Oh, wicked generation, how long will ye rejoice in darkness, reject the light of Heaven? Honest men: believe in God and in Jesus Christ, His Son, trust in Them, repent of your past sins, turn from them and commit them no more, be baptized by a duly commissioned servant of the Lord, one in whom he has vested his authority, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, which will lead you into all truth, and then you will comprehend the great plan of salvation, and doubting and uncertainty will have no place in your bosom.

Correspondence of Eld. L. O. Littlefield.

CRESCENT CITY, Iowa,
Jan. 8, 1857.

ELDER TAYLOR,—Dear Sir:—I received yours last evening, respecting the refunding of the two dollars I sent for the second vol. of the "Mormon." I certainly appreciate your friendly offer and am truly greatful that in memory you still associate me with that honorable corps of printers, who united in printing the word of truth, while the arrows of persecution and death were hurled at the devoted City of Nauvoo, and its heaven honored inhabitants. But, I still wish to cast in my mite for the furtherance of the same great cause; and, if not by my voice or pen bearing testimony, let it be by strengthening the hands of those able champions who have been sent into the field to wield the two-edged sword of truth and salvation. "The Mormon" is an able auxiliary of the gospel, and is scattered over the world, weekly, freighted with the rich treasures of eternal life; so let me, in conjunction with thousands more, put forth a hand, not to "steady the ark," but to strengthen the hands of those whose calling it is to hold it up to the world.

Our beloved brother Elder William Miller, of the Cherokee Mission, is now with us. His health is very much impaired. He is now slowly recovering from quite a severe attack of erysipelas. He is full of faith and anticipates meeting his family next season in the peaceful home of Utah. Yours with much respect,

L. O. LITTLEFIELD.

[It is some time since we heard from our friend L. O. Littlefield, and are much obliged for the pecuniary interest he manifests for THE MORMON, and should be glad to have contributions from his pen. Come, Bro. Littlefield, rub up, and let us hear from you. While we are in this great Babel Gotham, sending out a few principles of truth, and light is coming to you from the East, let us have a few streaks from the West.—ED.]

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29, 1857.

SENATE.

Mr. Trumbull presented the credentials of the Hon. James Harlan, elected Senator from Iowa, who was qualified and took his seat.

The official notification of the death of the Hon. Preston S. Brooks having been received from the House, a eulogy was pronounced by Mr. Evans, who expressed his regret that this to the deceased could not be paid by his worthy colleague, Mr. Butler, but the deep affliction which this sad event has occasioned him, in the loss of his dear friend and relative, had unfitted him for the performance of that duty.

Mr. Hunter, while professing his profound grief, hoped that this sad lesson would not be lost upon the living. While standing round the lifeless form of a deceased associate we are solemnly reminded of, the great brotherhood of humanity. Detraction should now cease to have an object at which to aim its shafts, for when one has paid the last debt of nature he has settled his accounts with man.

Mr. Toombs spoke briefly of the manly virtues of the deceased, but without concluding his remarks resumed his seat, being completely overcome by his feelings.

The usual resolutions of sympathy and regret were then adopted, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Keitt announced the death of Mr. Brooks, saying that his disease was acute inflamation of the throat, and so swift and fatal that even his medical advisers believed him to be in no danger within the briefest possible period of the time of his decease.

Mr. Brooks was born in Edgefield District, South Carolina, in 1819, and had served in the Legislature of that State, and in the Mexican war had rendered gallant service. He spoke of his long and intimate relations with the deceased, who, in his bearing, was frank and honest; in dispute, severe; and in friendship, delicious. Mr. Keitt then submitted a series of resolutions, expressing the deep sensibility with which the House had received the intelligence of the death of Mr. Brooks; tendering to the family of the deceased the sympathy of the House, and resolving that the members in token of respect wear crape on the left arm for thirty days.

These resolutions were subsequently unanimously adopted, and other honorable members spoke very highly of the deceased.

After a brief recess the corpse was brought into the House, and in the presence of the members of both branches of Congress, the President of the Cabinet, the Judges of the Supreme Court, Mr. Buchanan and others, the Rev. Mr. Waldo, Chaplain of the House, delivered a brief discourse (making no allusion to the deceased) from the words of our Saviour to the thief on the cross. "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," the object being to justify Christ in making that declaration to the penitant, and to show the necessity of repentance.

The House shortly afterward adjourned and the remains of Mr. Brooks were deposited in the Congressional Cemetery.

SENATE. Jan. 30.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. Houston's resolution, calling on the President to communicate the number and causes of desertions from the navy since the passage of the act to promote the Efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. Houston maintained that the service had been greatly benefited by that measure.

The Senate postponed the consideration of the subject, and, after the consideration of some unimportant business, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House, after being engaged on the private calendar all day, adjourned.

SENATE. Jan. 31.

The consideration of the Indian Appropriation bill was resumed. Mr. Hale, of N. H., commented in severe terms on the conduct of Governor Stevens in proclaiming martial law and arresting the Judge of the Federal Court of Washington Territory. Debate followed respecting the policy pursued towards the Indian tribes on the Pacific coast. Amendments were then agreed on appropriating nearly $700,000 for the restoration and maintenance of peace, &c., in Oregon and Washington Territories. No definite action was taken on the bill. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Grow, of Pa., from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill fixing the boundaries of Minnesota, and authorizing the people thereof to form for themselves a constitution and State government.

The bill provides for the admission of Minnesota into the Union on a footing with the original States, according to the federal constitution, and for an election to be held on the first Monday in June, for delegates to a convention to form a State constitution, and in the event of the people deciding in favor of a State government, the Marshal to proceed to take the census of Minnesota with the view of ascertaining the number of representatives she is entitled to under the present census. The same provisions are in this bill as in former ones of a similar character, relative to public lands, for education, &c., to be assented to as obligatory on both Minnesota and the United States.

Mr. Grow said the proposed State embraces 70,000 square miles, leaving west of the boundary about 90,000 square miles, to be hereafter erected into a government by the Indian name of Dacotah.

Mr. Grow said Minnesota would be about the size of Missouri, and that her population is between one hundred and seventy-five and two hundred thousand persons.

The bill was passed, by a vote of 98 against 74.

Mr. Grow, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill for the relief of the people of Kansas.

The provisions of the bill, with the exception of the boundaries, are similar to those in the Minnesota bill. It gives one representative to Congress.

Mr. Grow said the bill gives Oregon 56,000 square miles, and the population now was about 90,000.

Mr. Humphrey Marshall, of Ky., offered an amendment, which was agreed to by a vote of 71 against 49, confining the suffrages at the election for delegates to frame a constitution to citizens of the United States.

The bill subsequently passed, and the House adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 2.

On motion of Mr. Weller, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of War to communicate copies of all correspondence not heretofore furnished relative to the proceedings of the Vigilance Committee of 1856.

On motion of Mr. Pearce, a resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of War for all the information in his possession showing the results of the trials of the camels in the military service.

A resolution was adopted for the appointment of a committee and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice-President, and of notifying the persons elected of their election.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the Indian Appropriation bill, and passed it with many amendments; among them the following:—Securing to the New York Indians who emigrated to Kansas, under the treaty of Buffalo Creek, the quantity of land to which they were entitled, to include in their improvements; the residue of the tract to constitute part of the public domain. Separating the office of Governors of Territories from that of Superintendent of Indian Affairs. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the bill legalizing entries under the graduation act of 1854, made prior to its passage in cases where a settlement was made in good faith.

Mr. Kelsey, by the unanimous direction of the Investigating Committee, reported a resolution requiring the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring before the committee James W. Simonton, to answer on the summons of the Speaker such questions as may be propounded to him.

The resolution was passed under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. Pelton, of N. Y., from the Committee of Commerce, reported back the bill authorizing the President to procure a suitable steam revenue cutter, and appropriating $150,000 for that purpose.

The House concurred in the Senate's amendments, striking out the original provisions, "it shall be stationed in New York and used for the purpose of rescuing shipwrecked persons."

The bill now awaits the action of the President.

Mr. Humphrey Marshal, of Ky., from the Committee on Judiciary, reported a bill dividing Texas into two judicial districts.

SENATE. Feb. 3.

Mr. Wilson introduced a bill to secure to actual settlers the alternate sections of public lands reserved in grants made to States for railroad purposes. It provides that actual settlers shall take the reserved sections, being about 11,000,000 acres, at $2 50 per acre, in compliance with the pre-emption act of 1841.

The Senate went into Executive session at 1 o'clock, Mr. Mason saying there was an imperative necessity for doing so immediately.

The Central American treaty was debated for three hours, and the Senate adjourned without coming to any conclusion on the subject.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House proceeded to the consideration of business relative to the District of Columbia, under the special order.

Without transacting any business of the least general importance, the House then adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 4.

Mr. Allen presented the credentials of James F. Simmons, elected Senator by the Legislature of Rhode Island.

Mr. Wheeler, of Cal., from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported in favor of printing the documents recently communicated relative to Gen. Scott's pay, which, after much discussion was agreed to.

A resolution was adopted for the assembling of both Houses on Wednesday, to make a list of the votes for the President and Vice-President as they shall then be declared.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A resolution was adopted, that Mr. Hall was legally elected from the First Congressional district of Iowa. A resolution giving Mr. Clarke, the contestant, his mileage and per diem. allowance, lies over.

The House discussed the joint resolution proposing to give to each branch of Congress the entire control of its contingent fund without the supervision of the Treasury officers. Passed by a majority of 77.

The Committee on Ways and Means, reported favorably the Senate's Submarine Telegraph bill.

The House concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bill. Adjourned.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres e la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

The Poor.

SELECTED.

Have pity on them for their life
Is full of grief and care;
You do not know one half the woes
The very poor must bear.
You do not see the silent tear,
By many a mother shed,
As childhood offers up the prayer,
"Give us our daily bread."

And sick at heart, she turns away
From the small face, wan with pain,
And feels that prayer has long been said
By those young lips in vain.
You do not see the pallid cheeks
Of those whose years are few,
But who are old in all the griefs
The poor must struggle through.

Their lot is made of misery,
More hopeless day by day;
And through the long cold winter nights,
No light nor fire have they;
But little children, shivering crouch
Around the cheerless hearth,
Their young hearts weary with the want
That drags the soul to earth.

Oh, when with faint and languid voice,
The poor implore your aid,
It matters not how, step by step,
Their misery was made;
It matters not, if shame had laid
Its shadows on their brow—
It is enough for you to see
That they are suffering now.

Deal gently with these wretched ones
Whatever wrought their woe,
For the poor have much to tempt and test,
That you can never know.
Then judge them not, for hard indeed
Is their dark lot of care;
Let Heaven condemn, but human hearts
With human faults should bear.

And when within your happy homes
You hear the voice of mirth,
When smiling faces brighten round
The warm and cheerful hearth;
Let charitable thoughts go forth
For the sad and homeless one,
And your own lot more blest will be,
For every kind deed done.
Now is the time the very poor
Most often meet your gaze—
Have mercy on them, in their cold
And melancholy days.

The Washington Lobby as it Strikes a Stranger—Society at the Capital.

In addition to the "Honorables" of both branches of the Legislature, there is a great number of visitors, whose business here is not very apparent; they do not parade it, and would not be profuse in explanations if you asked them. They do not come for pleasure, and what work they do is invisible. It may suffice to say that the body of some 300 men, who sit daily in the building, the marble steps of which are so well worn, have the disposal of the abundant revenues of the Republic. There are claims against the Government, old and new, and being daily created; private bills of all kinds, securing rights and conferring them, which are sources of wealth to those who obtain them; public bills, giving large grants of land or money for improvements, or lines of railroad, besides the outlay of the ordinary and regular expenditure; all interested in these matters throng to the centre, where their specultions must be decided; and conducting these bills, claims and projects through the several committees, and obtaining interest enough to pass them through the Houses—the lesser difficulty of the two—has become a complete though unrecognized profession. The power behind the Congress, reported to be stronger than Congress itself, is called "the Lobby," from the place in which it is supposed mostly to appear, which is a popular error. The modes in which it operates, if rumor may be credited, would not bear the publicity it would be subjected to in the immediate precincts.

The "Lobby" at Washington has, of late years, grown to be an appreciable influence, and much indignation is expressed by political purists at its existence. But probably there never was a legislative body in the world without something of the kind. In the old Parliament of Ireland there were regular "undertakers of the King's business," who did not necessarily have seats among the men they influenced; and the House of Commons has recognized Parliamentary agents. The business of the American "Lobby" is something of the same kind, but it has not yet obtained a formal organization. It is at present an outside pressure exercised by a miscellaneous crowd of persons, whose influence may be social, or political, or local, or a combination of any of these elements; they are often agents of other parties, simply remunerated for their exertions, or they are both agents and principals, having themselves a large joint share in the undertaking at issue. Many are ex-Members of Congress, who have the privilege of admission to the body of the House, which gives them a great advantage. Many think the House would do well to abolish this privilege, which, from the increasing number of members, growing with the creation of every new State and the short period of a Parliamentary existence, is becoming oppressive. In this, as in some other respects, old rules and practices begin to be cumbrous and inconvenient; what was harmless as a compliment to a few is a very different thing when it is the right of many. How the members may be or are actually influenced by this extraneous, irregular body is very freely discussed; a libeler of Republican institutions would only have to reproduce the charges of the press of America to convey a stronger satire on the nation than any hostile pen has yet written; if he added what may be gathered from private scandal, the picture would be complete; for that throws in some very dark shades indeed.

The readers of French memoirs of the last century, know the means that were often used, or were supposed by the public to be used, to obtain the support and patronage of the nobles and intendants who dispensed the favors of the Executive; chronicles of more recent date are not barren of similar incidents; and the worst kinds and modes of propitiation may be selected from history, old and new, and, changing the scenes and names among which it is applied, something not very unlike the reported scandals of the Federal city would be reproduced. But it should also be stated that the American journals abound more in general charges and assertions that in specific proofs, and our cousins share in the fullest extent our own tendency to self-depreciation; it almost balances their other peculiarity of exaggerating their unbounded advantages. The "Lobby" may be an abuse, and the increasing command of money the Legislature possesses, no doubt encourages a numerous class of adventurers, greedy for a pull at the exchequer. But some of its activity is inevitable, much of it even necessary. And if ever the United States secure the steadying ballast of a heavy public debt, and that very ancient monitor of economy, a direct taxation, the horde of speculators will be starved away from the environs of the Capitol at Washington. In one direction there are indications of the "Lobby" taking a legally recognized existence. The many "claims" against the Government, of which there are an incredible variety and number, springing from the generous though long-deferred policy, of remunerating all who fought or suffered damage in the era of the Revolution, are prosecuted by a regular branch of the legal profession. The committee of claims have created a court, in which those disputed, or doubtful are examined judicially; and this court has its regular practitioners and advocates. Whatever may be the future stage and position of the "Lobby," at present it is no unimportant element of society in the city.

The opening of the present session is described by residents as unusually quiet, though the change in the scale and mode of the payment of members has brought up a full and early attendance; absent members forfeit $8 per diem of their pay. Certainly the resources of the city outside of politics are not fertile of amusement. It would be considered dull for a second rate watering place; there is a theatre most unlike American theatres everywhere else—cold, dingy, and judging by experiment, often empty. By some felicitous arrangement of the railroad managers, the New York mail misses "connection" three or four times a week, so the political capital is nearly the last place in the country at which intelligence arrives. Sometimes the newsmen contrive to overcome the difficulty that regularly paralyzes the post office, and the New York papers are pounced upon like food by the half famished, for much of the news of the place travels 200 miles and comes back again as news still. As much of the work of the locality is not visible, some at least of its amusements, or rather excitements, are recondite and withdrawn from public ken. There is an unusual number of upper floors along the Avenue, unusually well lighted up of an evening. The tailors and druggists have very jolly or very studious tenants apparently. But the midnight lamps do not shine upon the learned scroll, though the vicinity is as quiet and silent as if they did. Scandal again undertakes to explain the mystery of these late illuminations; few streets in the world contain as many gaming houses as the wide avenue that leads to the Capitol of Washington. The faro tables that go the circuit of the watering places in the summer, send a large detachment to Washington for the winter; and the "Lobby" and the House that have worked together during the day, meet for play and champaigne at discretion in the night. It is whispered that the Senate itself is not unrepresented at these gatherings, which thus unite all the States of the Commonwealth.—[Cor. London Times.

Mormonism in Alton.

The history of the founding of this peculiar sect, and their progress up to this day, is replete with interest to the general class of readers. The troubles occasioned by the Mormons in Missouri and Illinois, and their being driven out and forced to emigrate to a country quite beyond the pale of civilization, are facts yet fresh in the minds of the people of the West.

Our attention has been called, of late, to the Mormon sect, in Alton and vicinity, and we will state a few brief facts concerning them. Our readers will be surprised, perhaps, to hear that there are over 150 Mormons in Alton; that they own a small church building and hold regular Sabbath exercises; and that they have their elders and other usual church leaders. The number is constantly increasing, by foreigners arriving, and were it not that a body of them leaves for Salt Lake every spring, this sect would surpass any other in Alton. We are informed that some thirty or forty families will leave Alton, thus, in April next.

Of the personal character of these Mormons we cannot speak from very intimate acquaintance. But so far as we have seen or heard, they are honest, sober, and quite industrious people. They are from nearly every European country, and not an American born is to be found among them, we are informed. They are mostly very illiterate—drawn from the lowest degrees of humanity, as regards wealth and social position, in England, Wales, Sweden, Denmark and the German provinces. We are assured of the fact—and we know one or two instances which go to prove it—that these people, and especially the females, are not fully cognizant of the wretched system of polygamy, and its disastrous influences upon female society in Utah. One can hardly convince these women that it is so. Those who have husbands, here, cannot be taught to believe that their husbands can and probably will take to themselves additional wives, when arrived there, and the single females are quite confident that they will be "sealed" to some one of the prominent Saints of the Church at Salt Lake, and they only; being taught to believe that women are scarce and in much demand.

We suggest to the good people of Alton, male and female, and particularly to that class who are very much exercised about the condition of the negro, and freedom in Kansas, whether here is not a grand field for the exercise of their religious philanthropy, right at their door.

What is religion? where does it commence, and where end? are questions easily asked, but are answered in a widely different manner, each individual, each sectarian for himself. No two sects in Alton will answer the question alike. Remember, we do not ask, what is Christianity, or what is true morality—without which, none can be religious. We refer to the peculiar views of and construction placed on Bible teachings. Where some men's religion ends, others begin. Where some count themselves zealously religious, other professors term them sheer fanatics. As regards the Mormon religion, in principle, all other denominations unite, and very justly, we consider, in branding it as the farthest limit of ignorant fanaticism. And yet, we know of no denomination in Alton more firm in their belief and zealous in their cause, than this sect. In attendance upon public worship they are regular, and as regards liberality in supporting their church, and church men, and in aiding their own poor, and assisting new emigrants to come over the great waters, they surpass every other denomination of our acquaintance.

The Mormons have a system of religious taxation by which all adult members give one tenth of all they possess to the support and extension of their church. When a man joins them he estimates his wealth, and gives to the Mormon elder the tenth part, for the church. And ever after, if he earns ten dollars per week, he gives one dollar of it to the church. We know of Mormon servant girls in Alton, who give one tenth of their earnings, regularly, per week or month to the church. Here is the great secret of Mormon success—if successful they may be called. This system supports their Elders, while travelling throughout Europe proselyting. It swells up a large sum to aid destitute foreigners to emigrate. It built the Nauvoo Temple—it is now building large public edifices, and a city, in the valley of Salt Lake. But the system has this disadvantage, also—it deters many persons in Europe, of considerable property, from joining, as they cannot work up their devotion to Mormonism to the severe tithing pitch.

The Mormons all meet at their new town and starting point in Nebraska Territory, named New Florence we believe, in April next, and emigrate in a body to the far West. They go with teams, pack animals, and hand carts. Last year a large train of the latter crossed the plains, comprising some 800 persons. They made a quick and easy trip, but seven dying on the way. It was interesting to read the account of the arrival of this train at Salt Lake. They straggled in like a toiling pilgrim band. First came a man, and wife, and two or three children, drawing their cart and little stock of worldly goods. Next came a cart drawn by three young English girls, sisters, who had proved themselves physical heroes, upon the route. And thus the travel-stained and worn band made their entry into the Mormon paradise.

Paradise! did we say? Alas, very far from it. Pandemonium, we ought rather to term it. If one half of the statements are true that are made concerning the public morals, and the wretched state of society, and the degraded position of the Mormon females of Salt Lake, a most deplorable state of things exist, which cannot long continue. They are evils which will explode as by spontaneous combustion. Let the Pacific railroad be built, and American civilization proceed Westward on its onward march, and this relic of barbarianism will soon be wiped out. Mormonism need not, nor should it become a political party question. The best interests of society demand its extinction—the last method to accomplish it is persecution.

In conclusion, we invite attention to the extract of a sermon, taken from a Mormon paper, and acknowledged to be genuine by the Mormons here—preached by Brigham Young—"brother Brigham," as they term him—some time ago, in Salt Lake City. It portrays the Mormon polygamy system in all its disgusting features. Let it be generally read. Alton National Democrat, Jan. 22, '57.

[We hitnk with the National Democrat that "if all these statements were true," &c., Utah would be Pandemonium, "but 'taint so any how you can fix it." Utah at home ain't the Utah that Editors and Priests rant and rave about. There are several statements in the foregoing article that are far from being correct, but as the editor does speak the truth on some points, our charity inclines us to believe if he knew more he would probably say less on Polygamy. The "genuine sermon," we have already published.—Ed.]

Moral Enthusiasm.

If there is any one thing needed more than another, both in pulpits and parishes at this juncture, we believe it is moral enthusiasm. Truth is good, and theology is good, and morality is good, and criticism is good; but do let us have live preachers, live parishioners, live churches. It is good to be zealously affected in a good cause. Our cause is the noblest on earth—the cause of God, of Christ, of humanity. Strange that our words do not glow and burn when we speak of the astonishing theme of Christian salvation. Something more is wanted than fine rhetoric, or well-sifted learning, or human eloquence. Something more is wanted than emotional religion, which weeps and cries to-day, and goes the way of the world to-morrow. We do not know better how to characterize this much needed quality than to call it moral enthusiasm. It is the divine, the god-like waking up within us. Of how many preachers we can say, You are thoroughly prepared for your work, you have all the requisite education, general and professional. Oh! let there be now a precipitate of the heart in your sermons. Be not timid, but courageous; not faithless, but believing; not cold, but warm; muse, pray, till the fire burns. If you preach sermons but fifteen minutes long, be sure they are live sermons, and not dead ones. Men are not saved by niceties and criticisms, but by the broad, plain, decisive truths of the Gospel believed and preached with all the mind and heart. "Carry," said one of our noble fraternity just translated, "carry great matters with you, not corners and angles of subjects into the pulpit." The machinery is all ready, the engine is on the right track, the ponderous cars are attached, but all is in vain unless our furnace is lighted and our boiler heated.

Moral enthusiasm! This is the want of the parish, too, as well as of the preacher. Live parishes help to make live preachers, or, at least, do not kill those who are already alive, as dead ones do. All that many parishes need is not a new church, not a new pastor, nor the addition of new members, nor rich and influential persons, to make them flourish like the cedars of Lebanon, but more steam in the boiler. Let there be a baptism of the Holy Spirit. Let the tongues of fire again appear over each disciple. For never was there such want of a true, earnest, affectionate religion as now, in this new world, in this nineteenth century, in this perilous experiment of liberty, in this breaking up and passing away of old creeds and usages.

Never was there a time when the high key and intense strain of the world required a more wide-awake and enthusiastic administration of the commanding interest of life. Not a noisy, but a deep, central life-glow, as of the steady beat of the heart, should move our words, and make our every motion and deed speak like the living and beautiful features of the human face divine. For what are all things in this world, that men most zealously labor for compared with the spiritual interests of society, the victory of truth, the creation of a noble manhood, the beauty of holiness, the warm grasp of a tender and powerful humanity, and a lowly awe before the Infinite God! These are the gems of immortal worth, and it is not too much for us to live for them, it would not be too much for us to die for them.—Christian Enquirer.

Glory and Shame of New York.

According to reports just made to the New York Legislature, there are in that State 26 orphan asylums, containing 2,816 children, of whom 2,224 are of foreign parentage; 4 lunatic asylums, with 1495 patients; a State idiot asylum with 104 idiots under instructions, at an annual expense of $16,000; a deaf and dumb institution, with 314 pupils on the roll, which will cost, when completed, $539,000; an institution for the blind, which employs 16 teachers, and has 170 pupils maintained at an annual expense of $30,000—the State pays $180 for each pupil; nine dispensaries, located in the cities, which annually prescribe for 125,000 persons, at an average cost of 16 1-2 cents to each; an eye and ear infirmary, which last year prescribed for 3,052 patients. The whole number of persons in its jails, penitentiaries, houses of refuge and workhouses, is 3,863.

But many of the almshouses of the State are in a most execrable condition. The poor are brutally treated. Says the Albany Evening Journal:

"The shocking condition of some of the county poor houses is almost incredible. They are badly built, worse arranged, not half warmed, and not at all ventilated. The unfortunate tenants of these places, when they are not starved, and fed upon tainted meat, spoiled fish and decaying vegetables, are lodged either in open sheds, where they freeze, or in close hovels, where they suffocate. They sleep piled in tiers. They sicken without attention, die without medicine, and are tossed into graves like brutes. In one "Institution", not less than one fourth of its 137 inmates died (say rather were killed) in less than a single year! They are literally the abodes of pestilence and famine. While the sane fare thus bad, the insane fare worse. Blows and chains are the only prescriptions for mental disease. The lunatic is beat because of his wandering mind, and the idiot pounded for his lack of sense. Some wretched ones lie upon straw, and the accumulated filth of months, with no covering but such of this foul bed as adheres to their bodies. The blind, the deaf and the crippled, huddled together and treated with equal inhumanity—as if they were doomed to suffer by the neglect of man as well as by the visitation of God.

"Often the men and women are indiscriminately penned in a common sleeping room at night; and the State is annually charged with the support of a new brood of paupers—the offspring of the illicit fusts of its lazar-houses. The supervisors, who should see and correct these abuses, sometimes do not visit the place once a year; sometimes not during their term of office. Not unfrequently contractors are permitted to grind a profit out of the labor of the miserable wretches and starve them in return.

A Fight in the Missouri Legislature.

The question of Slavery Emancipation in Missouri has been under consideration in the Missouri Legislature for several days, it having grown out of the election of Mr. Palm, of St. Louis, (who is an avowed emancipationist) by the Border Ruffian Democracy, as a Director in the State Bank.

In the House, on the 27th, Mr. Darnes, of Scott, introduced a resolution, which had been previously offered in joint session, of this tenor:

Resolved, By the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, that the emancipation of Slavery in the State of Missouri is impracticable and unjust to the slaveholders, and ought not to be agitated.

Gen. Reid, the Border Ruffian hero of the Ossawatomie fight, moved to lay the resolution on the table. The Republican sketches the ensuing scene as follows:

Mr. Darnes, of Scott, would go back to the origin of this discussion. He recollected that in the last session on a bill coming from the Senate, for the printing of the statutes which he, (Darnes) moved to strike out the name of Lusk and insert that of George Knapp. Mr. Reid had moved to lay the motion on the table, on the ground that the Democratic party had already a paper, and did not need Whig assistance.

Mr. Reid denied that position. He had made the motion mainly because of the support Mr. D. gave to Mr. Kipp.

Mr. Darnes—Did not fear gunpowder, and begged to inform the gentleman that his room was at No. 12 Newman's Hotel.

Mr. Reid—If I am not mistaken it may be No. 12 a little lower down the river.

Mr. Darnes—Yours ought to be cell No. 12, Penitentiary, where you ought to have been before you fought the battle of Ossawatomie.

Mr. Reid rose, and Mr. Darnes, facing the Speaker, continued his remarks.

Mr. Darnes—Your powder has no terrors for me. I am contending for principle.

At this moment Mr. Reid had stepped to the right side of Mr. Barnes. He laid his left hand upon his shoulder, and drawing off with his right, struck him (Darnes) a heavy blow on the right cheek, and knocked him down—Mr. Reid was then taken by his friends to his seat.

Mr. Darnes, having recovered somewhat from the effects of the blow, said: I say, sir, that no man but a cowardly assassin would step up behind a gentleman's back and strike him.

Mr. Hill, of St. Louis—I move that this House now adjourn until nine o'clock Thursday.

Motion submitted and lost.

Mr. Darnes—I say, sir, that I have been assaulted in this House. I say, sir, that an assassin stepped up behind me when my back was upon him, and struck me in the face. I pronounce him a coward and a scoundrel.

Mr. Reid then stepped forward again, when Mr. Darnes raised a tumbler with the evident intention of throwing it at him. Mr. Reid then drew a knife, when Mr. Allen, of Warren, and several other gentlemen stepped in front of Reid, and he retired to his seat. Mr. Darnes was also prevented from throwing the glass by gentlemen around him.—[Chicago Weekly Tribune, Feb. 6.

Numerous Deaths from Freezing.

The present winter has been excessively cold in Iowa. We copy the following record of deaths from freezing within the past fortnight in Iowa and Minnesota:

It is rumored that five men were frozen to death near Bradford, a fortnight since. A party of eleven men were, it is said, frozen to death in Minnesota. A man was found frozen below Osage. Two teamsters were, it is thought, frozen to death in the same vicinity.

That a daughter of W. McCrary, living near Linn Grove in this county, was frozen to death on Sunday evening last. The girl is supposed to be about 18 years old, and was going home from a neighbor's, when, overcome by the intense cold, she was unable to reach her home or obtain assistance, and thus perished in the snow.

In the late storm several persons have been frozen to death. Among the number was a young man living near Blue Grass in Muscatine county, and an old man, near Onion Grove, in this county. We have heard, also, that a whole family, consisting of a man, wife and three children, were frozen to death near Onion Grove.

That two men, Norwegians, living just this side of Fort Atkinson, were frozen to death during the storm on the 2d inst.; also, a boy, about twelve years of age, who left Howard on the same day for Howard Centre, and has not since been heard of. Mr. Wm. Rice, who was out in the same storm, died on the 14th inst.

The Dubuque Republican thinks that not less than fifty lives, in the last twenty days, have been lost in that way in northern Iowa and southern Minnesota—and to these may be added many more in other parts of the State, but of not so frequent occurrence.—[Chicago Weekly Tribune, Jan. 30.

Dangerous Curiosity.

An accident, which, though comic enough, might easily have had a tragical ending, occurred the other day at Madame Tussaud's Exhibition in London. A medical student who, examining the guillotine in the chamber of horrors, took it into his head that the sort of yoke which fits down on the shoulders of the criminal to hold him in his place would not be sufficient to confine a person who struggled. His curiosity on this point led him to watch till the place was empty, and actually put himself in, letting down the yoke. He soon found that he was quite unable to lift it, and it at once flashed into his mind that the sharp axe which was suspended over his neck could not be very firmly fixed or it would not fall (as it does) with a touch. He was afraid to struggle, lest the shaking should bring it down and at once deposit his head in the basket of sawdust below him, into which his eyes were of necessity steadily looking. Having stayed some time in this plight, he was overjoyed to hear the approach of a visitor, whom he suppliantly implored to release him. "I'm thinking," said the gentleman (a Scotch visitor of the metropolis) to his wife, "I'm thinking he must be hired to show how the thing acts, and I think we'd better not interfere." So the luckless student was left till M. Tussaud came in, and made fast the axe before releasing him. The axe has been removed and laid by the side to prevent future accidents.—[Weekly Register.

Illinois Central Railroad.—The sales of lands by the Illinois Central Railroad Company in the second week of January were 6,055 acres for $104,695, averaging $17 30 per acre. The aggregate of the two weeks is 12,576 acres for $200,270. The sales, including those for December ($680,000) show a grand total since the commencement of $10,712,000, and $5,114,000 for the year 1856 alone. The prospects are that the sales of 1857 will greatly exceed in amount those of last year. This rapid transfer of the lands of the company to actual settlers, at constantly advancing prices, is an unmistakeable index of the astonishing progress of the State in population and wealth. —Chicago Weekly Tribune, Jan. 30th.

Bad Books.

It is stated, as an example of the way in which book hawking is carried on in England, that there were sold, of the last dying speech and confession of Good, one million six hundred and fifty thousand; of Courvoisier, one million six hundred and sixty-six thousand; of the Mannings, two million; of Rush, two million seven hundred thousand; and of Greenacre, two million six hundred and sixty-six thousand; all trash, and worse.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 14, 1857.

The Crime.

THE Bond street murder is still the leading subject of interest in this city. The examination of persons, under the general cognomen of witnesses, acquainted with the Doctor or the suspected, goes on without intermission—Saturday and Sunday alike. The investigation is held in the Doctor's house, and the thousands unable to gain admission congregate in crowds in the street day after day, and are all excitement in the discussion of the evidences of criminality. Every morning the reading public is furnished with from ten to fifteen or more pages of verbatim reports of the Coroner's interrogatories and the answers of witnesses—with the sapient editor's column and a half of summary, conjectures, and strictures on Coroner and jury. Though ten days have thus passed since the investigation began, nothing clearly culpable has been ascertained. It has sometimes seemed that the perpetrators of the horrid deed had so efficiently done their bloody work, and destroyed, removed and concealed every thing that could in any way bring guilt home upon them, that they might yet escape the punishment due to to their crimes, nevertheless, the first impressions have never been changed nor shaken about the parties suspected.

Editors, pious and secular, have had their grumbling and fencing over it. The religious have been down upon the inefficiency of the police and other institutions for the prevention and check upon crime; while the "ungodly" editors have turned round and told the pious that their religion had nothing in common with that taught by Christ and the Fishermen of Galilee—that they themselves were withered, dried up, dead, good-for-nothing, and of service to nobody—mere hirelings, that cared more for the salary than for the flock over which they professed to be shepherds. The Herald, who generally constitutes himself umpire over all that is going on, plumes himself on his smartness in lashing all round, and says it is neither this nor that, but just so, and all the world should see society and its institutions as he sees them, or they are blind and fanatical. In glancing at the pet theories of others, he concludes: "And we are prepared to read in the newspapers from Utah that the whole thing would have been avoided had we but accepted the divine institution of polygamy." No doubt the Herald thought himself smart in terminating his tirade of misrepresentation with such a fine piece of sarcasm; but without waiting for a verdict from Utah, we can tell the Herald that if such a deed had been committed in that Territory, he would have been, if not the first, certainly the most noisy in bawling out for a "wholesale extirpation" of men, women and children—while, at the same time, he would press home upon Mormonism the charge of having benumbed and destroyed every feeling that raises man above the savage beast of the forest.

We, from Utah, don't lay to any religion such a crime as that perpetrated in Bond street, nor do we tell the ministers of sectarianism, as does the Herald, that their negligence in not preaching to or visiting the people render them in any manner culpable for this or any of the horrible crimes constantly committed in this city, neither did we intend to moralize on the subject; but as it is now before us we may say that it is principles and not ministers that are wanting to stem the tide of wickedness. Society is corrupt from the prevalence of false and pernicious principles, and men and women are running as straight to hell as they can go, and there is no influence, no principle at work to hinder their progress or redeem those who have not been irrevocably overcome by the blighting and damning influence of men-made creeds, religious and moral. The religion and morality of New York is made by the people—their notions of God, immortality, right and wrong, spring from their own imagination, while obedience to the Supreme and His laws is only from silly folks like the Utonians! There is many a true sentiment uttered in jest, there is truth in the Herald's wit and sarcasm about Utah; men and women, with the knowledge of the principles of God's kingdom living in their influence, could never commit the crime that respectable christians do not fear to engage in here.

Disunion.

WHATEVER may be thought of the determination of "Abolitionists" to agitate for the dissolution of the Union or the separation of the Northern States from any alliance with the South, no intelligent person can look at and reflect on their present movements without perceiving that the struggle between the North and South, though it has already been troublesome, costly and fierce, is but commenced. The warm controversy during the late election campaign was generally regarded as the struggle between liberty and slavery; but this view was entirely erroneous; it was nothing more than a non-slavery extension movement, if it was even that much. The real pure blooded, thorough Abolitionist was, so far as principle is concerned, as little interested in Col. Fremont as in Mr. Buchanan. If an Abolitionist favored the Presidency of John C. Fremont, it was from personal preference or dislike to certain combinations that the present Democratic President has, and the President elect might have, at the Capitol. Behind the blusterers that bawled loudly for freedom, worked systematically the real anti-slavery party. The former raised the cry that Free labor was endangered by the extension of Southern institutions, pretty much as France and England justified their armed opposition to Russia with the cry that liberty was endangered, the balance of power in Europe was menaced by the encroachments of the colossal North. The invading army had scarcely left the Crimea before the Ambassadors of France and England were standing glittering with accumulated crosses and stars by the altar of the old church in Moscow, to add eclat to the coronation mummery of him whose ambition, joined to that of his father, had cost the respective countries represented by these ambassadors, millions of treasure, and the lives of thousands of the bravest men that ever handled the musket or drew the glittering sword. The late Eastern war was no war of principle, though thousands, probably millions, were gulled with the first cry of liberty, and no more was the late political struggle in this country one of principle, though speeches abounded with freedom, and banners and transparancies in processions were stuck with everything free, from a Free Kansas to a free Heaven, while every instrument was enlisted to aid the movement, from the Bible to the rifle.

France and England passed by down-trodden nationalities that panted for liberty and would have fought for it had they but furnished them the sword and given them the word to rise, while these powers screamed loud for liberty to the Turk, who had never once showed himself half as worthy of the blessing as the Hungarian, the Pole and Italian. The struggle is over, and the sound of liberty is heard no more in Europe—the cry, before it was but a delusion. The election is over here, and with it the cry of white labor in danger is heard no more.

The real Disunionists are at work; they are men of principle, men who believe in their mission. They have recently held a Disunion Convention in Worcester, Mass., in which they declare before God and men that they shall agitate and use every effort for the dissolution of the present union of North and South. The twenty-fifth annual meeting of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society has since that been held in Boston, at which the following resolutions were discussed and unanimously adopted:

1. Resolved, That the American Union, as might have been anticipated from the antagonistic nature of the parties to it, has proved a sad and total failure, having, from its formation to the present day, directly tended to the moral degradation and ruin of the American people, and the extension and perpetuity of the most dreadful form of bondage now known to mankind.

5. Resolved, That the present American Government has proved a curse and calamity to the cause of Human Freedom throughout the world; and, therefore, it is the right and duty of the people at once to alter, or forever to abolish that Government.

6. Resolved, That the people of the non-slave States owe it to themselves and to their posterity, and to justice, liberty and humanity, to call town, county and State Conventions to consider the expediency and duty of forming a Northern alliance on the principle of NO UNION WITH SLAVEHOLDERS.

WHEREAS, the fundamental, organic law of Massachusetts is, that "all men are born free and equal, and endowed by their Creator with an unalienable right to liberty," therefore.

7. Resolved, That, to allow a man to be arraigned and tried before any tribunal, on the issue, Is he a freeman or a slave—is he a man or a chattel, is an atrocious violation of the fundamental law of the State.

8. Resolved, That it is the duty of Massachusetts to execute this fundamental law of her Government, and to forbid, by such laws as shall be deemed just and necessary, the arrest and trial of any persons living under her jurisdiction, on an issue so insulting to God, and so derogatory to man.

9. Resolved, That we recognise it, as a fixed law of our being, that "Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God," and that, under this law, it is the right and duty of the slave to deny the authority and resist the power of the slaveholder.

10. Resolved, That, in every effort of the slave to obtain his freedom, whether by flight or insurrection, our sympathies are, and ever must be, with him, and against his oppressor; and we pledge ourselves that we will do all in our power that we, as individuals, deem right and most fitting, to aid the enslaved in their struggle for liberty.

11. Resolved, That those who hold to the right of armed resistance to oppression, and glorify their Revolutionary sires for their bloody conflict with British tyrants, are recreant to their own principles if they do not recognise this right on the part of the slave against their tyrant masters, and assist them to achieve their complete enfranchisement.

12. Resolved, That the people of the North have, long since, passed the point where passive endurance of Southern insult, oppression and outrage is a virtue, even were there no inherent criminality in the Union itself; and we regard any further delay of the Dissolution of the Union, especially when based on nothing better than the action, or the hope of political parties pledged to the support of slavery in the States, as not only delusive, but criminal in the very highest degree.

The Disunionists are sneered at and ridiculed as a few maniacs; but that is nothing. Their numbers are on the increase, their principles spreading further and further, and the cause is advocated by men of the first talent and respectability. Their labors confronted by those in the South who hate the meddling of the North, may one day accomplish more than is now dreamed of by others.

Close of the Second Volume of The Mormon.

WITH this issue of our paper we terminate two years' labor in this sanctum. We entered upon our editorial career in New York with the view of serving the cause to which we have consecrated our life—our all. It has been our aim to notice the passing events of interest to our readers, and assist in some measure the future historian. During this short period of time we have entered the polemical list with every class of writers, when we have seen falsehood and false principles claiming the attention of the public: ever believing that the truth could take care of itself, we have spoken it plainly; and in doing so, have probably handled some folks a little freely, but have nothing to recall.

To the many valuable contributors and correspondents who have co-operated with us for the purpose of rendering our paper interesting and instructive, we offer our thanks for their past services, and invite them all and as many more as may wish to swell their ranks to join their efforts to ours in the coming year to render THE MORMON worthy of the name it bears.

The Dialogue.

THE lengthy dialogue which we publish in our paper this week will, no doubt, be read with interest by the Saints. Those acquainted with the rise of the Church, and familiar with the ridiculous stories which ministers and editors circulated to account for its origin, will readily perceive its force—the expose of the mean, soulless men who opposed the Prophet Joseph is ably done. As the author's name has never been published with it, we think it our duty to acknowledge it from the pen of our much esteemed fellow-laborer President P. P. Pratt.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE excitement and interest over the Bond street murder continues, and the perpetrators of the deed are still unknown. Mr. Snodgrass and the Misses Cunningham have been discharged from custody—no charge having been preferred against them, the Coroner could not, according to Judge Brady, retain them as witnesses. The examination of witnesses acquainted with the Dr. and Mrs. Cunningham has changed in nothing the suspicion attached to her and Mr. Eckel—both are still held by the Coroner as suspected parties, and by the instruction of their Counsel refuse to answer any questions.

At the last departure of the Tennessee for Nicaragua, two leading filibusters were apprehended on the charge of enlisting men for Walker's service. In the examination their counsel threatened to produce a letter from President Pierce, by which he would be shown to have large landed interests in Central America. The mooting of this was the key note to the enemies of the President—abundant proof for his "undecided, wavering" course towards Walker. The Attorney-General denies the statement of the counsel, and challenges the counsel to produce the letter. This case would have been the leading topic—had Dr. Burdell's murder not come on at the same time.

As the Illinois was preparing to leave this port last Thursday with her passengers for California, Mr. Myers Truett, an active member of the San Francisco Vigilance Committee, was apprehended on the charge which was made some months ago by some of the expelled against the members of the Committee for damages, sustained by them in being forced to leave the Golden State. Mr. Truett had been for some time in this city, but had eluded the vigilance of the police until some of the expelled having learned of his being on board, search was made, and the gentleman was found stowed away under a berth considerably alarmed. He was safely lodged in jail in default of $50,000 bail, demanded by the persecuted.

It is reported from Washington that the Secretary of War purposes sending a new regiment to California early in the spring, a part to go across the plains for the protection of emigrants. It is to be hoped the soldiers who cross the plains in future will conduct themselves properly, remembering that Indians have rights; to a lack of understanding on that point, may be traced the great cause of Indian ferocity and cruelty to emigrants. The soldiers have easily taken offense, shot down the Indians, and then the latter retaliated on the first defenceless emigrants they met.

There has been great destruction of property upon and bordering the rivers from the breaking up of the ice, through the sudden and continued change of warm weather: several towns have been completely inundated. In and around Albany the losses are estimated at about $2,000,000. At Cincinnati several steamboats and other shiping have been smashed up.

By the recent publication of Secretary Marcy's correspondence with Gov. Stevens of Washington Territory, it is seen that President Pierce condemns the course of the Governor for instituting martial law in some parts of the Territory.

On Tuesday morning a cabinet furniture establishment in Bleecker street was burned down. The proprietor and wife were consumed in the flames before help could reach them. Their family all escaped. It is thought the fire was the result of an incendiary.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

JEAN LOUIS VERGER, who assassinated the Archbishop of Paris on the 3d of January, was tried and condemned to death on the 17th. His counsel's plea of insanity made but little impression on the court. The prisoner's language was bitter against the higher orders of the Catholic hierarchy; his conduct was so violent and his tongue so abusive, that he was taken from the court. His trial was continued and sentence passed upon him during his absence. He made an appeal to the Court of Cassation against the sentence.

The general officers of the French army, who took part in the Crimean campaign, were recently entertained by Prince Napoleon at a grand banquet in Paris. The speeches indicate that they were exceedingly pleased with each other and the great deeds performed by the French army. The London Times comes heavy down upon the whole batch, as not a sentiment was heard at the banquet of England and her heroes—living or dead.

The Swiss prisoners were escorted to the frontier of France on the 17th, and the army was shortly to be disbanded. Though the papers in this country and in England speak of the humiliation of Prussia, it is evident that the democratic portion of Switzerland do not think so. From the Swiss papers that have been forwarded to us, we find, particularly in the French portion of the Confederation, a wailing and sadness at the conclusion of the Federal Council, and the telegraphic dispatches from Berlin show a rejoicing round Frederick William. The king asked the unconditional surrender of the prisoners prior to any negotiation. The prisoners are liberated, and the place where the conference is to be held is yet to be named. Probably the Swiss will achieve their ends. The king's sovereignty over Neufchatel may forever be renounced; but that it will be so, they have no other assurance than the promise of Louis Napoleon's best services.

In our last papers from the land of Tell we observed that Mormonism was attracting some attention there. La Democratie Genevoise had published entire Mrs. Bellinda Pratt's letter on Patriarchal marriage.

In London there have been lately two atrocious murders. In one case the mother cut the throats of her two children, and attempted her own destruction; the other case, was a father who committed the same deed on his two children, and attempted the life of his wife. In neither case was it want.

The English papers speak of a great lack of employment among the working classes and increase of misery and crime. Parliament was to open on the 3d instant. According to Lord Palmerston, business of great importance was to be laid before the Honorables and Lords.

The last news from China (16th December) reports that His Celestial Excellency Yeh was supported by the gentry and people, and continued firm in opposing force to force. The Chinese had set fire to the factories of the barbarians, and three banks at that date were on fire, with no hopes of saving them. It was expected that Canton would be immediately bombarded.

From Persia the news is favorable to British operations. The fleet had taken possession of the fort of Bushire and the island of Karrak.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 31, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Sir: In looking over the old volumes of the Millennial Star, I found in No. 27, Vol. XV, the following Poem, first published in the Deseret News, dated Salt Lake City, Nov. 30th, 1852. It was from my own pen, but its practical sentiments are such, and it is no wall adapted to the present circumstances of the Saints, that I was desirous of calling it to light anew by its re-publication in THE MORMON.

If you see proper to re-publish it, here it is, at your service.

Respectfully, &c., P. P. PRATT.

Independence of Deseret.

'Tis said in the papers, and feared by the knowing,
That young Deseret quite ambitious is growing;
That her national standard will soon be unfurled,
To reign o'er the nations and conquer the world:
That fell superstition from earth will be driven,
The thrones of all tyrants to atoms be rives;
That the light of her dawning will burst into day
As the mists of long ages are rolling away.
Now, bold Deseretians! pray lend your attention,
The path to this glory the muse would fain mention,
And tell you the reasons why conquerors great
Have failed to establish a permanent state.
It is said Alexander subdued all the nations,
And fain would have travelled to other creations;
But 'twas clear when his weapons were laid on the shelf,
He had never made war with, or conquered himself.
And modern reformers are often contending
'Gainst tobacco and spirits, their habits still mending,
Like the Puritan Fathers who fain would be free,
But forgetting themselves, made a war on the tea.
Now, bold Deseretians! if you are aspiring
To greatness and glory, and progress untiring,
War not against nations, for conquest like Rome;
But fight for your own independence at home.
War not against merchants, tobacco, or spirits,
But against the bad tastes you in weakness inherit;
Let your beverage be over the cold mountain stream,
And home manufacture your practice and theme.
Dispense with the gewgaws, the silks, and the satin,
The false splendor of parties, the Greek, and the Latin;
Let home manufacture your persons array,
And the work of your hands all its beauties display.
You're doubtless aware of the wonderful treasures,
The gambling and scrambling and murders and pleasures,
The finest of fortunes that are bought and are sold,
In our neighboring State, e'en the Land of the Gold.
But there's many a snare in the process of mining:
By the influx of gold are the nations declining.
Oft the gold or the silver so vice is a tool,
But the rod of pure Iron the nations will rule.
'Tis the engine of Iron that conquers the ocean—
That rolls on the track by its own locomotion,
That levels the forest, turns over the sod,
And worketh more wonders than Moses' rod.
'Tis iron that has rent all the nations asunder,
It has poured forth its lightning, and vomited thunder;
But now on its sinews a message of peace,
Borne along by the lightning, its wonders increase.
Then, O Deseretians! subdue your own passions,
Create your own heaven, and make your own fashions:
Then make Iron as plenty as the dust on your plains,
And over the nations eternally reign.

DIALOGUE.

Smith—Good morning, Mr. Devil. How now; you seem to be much engaged. What news have you got there?

Devil—[Slipping his bills into his pocket, with a low bow]—Oh! Good morning, Mr. Smith; I hope you are well, sir. Why—I—was just out—out on a little business in my line; or finally, to be candid, sir, I was contriving a fair and honorable warfare against you and your impositions, wherein pisty is outraged, and religion greatly hindered in its useful course; for to be bold, sir, (and I despise anything underhanded,) I must tell you to your face that you have made me more trouble than all the ministers or people of my whole dominion have for ages past.

Smith—Trouble! What trouble have I caused your majesty? I certainly have endeavored to treat you, and all other persons, in a friendly manner, even my worst enemies; and I always aim to fulfil the Mormon creed; and that is, to mind my own business exclusively. Why should this trouble you, Mr. Devil?

Devil—Ah! your own business indeed! I know not what you may consider your own business, it is so very complicated; but I know what you have done, and what you are aiming to do. You have disturbed the quiet of Christendom, overthrown churches and societies; you have dared to call in question the truth and usefulness of old and established creeds, which have stood the test of ages, and have even caused tens of thousands to come out in open rebellion, not only against wholesome creeds, established forms and doctrines, well-approved and orthodox, but against some of the most pious, learned, exemplary and honorable clergy, whom both myself and all the world love, honor and esteem. And this is not all; but you are causing many persons to think who never thought before, and you would fain put the whole world a-thinking, and then where will true religion and piety be? Alas! they will have no place among men; for if men keep such a terrible thinking and reasoning as they begin to do, since you commenced your business, as you call it, they never will continue to uphold the good old way in which they have jogged along in peace for so many ages; and thus, Mr. Smith, you will overthrow my kingdom, and leave me not a foot of ground on earth, and this is the very thing you aim at; but I, sir, have the boldness to oppose you by all the lawful means which I have in my power.

Smith—Really, Mr. Devil, your majesty has of late become very pious. I think some of your Christian brethren have greatly misrepresented you. It is generally reported by them that you are opposed to religion. But——

Devil—It is false; there is not a more religious and pious being in the world than myself, nor a being more liberal-minded. I am decidedly in favor of all creeds, systems and forms of Christianity, of whatever name or nature, so long as they leave out that abominable doctrine which caused me so much trouble in former times, and which, after slumbering for ages, you have again revived. I mean the doctrine of direct communion with God by new revelation. This is hateful, it is impious; it is directly opposed to all the divisions and branches of the Christian Church. I never could bear it. And for this very cause, I helped to bring to condign punishment all the prophets and the apostles of old; for while they were suffered to live with this gift of revelation, they were always exposing and slandering me, and all other good pious men, in exposing our deeds and purposes, which they called wicked, but which we consider as the height of zeal and piety; and when we killed them for these crimes of dreaming, prophesying and visionseeing, they raised the cry of persecution, and so with you miserable and deluded Mormons.

Smith—Then, your most Christian Majesty is in favor of all other religions but this one, are you?

Devil—Certainly. I am fond of praying, singing, church-building, bell-ringing, going to meeting, preaching, and withal, I have quite a missionary zeal. I like also long faces, long prayers, long robes and learned sermons. Nothing suits me better than to see people who have been for a whole week oppressing their neighbors, grinding the face of the poor, walking in pride and folly, and serving me with all their heart; I say nothing suits me better, Mr. Smith, than to see these people go to meeting on Sunday with a long religious face on, and to see them pay a portion of their ill-gotten gains for the support of a priest, while he and his hearers pray with doleful groans and awful faces, saying, "Lord, we have left undone the things we ought to have done, and done the things we ought not;" and then, when service is ended, see them turn again to their wickedness, and pursue it greedily all the week, and the next Sabbath repeat the same things. Now, be candid, Mr. Smith. Do you not see that these, and all others, who have a form and deny the power, are my good Christian children, and that their religion is a help to my cause?

Smith—Certainly, your reasoning is clear and obvious as to these hypocrites, but you would not be pleased with people getting converted, either at camp meeting or somewhere else, and then putting their trust in that conversion, and in free grace to save them. Would you not be opposed to this?

Devil—Why should I have any objection to that kind of religion, Mr. Smith? I care not how much they get converted, nor how much they cry Lord, Lord, nor how much they trust to free grace to save them, so long as they do not do the works that their God has commanded them. I am sure of them at last; for you know all men are to be judged according to their deeds. What does their good Bible say? Does it not say, "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into my kingdom; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven?" No, no, Mr. Smith, I am not an enemy to religion, and especially to the modern forms of Christianity. So long as they deny the power, they are a help to my cause. See how much discord, division, hatred, envy, strife, lying, contention, blindness and even murder and bloodshed, has been produced as the effect of these very systems. By these means I gain millions to my dominion, while at the same time we enjoy the credit of being pious Christians. But you, Mr. Smith, you are my enemy, my open and avowed enemy; you have even dared, in a sacriligious manner, to tear the veil from all these fine systems, and to commence an open attack upon my kingdom, and this even when I had almost all Christendom, together with the clergymen and gentlemen of the press, in my favor. How dare you venture thus to commence a revolution without reserve, and without aid or succor, and in the midst of innumerable hosts of my subjects?

Smith—Why, sir, in the first place, I knew that I had the truth on my side, and that your systems and forms of Christianity were so manifestly corrupt that one had only to lift the veil from your fooleries on one side, and to present plain and reasonable truth on the other, and the eyes of the people could at once distinguish the difference so clearly that, except they chose darkness rather than light, they would leave your ranks and come over to truth. For instance, what is easier than to show, from the history of the past, that a religion of direct revelation was the only system ever instituted by the Lord, and the only one calculated to benefit mankind? What is easier than to show that this system saved the church from flood, famine, flames, war, division, bondage, doubt and darkness, in former times, and that it is the legitimate way and manner of God's government of his own peculiar people in all ages and dispensations.

Devil—To be candid with you, Mr. Smith, I must own that what you have now said, neither myself nor my most able ministers have been able to gainsay by any argument or fact. But then you must recollect, that tradition and custom, together with fashion and popular clamor, have in all ages had more effect than plain fact and sound reason. Hence you see we are yet safe, so long as we continue the cry from press and pulpit, and in Sunday schools; and all these things are done away and no longer needed. In this way, though God may speak, they will not hear; angels may minister, and they will not believe; visions may reveal, and they will not be enlightened; prophets may lift their voice, and their warnings pass unheeded; so you see we still have them as safe as we had the people in olden time. God can communicate no message to them which will be examined or heard with any degree of credence or candor. So for all the good they get from God, all communication being cut off, they might as as well be without a God. Thus you see, I have full influence and control of the multitude by a means far more effectual than argument or reason; and I even dare to teach them that it is a sin to reason, think, or investigate, as it would disturb the even tenor of their pious breathings and devout groans and responses. Smith, you must be extremely ignorant of human nature, as well as of the history of the past, to presume that reason and truth would have much effect with the multitude. Why, sir, look how effectually we warded off the truth at Ephesus, when Paul attempted to address them in the theatre! Strange, that with all these examples before you, you should venture to raise the hue and cry which has so often been defeated, and this with no better weapons on your side than reason and truth. Indeed, you may thank my Christian spirit of forbearance that you have escaped so far without a gridiron; but take care for the future, I may not always be so mild.

Smith—But why is your majesty so highly excited against me and my plans of operation, seeing that you consider that you have the multitude perfectly safe; and why so enraged and so fearful of the consequences of my course, and the effect of my weapons, while at the same time you profess to despise them as weak and powerless. Alas! it is too true that you have the multitude safe to all appearance at present, and that truth can seldom reach them; why not then be content, and leave me to pursue my calling in peace? I can hardly hope to win to the cause of truth any but the few who think, and these have ever been troublesome to your cause.

Devil—True, but then you are, in spite of all my efforts, and that of my fellows, daily thinning our ranks, by adding to the number of those who think; and such a thinking is kept up that we are often exposed in some of our most prominent plans, are placed in a very awkward predicament; and who knows what defeat, disgrace and dishonor may befal the pious cause, if you are suffered to continue your rebellious course.

Smith—But, Mr. Devil, why, with all these other advantages on your side, do you resort to such mean, weak and silly fabrications as the Spaulding Story. You profess to be a gentleman, a Christian and a clergyman, and you ought for your own sake, and for the sake of your cause, to keep up outward appearance of honor and fairness. And now, Mr. Devil, tell the truth for once; you know perfectly well that your Spaulding Story, in which you represent me as an impostor, in connection with Sidney Rigdon, and that we were engaged in palming Solomon Spaulding's romance upon the world as the Book of Mormon, is a lie, a base fabrication, without a shadow of truth; and you know that I found the Original Records of the Nephites, and translated and published the Book of Mormon from them, without ever having heard of the existence of Spaulding, or his romance, or Sidney Rigdon either. Now, Mr. Devil, this was a mean, disgraceful and underhand trick in you, and one of which even you have reason to be ashamed.

Devil—Well, Mr. Smith, to be candid, I acknowledge what you say is true, and that it was not the most honorable course in the world. But it was you who commenced the war by publishing that terrible book, which we readily recognized as a complete expose of all our false and corrupt Christianity, not even keeping back the fact that we had contrived, during the dark ages, to rob the Scriptures of their plainness, and we felt the utmost alarm and excitement, and without much reflection, in the height of passion, we called a hasty council of clergy and editors, and other rascals in Painesville, Ohio, and, thinking that almost any means were lawful in war, we invented the Spaulding Story, and fathered it upon the poor printer, Howe, of Painesville, although Dr. Hulbert (thanks to my aid) was its real author. But mark, Mr. Smith, mark one thing, we had not a face so hard, nor a conscience so abandoned, as to publish this Spaulding Story at the first as a positive fact; we only published it as a conjecture, a mere probability and this you know, we had a right to do, without once thinking of the amount of evil it would eventually accomplish. But, sir, it was some of my unfortunate clergymen who, more reckless, hardened and unprincipled than myself, have ventured to add to each edition of this story, till at last, without my aid or consent, they have set it down for a positive fact, that Solomon Spaulding, Sidney Rigdon and yourself, have made up the Book of Mormon out of a romance. Now, Mr. Smith, I am glad of this interview with you, as it gives me the opportunity of clearing up my character. I acknowledge with shame that I was guilty of a mean act in helping to hatch up and publish the Spaulding Story as a probability, and I associated with rascals far beneath my dignity, either as a sovereign prince, or religious minister, or even as an old, honorable and experienced Devil, and for this I beg your pardon. But, really, I must deny the charge of having assisted in making the additions which have appeared in later editions of that story, in which my former probabilities and mere conjectures are set down for positive facts. No, Mr. Smith, I had no hand in a trick so low and mean; I despise it as the work of priests and editors alone, without my aid or suggestion, and I do not believe that even the meanest young devils in our dominion would have stooped to such an act.

Smith—Well, I must give your majesty some credit, for once at least, if what you say is true; but how can you justify your conduct in dishonoring yourself so far as to stoop to the level of the hireling clergy and their followers, in still making use of this humbug story (which you affect to despise) in order to still blind the eyes of the people in regard to the the origin of the Book of Mormon.

Devil—Oh! Mr. Smith, it does take so readily among the pious of all sects, that it seems a pity to spoil the fun, and I cannot resist the temptation of carrying out the joke, now it is so well rooted in their minds; and you can't think how we devils shake our sides with laughter when we get up in the gallery in some fine church, put on our long face, and assist in singing, and in the devout responses. This done, the Spaulding Story is gravely told from the pulpit, while the pious old clergyman wears a face as long as that of Balaam's beast. All is swallowed down for solid truth by the gaping multitude, while we hang our heads behind the screen, and laugh and wink at each other in silence, as anything overheard would disturb their worship; and as bad as I am, I never wish to disturb those popular modes of worship, which decency requires us to respect. So you see, Mr. Smith, we have our fun to ourselves, at your expense; but, after all, we do not mean any hurt by it, although I must acknowledge, upon the whole, it serves our purpose.

Smith—Well, we will drop the subject, as I want to inquire about some other stories which have had an extensive circulation by means of your editors and priests. For instance, there is the story of my attempting to walk on the water and getting drowned, the numerous stories of my attempting to raise the dead, as a mere trick of imposition, and getting detected in it; and the stories of my attempting to appear as an angel, and getting caught and exposed, and besides this, you have me killed, by some means every little while. Now you old hypocrite, you know that none of these things ever happened, or any circumstance out of which to make them; and that so far from this, I deny the principle of a man's working miracles, either real or pretended, as a proof of his mission, and contend that miracles if wrought at all, were wrought for benevolent purposes, and without being designed to convince the unbeliever. Why, then, do you resort to such silly stories in your opposition to me, seeing that you have many other advantages? Not that I would complain of such weak opposition, as if it were calculated to hinder my progress, but rather to mention it as something well calculated to injure your own cause, by betraying your weakness and folly.

Devil—[laughing]—Ha, ha, ha, eh, eh. Oh! Mr. Smith; I just put out these stories for a joke, in order to have my own fun, and without the most distant idea that any being on earth would be so silly as to give any credence to them; but judge my surprise and joy, when I found priests, editors and people, so depraved in their judgment and tastes, so in love with lies, and so ready to catch at everything against their common enemy, as they call you, that these jocose stories of ours actually took, in their credulous craniums for grave truths, and were passed about by them, and sought after and swallowed by the multitude as greedily as a young robin swallows a worm when it is dropped into its mouth, which is stretched at full width, while its eyes are closed. So you see, Mr. Smith, that without meaning any particular harm to you, I have my fun, and am besides so unexpectedly fortunate as to reap great advantages from circumstances where I had neither expected nor calculated. So I hope you will at least bear my folly, nor set down aught in malice, where no malice was intended. You know we devils are poor miserable creatures at best; and were it not for our fun, and our gambling, and our religious exercises, we should have nothing to kill time.

Smith—Well, well, I see plainly you will have a creep out some how or other, rather than bear the disgrace and stigma which your conduct would seem to deserve. But forgetting the past, let me inquire what course you intend to pursue in future, and whether this warfare between you and me, will still be prosecuted? And if so, what course do you intend to pursue hereafter? You know my course. I have long since taken the field at the head of a mere handful of brave patriots, who are true as the polar star, and firm as the Rock of Gibraltar. They laugh at and despise your silly stories; and with nothing but a few plain simple weapons of truth and reason, aided by revelation, we boldly make war upon your whole dominion, and will never quit the field, dead or alive, till we win the battle, and deprive you of every foot of ground you possess. This is our purpose; and although your enemy, I am bold and generous enough to declare it. So you see I am not for taking any unwary advantage, notwithstanding all your pious tricks upon me and the public.

Devil—Mr. Smith, I am too much of the gentleman not to admire your generous frankness and your boldness, and too much of a Christian not to appreciate your honesty; but as you commenced this war, and I only acted at the first on the defensive, with the pure motive of defending my kingdom, I think this ought, in some degree at least, to excuse the means I have made use of; and that you may have no reason to complain in future, I will now fully open to you the plan of my future campaign. Here [pulling out a bundle of handbills] is what I was doing this morning, when by chance we met; and by the reading of which you will see my course. Heretofore I have endeavored to throw contempt upon your cause, in hopes to smother it and keep it under, as something beneath the notice of us well-informed Christians. Therefore, I have generally caused it to be represented that you were a very ignorant silly man, and that your followers were made up of the unthinking and vulgar, and not worthy of notice. But the fact is, you have made such rapid strides, and have poured forth such a torrent of intelligence, and gathered such a host of talented and thinking men around you, that I can no longer conceal these facts under a bushel of burning lies, and therefore I now change my purpose and my manner of attack. I shall endeavor to magnify you and your success from this time forward, and to make you appear as much larger than the reality, as you have heretofore fallen short. If my former course has excited contempt, and caused you to be despised, and thus kept you out of notice, my future course will be to excite jealousy, fear and alarm, till all the world is ready to rise and crush you as if you were a legion of Sampsons, commanded by Bonaparte. This, I think, will be more successful in putting you down than the ignoble course I have heretofore taken—so prepare for the worst.

Smith—I care as little for your magnifying powers as I have heretofore done for your contempt; in fact, I will endeavor to go ahead to that degree, that what you will say in regard to my great influence and power, though intended by you for a falsehood, shall prove to be true, and by so doing I shall be prepared to receive those whom you may excite against me, and to give them so warm a reception that they will never discover your intended falsehood, but will find all your representations of my greatness to be a reality; so do your worst, I defy you.

Devil—Well, time will determine whether the earth is to be governed by a prophet, and under the sway of truth, or whether myself and my Christian friends will still prevail. But remember, Smith, remember, I beseech you for your own good, beware what you are doing, I have the priests and editors, with a few exceptions, under my control, together with wealth, popularity and honor. Count well the cost before you again plunge into this warfare. Good bye, Mr. Smith, I must away to raise my recruits and prepare for a campaign.

Smith—Good bye to your Majesty.

[They both touch hats and turn away.]

Devil—[Recollecting himself and suddenly turning back,] Oh! I say, Mr. Smith, one word more if you please, [in a low confidential tone, with his mouth close to his ear,] after all, what is the use of parting as enemies; the fact is, you go in for the wheat and I for the tares. Both must be harvested. Are we not fellow-laborers? I can make no use of the wheat, nor you of the tares, even if we had them; we each claim our own, I for the burning and you for the barn. Come, then, give the poor old devil his due, and let's be friends.

Smith—Agreed; I neither want yours nor you mine. A man free from prejudices, will give the devil his due. Come, here is the right hand of fellowship—you to the tares, and I to the wheat.

[They shake hands cordially.]

Devil—Well, Mr. Smith, we have talked a long while, and are agreed at last. You are a noble and generous fellow, and would not bring a railing accusation against even a poor old Devil, nor cheat him of his due. Come, it is a warm day, and I feel as though it is my treat. Let us go down to Mammy Brewer's cellar, and take something to drink.

Smith—Agreed, Mr. Devil; you appear very generous now.

[They enter the cellar together.]

Devil—Good morning, Mrs. Brewer; I make you acquainted with my good friend, Mr. Smith, the prophet. [The landlady smiling a little and looking a little surprised.] Why, Mr. Devil, is that you? sit down, you look tired. But you don't say this is Mr. Smith, your greatest enemy! I am quite surprised. What will you have, gentlemen? for if you can drink together, I think all the world ought to be friends.

Devil—As we are both temperance men, and ministers, I think perhaps a glass of spruce beer a-piece will be all right. What say you, Mr. Smith?

Smith—As you please, your Majesty.

[They now take the beer.]

Devil—[Holding up his glass.] Come, Mr. Smith, your health. I propose we offer a toast.

Smith—Well, proceed.

Devil—Here's to my good friend, Joe. Smith. May all sorts of ill luck befal him, and may he never be suffered to enter my kingdom, either in time or eternity, for he would almost make me forget that I am a devil, and make a gentleman of me, while he gently overthrows my government, at the same time that he wins my friendship.

Smith—Here's to his Satanic Majesty; may he be driven from the earth, and be forced to put to sea in a stone canoe with an iron paddle, and may the canoe sink, and a shark swallow the canoe and its royal freight, and an alligator swallow the shark, and may the alligator be bound in the north-west corner of hell, the door be locked, the key lost, and a blind man hunting for it.

[Exit Devil, Prophet, and all.]

FOR THE MORMON.

Electricity.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

Without enlarging upon the many theories and speculations in relation to electricity, I will merely give a cursory view of the prominent features of it.

Electricity, from the Greek, electron, signifying a resinous substance, is one of those mysterious principles, the existence and explanation of which has given rise to many hypotheses. It is evident from scientific observations, that our globe, with all the endless variety of creations, and the ocean of air surrounding the same, contain more or less electricity. Like many other principles, it is a silent agent, the presence of which is often unknown, and only through other operating media, brought to life, when its effects are often terrific and destructive, as is evident from the phenomena of lightning, where the clouds discharge a superabundance of electric fluid. Experiments make it further probable, that electricity may be found both in animate and inanimate matter, that is to say, not only the vegetable and mineral kingdoms, as trees, plants, herbs, stones, &c., but also the animal kingdom, may contain that wonderful agent, in proportion to its nature. For instance, it is a well known fact, that on rubbing the back of a cat, crackling sparks fly from it.

The most important properties of electricity are attraction, repulsion, light, sound, a wonderful facility of penetrating dense bodies, such as conductors, and the power of producing convulsive shocks and motions.

It is a well known fact, that certain bodies when touching each other, exhibit the characteristic of attraction, for instance, take a glass tube, and on rubbing it with a dry silken cloth, it will attract light bodies, such as cotton, silk, &c. When two parties are brought together, the one having the property of imparting electricity, is then said to be in a state of excitement, that is to say, it is naturally prepared to transmit a portion of the electric fluid or matter to another; the body acting as a natural agent of receiving electricity, is called electrified. But a body may be a natural receptacle of that mysterious principle, without having the power of exhibiting or manifesting it, as the communication of electricity depends entirely on the collision or intimate connection of two agents of the same property, and, on the other hand, a certain body may be full of electric matter or property without having a receiving agent, to which to transmit a portion of electricity; a body thus situated is called an insulated one. The electric agents are generally divided in two classes, viz. in conductors and non-conductors. Conductors, which term is derived from the Latin, signifying leaders or guides, are such bodies which communicate or transmit electricity, or the peculiar nature of which requires a ready escape of that fluid; non-conductors are those agents which do not admit a transmission of electricity. The conducting or non-conducting properties may be observed in many substances, as, for instance, in steam, damp air, smoke, flame, metals, charcoal, and in the animal creation, which are all bodies ready to communicate or transmit electricity. The non-conducting agents are wax, wool, hair, silk, glass, sulphur, feathers, resins, &c. In relation to the conducting or non-conducting properties of certain agents, the philosopher knows from experience that there are gradations in attraction. The difference of electric developements can be observed in various substances. All electric bodies may again be divided in resinous and vitreous ones; the former property is found in sealing-wax, amber, &c., the latter is found in glass and other analogous bodies when in a state of excitement, hence this kind of electricity is termed vitreous from the Latin vitreus, glassy or like glass. Regarding, the so called, vitreous and resinous substances or bodies, it is well to know, that they operate against each other in the shape of natural antagonists, that is to say, each of the two having a different property counteracts or neutralizes the other. As soon as the electric equlibrium is disturbed in two substances or agents, so that one contains more electricity than the other, and the one which gains, is plus or positively electrified, and the other which loses, is minus, or negatively electrified, then the phenomenon of attraction and repulsion takes place; for instance, take a piece of sealing-wax, and, on rubbing it with flannel or silk, it has received the property of attraction, but a feather will be attracted and repelled by the electrifying agent. The phenomena of electric bodies having the properties of light and sound may be observed in divers experiments, for instance, a person standing on an insulating stool, (an insulating stool is a small footstool with glass feet, and is termed insulating, on account of the person standing on it having no medium of transmitting the electric fluid from himself to any other body,) on taking the chain of the prime conductor of the electric machine, will receive the power of transmitting or transferring electricity, and imparting electrical sparks to bodies and substances touching it, and, at the same time a faint, crackling noise will be heard.

Having spoken of the prominent properties of electricity, I will make now a few remarks on certain electric instruments, which are used for the purpose of making scientific observations. Theory, that is to say, a certain system of laws or principles, is not sufficient to give us that knowledge, which we alone can gain by experience or empiricism. In fact, theory and experience are twins; they go hand in hand, and cannot be separated, hence it is necessary, that in every science in which we are desirous of becoming proficient, experiments or practical illustrations should be made. In consideration of this, practical lessons are given in Colleges and Universities' for the purpose of showing and proving better the philosophy of certain principles. I remember, that during the time of my academical studies, especially the lectures on natural philosophy, were illustrated by experiments, so that many principles are still in my memory, and I can give a skeleton outline for the benefit of the reader. I made the above remarks, in order to impress on my brethren and sisters, the necessity of gaining a sound, practical knowledge of every thing useful and noble.

Some of the most important instruments are the electric machine, which is used in order to concentrate a large quantity of electric fluid for scientific purposes, the Electrometer, from the Greek electron, resinous, and metron, measure; is an instrument constructed in order to ascertain and measure the existence, nature and quantity of electricity contained in a certain body or substance. The common Electrometer is a glass rod bent at the top, similar to a hook and attached to a stand. In order to ascertain the pressure of electricity, a silk thread with a small pith ball is suspended from the glass hook. As soon as the little ball has been electrified through the glass, it will, on touching certain bodies or substances, manifest the power of attraction or repulsion. The Leyden jar, (an instrument which was invented in Leyden, in Holland,) is a thin glass vessel, the inside and outside of which, has to within about two inches of its mouth, a coat of tin foil. This instrument is of great scientific importance, being generally used as a receiver of electric fluids, from the electric machine which gains that subtle fluid from the earth through a certain apparatus. The transmission takes place by connecting the brass wire of the jar with the conductor of the machine. The conductor is a brass cylinder with two branches which receive the electric fluid from four cushions stuffed with hair, and having a coat of amalgam composed of zinc, mercury and tin. The cushions on being rubbed against the glass plate, (the glass plate is a prominent part of the electric machine, and turns on an axis which runs through its centre,) produces a great excitement. A great many experiments may be made by means of the electric machine; as for instance, that of the electrical bells, where a certain number of bells hanging on brass rods and silken threads, are made to ring as long as the machine is operating. The electric battery is a combination of jars, which is generally constructed when great power and intensity is required. The last apparatus is now used for military purposes; as for instance, in making flying saps and blowing up mines. The charge of a jar containing about a gallon, will ignite gunpowder, etc. The presence of atmospheric electricity was discovered by Dr. Franklin, by means of the electric kite, the principal constituents of which are a metalic wire and a silken string. On examining the electricity drawn from the clouds and received in a Leyden jar, it has been found to have the same properties as the fluid gained from the electric machine. From the observations of Dr. Franklin, Alexander von Humboldt, Professor Pohl and other eminent philosophers, it is evident that powerful discharges of the electric fluid will destroy animal life; that the magnetic needle will be affected; that metals are melted, &c. It is highly interesting to observe the electric agent operating before and during a thunder storm. Clouds come to meet each other, stretching out as it were, their long vaporing arms, as if eager for an embrace. These clouds which are minus or negatively electrified and contain less electricity, are attracted by those which are pluss or positively electrified, and contain a superabundance of the electric fluid, then when within the range of their respective electric forces, the positive clouds which have a larger quantity of electricity, discharge their surplus, and transmit it to those of less strength and force.

Having said so much on the general phenomena of electricity, we will now see whether that agent might be employed for a general use; as for instance, in the operations of art. Orreries, showing the diurnal motion of the earth, the age and phases of the moon, as well as models of water-pumps and corn-mills have been put in operation through the medium of electricity. The electric telegraph is operating upon the same principle. In Prussia, in Germany, in 1811, the first successful experiment was made in using the electric fluid of lightning, in mechanical operations; viz., in splitting large stones into shivers, by having a long rod of iron, terminating in a point, as a material conductor, fixed in a stone. There is no doubt, but what in the course of time the electric agent will be used for the accomplishment of more important and beneficial effects.

Thirty-fourth Congress.–Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5, 1857.

SENATE.

The Senate agreed to all the House amendments to the bill relating to foreign coins and coining cents, and added another amendment.

Mr. Rusk introduced a bill for the transportation of the mails from Mississippi River to San Francisco. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell moved the previous question on the Senate's Submarine Telegraph bill, but he was not sustained, forty-five only voting in the affirmative.

Mr. Mace said it was connected with the postal affairs of the country, and with a view of examining into its merits, he moved that it be referred to the Post Office Committee.

Pending the subject the House went into committee, the Tariff bill being nominally under consideration.

The Senate's resolution providing for counting of the votes for President and Vice-President next Wednesday was adopted. Messrs. Jones of Tennessee, and Mr. Howard were appointed as tellers on the part of the House.

Recess till 7 o'clock, P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. Merrill made a speech in favor of protection.

Mr. Taylor advocated the Louisiana Sugar interest.

Mr. Colfax argued that sugar should be free, saying that one-eighth of the revenue last year was derived from the duty on sugar and molasses. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 6.

On motion of Mr. Wilson, a resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Commerce to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to expend such sums as he may deem necessary, not exceeding $10,000, for the further exploration of the River La Plata and its tributaries.

Mr. Fish, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay the officers and seamen of the expedition in search of Dr. Kane at the same rate as was allowed to the officers and seamen of the expedition under Lieut. De Haven.

The Private Calender was taken up.

The Senate passed the House bill for the relief of Mary Reeside, and receded from its former amendment against the allowance of interest. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House was engaged in the consideration of Private Bills.

The House passed seventeen private bills. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 7.

Mr. Toombs of Georgia presented a memorial from General Shields and other citizens of Minnesota, setting forth that, although that Territory contains about 200,000 inhabitants, yet it has received no grants of lands in conformity with the policy of the Government to grant lands upon certain conditions to new States for railroad purposes. He introduced a bill making grants in accordance with the prayer of the petitioners, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Several private bills were then passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the bill establishing the Delaware, Osage and Western Land Districts in Kansas.

A resolution was passed giving the widow of Preston S. Brooks whatever sum was due him at the time of his death.

The House passed the bill to establish the office of Surveyor General in the Territory of Minnesota.

The bill appropriating $25,000 for the completion of the Capitol building for Utah was taken up.

Mr. Dunn of Ind. wished to know whether the people of that Territory were not living in violation of the laws of the United States, and in public contempt of the good morals and religion of the civilized world.

Mr. Grow said the Committee on Territories had been governed by the estimates from the Treasury Department.

Mr. Morrell of Vt. reminded the House of the fact of the passage of a resolution calling for information relative to the people of Utah, but that no response had yet been made to the inquiry, though the correspondence on that subject is on file in the Department.

The bill was then laid aside with the recommendation "not to pass."

The bill appropriating $50,000 for the completion of the Capitol building at Omaha was taken up.

Mr. Whitfield of Kansas wanted a similar appropriation for Kansas.

Mr. Grow explained that $50,000 had already been drawn from the Treasury for the Kansas Capitol, but that the Secretary of the Treasury had nothing to show whether the money was expended.

The bill for completing the Capitol of Nebraska, and one of a similar character for New Mexico passed.

A bill appropriating $30,000 for roads in Nebraska was also passed.

The House then perfected the bill appropriating $300,000 for the construction of a wagon road from Fort Kearney, in Nebraska, via the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains, to the eastern boundary line of California, near Honey Lake. The said road to connect with and form an extension of the road already authorized from Fort Ridgely to the aforesaid South Pass.

The sum of $200,000 was also appropriated for the construction of a wagon road from El Paso to Fort Yuma, at the mouth of the Gila River; and $50,000 for the construction of a wagon road from Fort Independence, New Mexico, to the Colorado River.

Pending the question of the passage of the bill, the House adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 9.

Mr. Bright presented the credentials of Graham N. Fitch, setting forth that he had been elected Senator by the Legislature of Indiana, and moved that the oath of office be administered.

Mr. Trumbull said he had placed in his hands, by a special messenger from that State, the protest of the State Senate against the legality of the election, and also a protest signed by thirty-four members of the House of Representatives of Indiana to the same effect. The protests were read, and Mr. T. objected to the admission of the oath.

Mr. Douglas thought it better that Mr. Fitch should be sworn in, and that an investigation into the legality of the election should take place afterward as has been the custom heretofore.

A lengthy and warm opposition followed.

Mr. Trumbull moved to refer the credentials and protests to the Judiciary Committee. Disagreed to by yeas 12, nays 33. Mr. Fitch, in pursuance of a resolution to that purpose, was then qualified and took his seat. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed, by 119 against 48, Mr. Chapman's bill for a wagon road to the Pacific.

The question pending was stated to be a motion of Mr. Barber to suspend the rule to enable him to introduce the resolution from the Judiciary Committee that John C. Watrous, United States District Judge for the District of Texas be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors.

The subject was postponed for further consideration to Saturday week.

A resolution was passed changing the daily hour of meeting hereafter to be 11 instead of 12 o'clock.

Mr. Kelsey from the Special Committee, made a report that Mr. James W. Simonton has been again summoned before the Committee, and that his responses were such as to render it unnecessary to examine him any further. Under these circumstances the Committee do not desire any longer to continue him in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and therefore report a resolution that he be discharged. The resolution was adopted. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 10.

Mr. Pearce, of Md., gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill providing for the time and manner of electing United States Senators by the Legislatures of the several States.

Additional documents have been received relative to the proclamation of martial law in Washington Territory by Gov. Stevens.

Mr. Rusk, of Texas, moved the reference of the credentials of Mr. Fitch, the proceedings of the Senate and the protest of the members of the House of Representatives of Indiana relative thereto, to the Committee on Judiciary. After discussion, adopted. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill establishing the collection districts of the United States, codifying and amending the revenue laws, &c., and, after a struggle of its foes to kill and its friends to save the measure, it was tabled, by 96 against 85.

The Senate's Submarine Telegraph bill was taken up, and finally committed to the Post Office Committee.

The House then went into committee on the Tariff bill.

Mr. Boyce, of S. C., said in June, 1858, there will be a surplus revenue of $43,000,000 in spite of the extravagant appropriations of the last few years—hence the necessity of reducing the revenue. He asserted that since 1832 there had been paid to manufacturers by indirect taxation a thousand millions of dollars, and earnestly condemned the protective policy. Others opposed the bill. There was an evening session; nothing adopted. Adjourned.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Burning of the National Theatre at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6, 1857.

The National Theatre in this city was destroyed by fire this afternoon, and only the bare walls remain.

Great Rise of the Hudson River.

TROY, Feb. 8—8 P. M.

The Hudson River commenced to rise about 7 o'clock this morning, and continues to rise at the rate of a foot an hour. It is now about six feet over the docks. A large qutntity of ice from the Mohawk and Hoosic Rivers has broken up, and the river is clear as far down as two miles below the Nail Factory.

It is rising very fast now. It rose four feet between 4 o'clock and 6 3-4 this P. M. The Nail Factory is about a mile and a half south of Troy.

Navigation of the Ohio.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 9, 1857.

There are six feet of water at the Falls. The ice is still moving down and navigation is fully opened. The thermometer is thirty-one degrees above zero.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8, 1857.

A great portion of the woodwork of the Long Bridge between Washington and the Virginia side of the Potomac was swept away by ice to-day and carried down the river. The Washington end and the masonry in the middle remains firm. There is much ice still gorged above the bridge. No communication has been had with Alexandria and consequently no connection with the South. The telegraph crossed on the bridge and is prostrated.

Freshet at Oswego.

OSWEGO, Feb. 9, 1857.

The ice in the river above this place broke up yesterday morning, and coming down with great force, tore six schooners from their moorings and carried them into the lake, besides doing much damage to others lying in the harbor.

The names of the vessels carried away are Kingsford, Adkins, Sheridan, Titan, Wide Awake, and Virginia. The tugs were not able to start in search of them till this morning. Several canal boats are also loose in the lake. Small boats well manned and provisioned started yesterday in search of them, but neither have since been heard from.

Freshet in the Susquehanna.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 9, 1857.

There is a flood in the Susquehanna. The ice is gorged four miles below this city, and is piled upon the railroad some ten or fifteen feet high.

The trains are of course suspended both ways. It is reported that a couple of bridges over the Juniata have been swept away, together with several pieces of the Cumberland Valley bridge. An enormous destruction of property is threatened.

Freshet in the Schuylkill River.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb., 9, 1857.

The ice in the Schuylkill River broke up last night. Most of the wharves were overflowed, and considerable quantities of coal, wood and lumber were carried off.

A few canal boats were left on the wharves by the water subsiding. Some of them were carried down stream, but the damage done was not so serious as was anticipated.

Freshet in the Delaware River.

EASTON, Pa., Feb. 9.

The Delaware River has risen fifteen feet, and the town is flooded to the depth of five feet in some parts. A house has been washed away at Lambertsville, and also a portion of Van Cleve's foundry, at Trenton. The bridges are all in a precarious condition, the ice in some places being piled up twenty feet.

TRENTON, Feb. 9.

We have had a great freshet in the Delaware. All the mills on the river are more or less damaged. After great fears, the Delaware Bridge is safe. Hundreds of families have been compelled to move. Considerable property has been destroyed. One foundry fell. The ice is piled up in the streets adjacent to the river.

Ferocious Assault upon an Editor.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Feb. 9.

Walter S. Carter, editor of The Middlesex County Argus, was severely beaten here this morning by Capt. James De Kay, in consequence of an article in his paper reflecting severely upon the Rev. E. Harwood, Mrs. Harwood, and her sister, Miss De Kay. Mr. Carter is bleeding freely at the lungs, and his recovery is considered doubtful.

Fire at Fort Sullivan.

BOSTON, Feb. 9, 1857.

The officers' quarters at Fort Sullivan, Me., were destroyed by fire on Wednesday last, and on the following day the soldiers' quarters were nearly destroyed. The building was one hundred and twenty feet long by forty feet wide.

The Freshet in the Genesee.

ROCHESTER, Feb. 9, 1857.

There is a great flood in the Genesee River and various bridges and buildings have gone over the Falls. On Sunday morning the flood of ice and water carried away the braces supporting the buildings extending across the river, and they fell down and the centre portion was carried down. On Sunday night the whole structure, about two hundred feet long, and the centre span of Main street bridge were carried over the Falls. A portion of Court street bridge is also gone. We have consequently but one bridge remaining in the centre of the city, and the canal aqueduct is used by pedestrians.

Freshet in the Deerfield River.

GREENFIELD, Feb. 9, 1857.

The ice in the Deerfield River broke up last night, and was dammed up in the bend of the river at Deerfield Meadows. The water and ice set back, undermining and entirely destroying Stebbin's Grist Mill at Deerfield, and also from six to eight thousand bushels of grain and meal. The mill is a total loss. Two families were, with the utmost difficulty, saved.

News from the Plains.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 9, 1857.

Additional advices from the Plains have been received. The mail reached Independence on the 30th ult., after a detention of eight days, owing to terrible storms and intensely cold weather. The coaches had to be left on the road, and the mail brought a considerable distance on mule back. The passengers and men suffered greatly, and the outward train was compelled to return. A large party of Kiowas had gone to attack Bent's Fort, and troops had been sent to protect it. The party sent in search of Indian Agent Dodge had returned without tidings. The Indians report him killed.

The Suspected Poisoning Case at Hingham, Mass.

BOSTON, Feb. 11, 1857.

The developements relating to the death of Hosea J. Gardner, Postmaster at Hingham, have led to the arrest of his wife, Abigal Gardner, on suspicion of having poisoned him. Dr. Charles T. Jackson analyzed the stomach of deceased and found arsenic sufficient to cause death. Coroner Lewis, of Hingham, is holding the inquest. Mrs. Gardner is about forty years of age, and a native of Maine. Mr. Gardner was highly esteemed, and the circumstances attending his death have caused much excitement in the community.

A Wealthy Church.

In the City of Mexico, there are one hundred and fifty convents, and the number of secular clergy is ten thousand. The salary of the archbishop is one hundred and thirty thousand dollars a year, and the other bishops receive two hundred and eighty thousand dollars more. A recent valuation of the property owned by the church computes it at two hundred and fifty millions of dollars to three hundred millions of dollars. It is stated that the church owns half of the houses in the city.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté; sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondrons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses! Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

The Trusting Heart.

BY CHAS. MACKAY.

Trusting heart! tho' men deceive thee,
Tho' good fortune's noon be past,
Tho' the friends of summer leave thee,
Fearful of its wintry blast:
Love remains, if these forsake thee,
True, aye truer than before;
Why should worldly sorrow break thee?
Heart! take courage—sigh no more.

What tho' tempests gather o'er us;
Storms not always vex the sea;
Sunshine yet may gleam before us;
There are calms for thee and me.
Fortune's gifts are unavailing,
Ours are gifts she never bore;
Love unchanging, hope unfailing;
Heart! take courage—sigh no more.

The World Growing Better.

[We have extracted the following from the Liverpool Daily Post, purporting to be from the pen of a "Detective Officer." Perhaps our Christian friends here in America may see themselves in a European mirror.]

To the Editor of the Daily Post:

Sir—I am a man of some observation, and few words, and seldom trouble the reading public with my opinion, except upon rare occasions. I think I have such an occasion now; and I would like to submit a remark or two (by your permission) upon what Mr. Brown (a Member of Parliament) is reported to have said at a concert on Saturday evening last, because, I think, though Mr. Brown has proved himself to be a good and well-meaning man, that he is very much out of his reckoning, if the following was correctly reported—"Mr. Brown proceeded to say, HE BELIEVED THE WORLD WAS GROWING BETTER; society was progressing to a more civilized state, and old customs of barbarous hospitality were becoming more and more extinct. For instance, fifty or sixty years ago, no one was expected to leave a dinner party without going home gloriously drunk; but now what is the case? Men, by reason of the progress of civilization and education, seem to know 'enough is as good as a feast,'" &c.—Vide report in the Daily Post.

To the above, I would respectfully reply—

First—There is more crime, of every kind, including murder, robbery, swindling, drunkenness, debauchery (42,000 illigitimate children born in this country annually,) prostitution of all sorts, carnal and literary, in the present reign of Queen Victoria—the most virtuous lady that ever governed this country—than there was in the time of Queen Boadicea. If this is true, it would appear that the world is growing worse.

Second—As to the progress of civilization, I would respectfully take the liberty to say—as the speech in question was delivered under Christian auspices—that Mr. Brown meant to include Christianity in his idea of civilization. Now, if Mr. Brown means human progress, i. e., the people of this country, taken in the aggregate, are more virtuous, more Christian, more pious, more simple-minded—less proud, less coxcombical, I will differ from him; and that I may give him some idea of how much men may differ in these matters, I beg to say that vice, vain-glory, impiety, murder and robbery (upon highly improved and scientific principles,) infidelity, that is, a disposition on the part of many highly educated persons to treat Christianity as they would a farce, were never more triumphant than they are now; and, in Scotland, where Britons are reputed to be more "canny" than elsewhere, crime is increasing six times faster than the population;* that the preaching of Christianity has long since sunk down to the level of a mere matter of business—a mere trade—with this distinction, however, from all other commercial concerns, viz., the worst articles command the best price; and if Mr. Brown will condescend to take a walk with me some fine night, incog., I will show an illustration of the proverb, "all is not gold that glitters;" that enough is not as good as a feast; and I will take him to "old school" clubs, and "young school" clubs, and various societies—mere gorging places—where the members, though the night of the nineteenth century is far advanced, "won't go home till morning;" and where "Willie brew'd" is sung with as much meaning and sincerity as it was in the days of Burns.

"Wha first shall rise to gang away,
A cuckold coward loon is he—
Wha last beside his chair shall fa
He shall be king amang us three!"

Mr. Brown will now be pleased to hear Mr. Wakley, the coroner for the Western Division of Middlesex, with regard to the drinking habits of improved English society. "I am surprised," says Mr. Wakley, "that the legislature, which is so justly particular about chemists and druggists vending poisons, is not equally so with the venders of gin, which appears to cause such a dreadful waste of human life. Gin may be thought the best friend I have, for it causes me to hold annually one thousand inquests more than I otherwise should hold. But, besides these, I have reason to believe that from ten to fifteen thousand persons die annually in this metropolis from gin drinking, upon whom no inquests are held!" And again: "Since I have been coroner I have seen so many murders by poison, by drowning, by cutting the throat, by hanging, in consequence of ardent spirits, that I am astonished the legislature does not interfere." So much, Mr. Brown, for the "progress of civilization." Of course Mr. Wakley is speaking of London, but surely he will grant that I have no need to enforce the belief here, that Liverpool can also "take her whack."

If Mr. Brown should mean our progress in mechanical contrivances—our railways, steamshipping, telegraphs, tubular bridges, and St. George's Halls—I may assent, indeed, though by such assent I lay myself open to censure, and nocturnal annoyance from the scientific and architectural ghosts who superintended the building of the Chinese wall,* the bridges in Xensi and King-tung,† the palaces and halls of ancient Rome, Palmyra,‡ Babylon and Athens. If, however, Mr. Brown means our progress in commercial cunning and gathering money together, I assent unconditionally. And, finally, Mr. Brown must not be in too great haste to attribute every little good he sees done in society to educational effects.

In Edinburgh, and from Sheriff Alison, we have the criminal return for one year giving 2,834 educated, and only 696 uneducated offenders. Here is a convincing proof that in "Auld Reekie," at least, the "education" there dispensed is not the thing; and England, it would appear, is no better in this respect than some other places, for the following is the rate per cent. of educated and uneducated crime annually evolving out of the entire population—

Could read and write imperfectly.....	59.28
Could read and write well.....	8.12
Education not ascertained.....	2.41
Superior attainments.....	.42
Could neither read nor write.....	29.77
	100.00

And, according to other criminal statistics, we find there are some offenders who, it is suspected, (nay, it is known,) can read and write well, but feign ignorance; and who, when the census is taken during the term of their imprisonment, will give garbled and fictitious accounts of themselves, in order to preserve the respectability of their friends, and the governor of a prison cannot force the truth from a prisoner; he must leave all such statements to the offender's "honor," inasmuch as the law of England does not compel a prisoner to criminate himself.

We find, moreover, by the authorized documents with respect to police matters, that the average commitments for "malicious offences against property," and "forgery and offences against the currency," were in the following proportion:

1841–5, malicious offences against property, such as robbery with violence, burglary, &c., 1,079; from 1846 to 1850, 1,115.

1841–5, forgery and offences against the currency, where education and art must be employed as absolutely necessary to success, and as evidenced in the cases of such persons as Robson, the Royal British Bankers, John Dean Paul, Strahan & Co., Sadlier and others, 2,725; from 1846 to 1850, 2,971.

Here Mr. Brown will perceive the effects of educational advancement, the effects, in some instances, of polite education—the education which teaches us to get money honestly, if we can, but to get it.

Besides, I would point out to Mr. Brown the probability that there is much less of true religion—I mean the religion of love, and piety, and philanthropy—much less of this now than there was a hundred years ago—even with all the "bigotry and intolerance" which characterized those times. "How it comes, let doctors tell," but at the present moment, and in this country, there are more parsons, preachers, praters, professors, writers, lawyers, doctors (a few quacks!) teachers, linguists, lecturers, reporters, penny-a-liners, and other wiseacres in Great Britain, than would be necessary to direct the inhabitants of three or four worlds like ours the way to heaven and the way from hell. Yet, they fail in a small place like England; but the failure cannot be attributed to lack of means. "Money is no object" with the good people of this country who employ them*—their salaries ranging from £6,000 to £60 the year—they have it all their own way. It is fairly estimated that, independent of any care for heathen or Jew, there is annually spent in this country, one way and another, for religion, secular and moral training, of all kinds—spent in the work of progress, according to Mr. Brown's idea of progression, no less a sum than £143,000,000! that is, from the old woman who keeps her school, to the professor in the university—from Mr. Holyoake, who preaches down the church, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who preaches it up. I omit altogether the press, which gets no share of this plunder. Nor do I wish to allude to the good or evil done by that vast sweeping machine in the service of civilization, which had no existence, as Mr. Brown knows well, in the days of Julius Agricola or Queen Boadicea. O for an imagination like the Misses Fox, to view—even through a glass darkly—a company composed of the following "gentlemen" discussing the last copy of the Times over a mug of Allsop's pale and a pipe—Alexander, Socrates, Plato, Diogenes, Epictetus and Nero!

One would think it absolutely impossible for any kind of ruffianism to exist in a land so replete with religious, educational and moral machinery facilities. Was there ever a kingdom possessed of such learned societies as the following, and they are only a few of those found in the principal city of England!

The Royal Society, the Royal Antiquarian Society, the Royal Society of Arts, the Royal Humane Society, the Royal Institution, the Royal Agricultural Society, the Royal Horticultural Society, the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, the London Institution, the Royal Geographical Society, the Russelian Institution, the Royal Society of Civil Engineers, the Meteorological, Pharmaceutical, Botanic and Botanical, Astronomical, Asiatic, Geographical, Chemical, Mathematical, Microscopical, and Numismatical Societies; the Royal Society of British Architects, the Royal Society of Literature, &c. But these we know are in the metropolis, and effect the kingdom at large. Granted. But then every city, borough, town and village in England has its athenæum, mechanics' institutes, and little learned associations.

In conclusion, as I have reason to fear I have occupied too much space already, I will merely add I am serious in what I have written, and, without intending offence to Mr. Brown or any one, I beg leave to subscribe myself, Mr. Editor, yours respectfully, A Detective.

Often have we been positively astounded at the praitings of editors, ministers, lecturers and statesmen, about the superior civilization of the nineteenth century; the age of Gospel blazings, the gigantic march of human progress, the high standard of mental and spiritual culture, and the moral and virtuous intimations of the people. To those who see things as they are, it must be a problem whether these men are knaves or fools; the subject of some psychological hallucination, through which things appear as they represent, or whether they are trying to impose on the credulity of the people. Strange to say, such notions obtain general belief. Taking the most liberal view of the case, this is only to be accounted for by considering it the effects of that partiality and egotism which influence the judgments of men in deciding upon matters in which they themselves are concerned, and of that spiritual blindness caused by the thick veil which is drawn over their eyes by the god of this world. The best and most favorable interpretation of the matter is discreditable enough to the popular judgment, without believing that nearly every one designingly misrepresents the state of things, and deliberately practises deception upon the credulity of his neighbor. If the speeches, books, newspapers and conversations, which we oftentimes hear and read upon these matters, and all that has been written and said against "Mormonism," and the divine institution of polygamy, were laid before the beings of some other world, who are in happy ignorance of the corruptions of this, they would surely be led to believe that Christian nations, at least, must soon reach social regeneration, and "Mormonism" be consumed by the virtue and perfection of a redeemed world.

But these are not the facts of the case; and the writer of the foregoing letter, who, as a "Detective Officer," has ample means of knowing, is fully conscious of it, so far as modern Christendom is concerned. If every policeman, mad-house keeper, jailor, coroner, medical man, procurist, whoremonger, adulterer, prostitute, thief, murderer, and people generally, were to faithfully unbosom themselves, and make a record of all they have witnessed and committed, what a fearful, horrible volume the collection would make—what a bitter satire the contents of such a book would be upon modern Christianity, and the civilization of the nineteenth century.

The writer is keenly satirical upon the progress of society, in the education of cunning, getting money, and aptness in villany. This is more universally just than people would like to admit. There never was a time when society made less progress in moral, spiritual, healthy social development than in this boasted age. Its members have indeed become very cunning and 'cute, the stores of scientific facts are more universal, and men have greater general information now than was the case in the days of their forefathers, and the term "men of the world" may be significantly applied to nearly all. But how much has society lost of that purity of nature, simplicity, freshness, honesty and virtue, which flourished in the earlier generations of the human family! With all the meaningless talk about civilization, enlightenment, progress and march of intellect, society is every day losing some of its natural relations, and departing from the standard of manhood, while facts will make their testimony heard, touching the increase of crime and degeneracy. A fearful account is accumulating against modern civilization, which every day cries with a louder voice to heaven for vengeance.

There is another point which we will notice, touched upon by the correspondent of the Post, which no doubt has struck our readers. It is the amount of machinery at work, even in little England, for the professed object of social regeneration, and the enormous cost of keeping it going. Look at an expenditure of "one hundred and forty-three million pounds," leaving out the item which goes to the book-making department! Were there any virtue and power in these self-made priests, and teachers, and in human institutions, there certainly is abundance of material and money employed to direct, at least, the British nation, "the way to heaven and the way from hell." But does not all this prove the absolute incapacity of man to get on without God? Does not the present state of things cry with ten thousand voices to heaven for the Lord to take the reins of government? Is not such a work as "Mormonism" professes to be consistent with the universal wants of the human family? If it is not divine in its origin, at least the mission which it claims is a necessary one; and society has great need to clothe itself in sackcloth and ashes, and fervently pray that God would raise up a Prophet, and send Apostles of salvation forth to proclaim a pure Gospel again.

The Moral of the Bond Street Tragedy.

So far as the Coroner and his jury are concerned, the investigation in the matter of the death of Dr. Burdell has been finished. The verdict of the jury, implicating nearly all the persons known to be in the house at the time of the murder, and a report of the Coroner's summing up, revised by that officer, are published in another part of this paper.

The present position and past history of the parties accused afford a sad record, the moral of which should not be lost upon the community. It is the cant of the day to talk wisely about the progress, the learning, the refinement, the education of our people, the enlightenment and the superior civilization of the nineteenth century. Scholars philosophize about it—editors turn pretty periods with it—politicians make its praises share with the American eagle and star spangled banner in their fustain harangues. Perhaps it will be well enough to pause a moment, and see what it all amounts to. During what we call the Dark Ages unlimited power was given to the few, while the many were held in bondage. The favored few indulged their passions without check. Did they desire anything to minister to their pride, avarice, lust, malice, hatred or revenge? They seized it. Did any one stand in their way? The assassin's knife, the Borgia's poison was always ready. Exemplary punishments were of no value, because in cases where the accused possessed wealth and position they were exception, not the rule.

That was in the ninth century, when there were no steam engines, telegraphs, newspapers, Brussels carpets, daguerreotypes, glass windows, brown stone front modern improvement houses, patent leather boots, Bible societies, republican institutions, primary elections, revolving pistols, missionary meetings, and many other humanizing luxuries of the nineteenth. Let us see whether human nature is a bit better for all these things. There were brigands in the ninth century—fellows who went out upon the highways and took your money or your life. There were assassins—fellows who came upon you from behind and introduced sharp steel to the acquaintance of your heart or your carotid artery. Some of the brigands and assassins were men and women of good families, agreeable people, who robbed and murdered in the pleasantest style—gave soirl es dansante—were served on gold and silver—paid great attention to their religious duties, and were in every respect shining lights of polite society. Their rank and position shielded them from punishment.

How is it in our day? The barrier of rank no longer exists. Money, or the appearance of money, is the only passport to what is called good society. No questions are asked as to how he obtained his money—if he he has it he may enter the sacred circle. Once there, he is safe. It has passed into a proverb that the wealthy criminal may escape the exemplary punishment which the law institutes for the protection of life and property of the weak against the hatred or avarice of the strong. Civilization only makes acquittal a little more expensive. The feudal baron tried and acquitted himself in five minutes. The magnate of the nineteenth century is sometimes annoyed by forms of law and the criticisms of the press.

What we call civilization, then, is semi-barbarism. The number of criminals is enlarged. People are just so far educated that they can commit crime scientifically, and are not so far civilized as to realize the fact that crime is not to be committed at all. They guard against all the chances of detection; but if some accidental circumstances should bring the matter home to their doors, they rely upon the spoils of the crime to shield them from the legal consequences of committing it. You shall walk up Broadway with us, and we will show you the brigands and the assassins of this cultivated epoch—this golden age—this enlightened nineteenth century. You shall see that woman, born in poverty, defectively educated, allowed to riot in secret lust, stepping, by the virtue of a few thousand dollars, into the domestic circle where virtue, chastity and modesty should alone be permitted to enter. You shall see her at her devotions loudest in the responses, most fervent in the amen. You shall see her, as her money begins to vanish, quartering herself upon some wealthy victim, securing him by her woman's wiles—you shall see how she makes his house a hell—you shall hear their quarrels as he resists her growing demands upon his purse—you shall see how she gives grand parties without the remotest possibility of paying honestly for them—you shall see her finally disposing of her victim by steel, poison, the cord or the pistol bullet. You shall see her escape punishment, and again at liberty to prey upon society. You shall see in fashionable hotels and boarding houses hundreds of men and women who have no occupation, no fortune, no means of support, and who yet luxuriate on the fat of the land. They are all brigands, every bit as bad, and a great deal more dangerous, than their unlettered predecessors of the so called Dark Ages.

We do not mean to say that there are not good men and good women who associate with brigands unwittingly. Ignorance is no excuse for them, however. In a certain sort of society—we do not say the best, because all the cliques claim to be the best, and all the claims may be good enough—it is considered as the one thing needful to have a great circle of acquaintances—to give jammed parties, to which every one that the giver has ever heard of is invited. Mrs. Plash wishes to say that her bal costume was a greater jam than a similar affair given by Mrs. Blank last year, so Mrs. Plash drums up all her acquaintances, however slight. Mrs. Plash met Madame Dagger and the Demoiselles Dagger at Saratoga last year. They seemed to be nice, quiet, ladylike people, and cards are sent them. Now, Dagger mere is an accomplished brigand, and the Demoiselles Dagger having no money, and being above sewing machines, are in training for the same line of business. Once their feet cross the threshold of Mrs. Plash's first class house, their position is safe. They have the Archimedian lever with which they can move the cheque books of the heaviest men in Wall street. And they do it.

The male brigand is generally a man of pleasing address, who pimps for gambling houses and other disreputable places, and who takes in young men to ruin on the most reasonable terms. He always comes late to the party, but he is a great man to lead the German, very assiduous in attending upon the ladies, and altogether a very handy thing to have in the house. He makes it pay.

The course of these brigands' life—their hand-to-mouth existence—their constant familiarity with crime in its most subtle essence—steels their nerves for any act, however desperate. Let their victim once rebel, you shall hear of a mysterious disappearance, but you shall see no stain of blood upon the brigand's delicate fingers. He did not do it. She did not strike the blow. A great city always has its lower order of murderers, who make away with a bank president with no more compunction than they would feel in knocking on the head a vagabond dog.

Such is the picture which is ever and anon presented when the veil that covers our inner life is suddenly torn away by some shocking crime like the murder of Dr. Burdell. We talk about it, write about it, preach about it for a few weeks, and then it is forgotten. But the causes are still at work—the brigands of society still make their forced levies—and we still boast of our progress, our civilization, our education and our enlightenment. We are really worse than the barbarians we affect to despise. Your Feejee cannibal tells you that he is going to kill you and eat you. Your New York savage tortures you stealthily, year by year—profanes your domestic hearth—robs you of your substance—deprives you of your self-respect; and, when you are no longer valuable, ruins your character or murders you in your bed.

Mark: The cannibal of the Feejee Islands is a barbarian. He has never heard of the dispensation of our Saviour; he cannot read the Bible; he is a naked, dirty savage. You send to him your theologians, with raiment for the mind and the body. The savage of Manhattan Island is civilized, clean, well clothed and enlightened. Let us return to first principles, and have some missionaries for the barbarians of New York.—[N. Y. Herald, Feb. 16, 1857.

The Jews in Palestine.

Rev. Dr. Alton, who has visited Canada to excite an interest in the condition of the Jews in Palestine, thus speaks in an appeal which he has published:

"The political position of the Jews has been improved greatly of late, owing to the interest taken in their behalf by various Christian societies, both in Europe and America, and owing also to the personal influence of several distinguished Jews. A general impression prevails that the period of their dispersion is drawing to a close. Meanwhile, ancient prejudices are giving way; feelings kindlier and more confidential are arising everywhere. A greater freedom of intercourse exists, and more reciprocal inquiries are already established between Jews and Gentiles. A bishop has been sent to Jerusalem at the joint cost of the sovereigns of England and of Prussia. A mission in connection with the church of England has been established at Jerusalem by the London Society for Propagating Christianity among the Jews in the Holy Land. Representatives from the Roman Catholic church are swarming in the streets of Jerusalem; and the Greek church have their members and missionaries there in great force. Every mode of operation is in full vigor. A society is being formed in London for the purchase of Land in Palestine, to be cultivated by poor Jews. An hospital, with a dispensary attached, has been established for the reception of sick Jews. A House of Industry has been formed, into which the converted Jews are taken and taught a trade. Both in the hospital and in the House of Industry plenty of New Testaments in the Hebrew tongue are laid on the tables. Schools are also erected where Christian children are taught, and where the sons and daughters of the Jews learn to speak, read, and write the English language with ease and accuracy.—Thus Jews and Gentiles are united by the ties of school-fellows—a companionship which no distance in time or difference in religion can easily sever. The Lloyd, of Vienna, says: 'The German Jews, in hope of their co-religionists in the East being soon emancipated, are everywhere making subscriptions, and particularly in Austria and Prussia, in order to furnish the young Jews in the East the means of traveling in Europe to learn the sciences, arts and manufactures, so as to be able to teach them on returning home to the persons of their own persuasion. Dr Philipson, grand rabbi of the Saxon province of Prussia, at Magdeburg, is at the head of this movement.'

"Great progress has been made at Jerusalem within the last three years. In truth, every traveler can testify to the fact that Jerusalem is now in a transition state, and on the eve of some great change. The preserving power of the rabbis over their flocks is fast going down; the stubborn heart of the old Jew is failing him. His confident expositions of prophecy have disappointed him. The traditions of the Elders, and usages old as the Gospel, are breaking up. The Jews of Palestine are different from those of any other country. Although belonging to the same nation, they are another class of people entirely. They come from a different part of the world—from Smyrna, Constantinople, the northern shores of Africa, from Spain, Russia, Wallachia, and Poland. They are really a religious set of men, deeply devoted to the doctrines and predictions of the Old Testament. Many of them have gone to Jerusalem from devotional feelings alone, being desirous to lay their bodies in the valley of Jehoshaphat, among the mortal remains of the prophets. They have given up business, and torn themselves away from the contentions of life, and come to Palestine to end their days of weary pilgrimage in one of the four holy cities—Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Hebron, or Nazareth. Religion is the delight of their life.—Their hearts are full of the writings of Moses and the prophets. They adore the tradition of the Elders, and devote their life to the study of the Talmud. The immigration of Jews into Palestine is increasing very rapidly every year, and now that they have begun to cultivate the soil, it will do so more and more."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 21, 1857.

Arrival of the Hand-Carts at Great Salt Lake City.

WE are glad to learn from a letter from Salt Lake, that the last hand-cart trains have arrived in the valley. The following is the extract referred to, bearing date Dec. 6:

"The last of our hand-cart emigration arrived on last Sunday, the 30th ult. The so-called independent company, with ox trains, have not arrived; but are supposed to be at Bridger's Fort; sufficient assistance has gone to their relief to bring them all safely into the city. The weather has been steadily cold since the first of November, and considerable snow south and in the mountains, but not much in the valley, or on the line of travel as far east as the pass, except on the mountains, where it has been somewhat difficult to keep the road open."

We are informed from other sources that there has been a good deal of suffering, owing principally to their late start and the unusual severity of the weather. We are glad, however, to learn from the following extract of a letter of Gov. Young's to George Q. Cannon, editor of the Western Standard, and published in that paper of Jan. 17, that things are not so bad as many anticipated, and that, indeed, we had a right to fear from the terrible accounts of the sufferings of other emigrants, surveying and other parties, as heretofore published in THE MORMON. The Governor says:

"The past current news you will learn from our papers. The weather for some time has been and continues to be cold, but through the blessings of the Lord, all our immigrating companies have arrived, except two independent ox train companies, which are now safely quartered at Fort Bridger, and will probably arrive in eight or ten days; for some one hundred and twenty resolute men, with upwards of sixty wagons and about three hundred horses and mules, have gone out to bring them in, which they will be able to accomplish easily.

"Notwithstanding the companies now out and the two last arrived hand-cart companies were caught in the cold and storms, owing to far too late a start from Florence, yet the relief so promptly, freely, liberally, and timely sent from here was so blest in rescuing them, that but few, comparatively, have suffered severely, though some had their feet and hands more or less frosted; yet the mortality has been much less than often attends well fitted animal trains travelling in good season.

"Business remains dull; money is scarce and becoming scarcer, which will prove a great blessing to the people, if they wisely improve the lesson."

When we reflect upon the position of those emigrants, their exposed condition, and the extreme severity of the weather, we have cause of gratitude to our heavenly Father for His protecting care over them and their safe arrival at the place of their destination. We would not here, however, forget to remark, that so far from the statements being true that some of our New York cotemporaries published about those who had gone to meet them turning back, there never was a time when more extensive aid was given to the emigrants, nor more energetic means made use of for their assistance. Hundreds of men and teams were brought into requisition, and every assistance rendered with men, teams, and provisions that human energy, prompted by the most philanthropic feelings, could impart. To this, then, may be attributed, in a great measure, the comparatively small amount of suffering among so many people, so much exposed in so inclement a season. We stated at the time that we did not believe those statements; we thought we knew the Saints in Utah better; we are glad that we have not been disappointed.

From the reports one thing is very evident: that, if according to President Young's instructions the hand-carts had started earlier, there would have been comparatively no suffering. The companies that started early got through safe, with probably as little or less loss than any ox trains, having the same number of persons. It is not, then, as some have remarked, that the hand-carts are inefficient; but the trouble has been among those who started late. We were not apprised, until some time after, that companies had started so very late in the fall, and we must confess, when we heard of it, that we trembled for the result. We believe that the brethren engaged in the direction of the emigration used every exertion, and were anxious to take all through that they possibly could; but we then believed, as well as now, that much suffering to the emigrants would have been spared, and also a great deal of unnecessary trouble and expense to our friends in the valley, if the last companies had staid in Florence, or somewhere on the frontier. However, we have no reflections to make, nor are we disposed to be censorious. Men differ in their judgment in many things, and

"He that does the best that's in his power, Does well; acts nobly; angels can do no more."

For the information of those not acquainted with such matters, we condense the following, as a sample of suffering and deaths from freezing, from the Chicago Weekly Tribune:

"In Iowa and Minnesota; five men near Bradford; eleven frozen to death in Minnesota; a man frozen below Osage; two teamsters in the same vicinity; a daughter of Mr. Cary, near Lynn Grove; a young man, near Blue Grass, in Minnesota county; an old man, near Onion Grove; in same place, a whole family, consisting of man, wife, and three children; two men, Norweglans, near Fort Atchison; a boy, on his way to Howard Centre; William Rice, same place.

"The Dubuque Republican thinks that not less than fifty lives, in the last twenty days, have been lost in that way in northern Iowa and southern Minnesota—and to these may be added many more in other parts of the State, but of not so frequent occurrence."

The Nebraska correspondent of the Cleveland Pathfinder says:

"The weather thus far has been one of unprecedented severity in Nebraska. For several days at a time the thermometer has stood at 12 or 15 degrees below zero. The third and fifteenth of this month it stood respectively at 32 and 26 degrees below. Much suffering has ensued from the excessive cold and storms. Nearly every week we receive the intelligence that some person or persons have frozen to death. An Omaha Indian named Yellow Smoke, and his whole family, consisting of six persons, froze to death one day last week, while encamped near the Elk Horn River, about thirty miles from this city. The snow is now about three feet deep, on the average. Fifty miles north of here, it is said to be over five feet deep. Snow storms occur once a week, and are generally accompanied by a high wind, which renders travelling extremely unsafe."

We give the above to show how excessively severe the season has been, and if so many people, in the immediate neighborhood of friends, shelter, and home, should thus have perished through the extreme cold weather, it is to us a matter of gratification to learn that so few comparatively have suffered of our emigrants, in the fierce chilling blasts and extreme cold, without protection or home, in the elevated desert passes of the Rocky Mountains; and although we feel to sympathize with those who have suffered and their friends, we feel from the bottom of our hearts to rejoice that the whole are as favorable as represented.

While speaking upon this subject, we beg leave to refer to a rumor that has reached our ears, through various sources, that some of the parties associated with the emigration have stated that we did not interest ourself in, and were to blame for the lateness of the start of this year's emigration. At first we paid no attention to this rumor, until we were again and again saluted with the same sound. Now we very much object, in general, to pay attention to the rumors of men; besides, we know that no one acquainted with our course here could make such a statement without being guilty of deliberate falsehood and wicked misrepresentation. However, lest such an idea should obtain, we feel that in justice to ourselves it is proper to make the following statement, the which, should the rumor be false, can do no harm.

In the first place, we knew it to be President Young's views that the emigration should start early, and we wished to carry out those views. Again, it was our own fixed, decided opinion that the hand-cart trains should start early. Our reasons were that the project was new; that a great many feeble persons, as well as women and children, would be along, and that in case of casualty they would be much safer with an early start. Besides, we have always believed that more trouble, sickness, and expense was caused by detention in camp than by anything else. And we felt unwilling that any suffering should accrue through any remissness on our part; and so far from impeding, we lent all our energies for the accomplishment of an early start, and all our counsels and our moves tended to this object. So early in the season as February, when Elders George D. Grant and William H. Kimball, the first agents sent out by Bro. Richards, came to New York, this was particularly spoken of in a council where Elders Dr. Clinton, N. H. Felt, Alexander Robbins, George D. Grant, and William H. Kimball were present. I then emphatically stated that there must be no delay; that there was no necessity for any; that I believed that additional sickness and expense had occurred the year before in consequence of the emigrants laying in camp so long, and that this must be avoided. I wish you now, brethren, to be active and diligent, and when a company comes on here, and I telegraph you that they are here, all the answer to my interrogatory—"Are you ready?" is simply three letters—YES. The above-named brethren know that this is a fact. They also are well aware of my anxiety for the safety and welfare of the hand-cart emigration. To accomplish this object we assumed responsibilities very foreign to our natural feelings; for when, in a day or two after the above-named council, some instructions came to Bro. Grant, from President Richards, requesting him to go to St. Louis, he having already been appointed to go to Chicago and Iowa City to prepare hand-carts immediately, I told him that I was not satisfied about his going to St. Louis, and neglecting the hand-carts; for I was afraid of delay; but in order to meet Bro. Richards' views I was willing that he should go to St. Louis, provided he stayed no longer than one day there, and proceeded immediately to his appointment; for I was not willing that the emigration should be delayed on any consideration. I then immediately wrote to Bro. Richards as follows:

"Anxious to make the best of it I could, and not to permit any of your interests to suffer, I counselled Bro. Grant to go to St. Louis; but immediately to proceed to his appointment at Iowa City. I wished to have your instructions attended to there; but could not, of course, see the business of emigration interrupted."

The above were my uniform feelings as the brethren associated with me very well know.

When Bro. Daniel Spencer, who had charge of the P. E. Fund emigration, came here, I, and the brethren with me, rendered them all the assistance in our power, and no company was detained in the east one hour unnecessarily. Bro. Spencer being appointed by President Richards to attend to the P. E. Fund emigration, to avoid all collision or delay arising therefrom of any kind, I gave him charge of the other emigration also, and published the appointment in THE MORMON.

We published regularly, in THE MORMON, the list of passengers' names who were coming, long before they got here, and sent the papers to all the emigration agents, weekly, and gave Bro. Spencer, by letter and otherwise, all the information we had. We sent Bro. Felt three or four times to Boston, and Bro. Robbins to Burlington and St. Louis. We had Bros. Cunningham and McGraw making arrangements about the northern route early in the spring, and inquiring about provisions, cattle, &c., and Bro. Cunningham, under our directions, selected a camp ground at Iowa City. We sent William Kimball, with written instructions, to complete negotiations already commenced by us in Florence, in relation to ferry privileges, storage, lots, camp ground, and other things for the benefit of the emigration.

The following extract, from THE MORMON of April 26th, will exhibit our feelings and public course:

"As the season for emigration advances, a few words from me may not be inopportune; and as I do not know the exact whereabouts of all parties appointed to take an active part in it, I take this public means of conveying a few words of counsel to all concerned.

"I have been anticipating, according to the statements made, in the general epistle of the first Presidency, that some person or persons might be sent from the Valley to superintend the emigration in the West. In the absence of such persons, I have felt it a duty incumbent upon me to make all preliminary arrangements for the furtherance of the interests of the emigration; and for this purpose I made the appointments, already published in THE MORMON, a copy of which I have forwarded to President Young. I feel deeply solicitous for the welfare of the travelling Saints, and more especially am I anxious that everything shall be conducted properly, with due care and safety, and as far as may be practicable, for the comfort of those who may be going by hand-carts. It is a new project, and will require our greatest attention and vigilance. I have, according to instructions received from President Young, had the Northern route surveyed, and entered into preliminary arrangements for camp grounds at Iowa City. I am also now negotiating with parties at Florence, a new city on the western side of the Missouri river, the site of old 'Winter Quarters,' for ferry, storage, and other privileges on the Mississippi and other rivers; which, when consummated, I will make known. Being directed to select a place for a settlement at, or, as near, Wood River as practicable, I have appointed Bishop Cunningham, a competent, good, and zealous man of God, to select a company to go there for this purpose. In this he will be assisted by Bro. William Kimball, so far as it does not interfere with other defined duties of the latter. I wish the settlement to be on the western boundary of the recent purchase in Nebraska, and such persons to go as can make land claims according to the provisions of the late act of Congress, which I will publish another week for their information. It will be necessary that they go prepared to fence in a large field, put in grain, make a fort, and be supplied with guns and ammunition sufficient to protect themselves against Indian depredations. As Bro. Cunningham, however, will have the Presidency of this affair, the brethren selected will, of course, be subject to his counsel. I would suggest that a sufficient number of competent men be appointed to make the station perfectly secure against depredations from without. As it regards the time of starting, the selection of the location, and other matters, I will communicate with President Cunningham. I hope, however, to be along, with other brethren, to assist in establishing the location. This settlement will be a great help another year, in assisting the emigration, as it will be about one hundred and twenty miles west of the Missouri river; but it can be of no avail this year.

"In relation to the hand-carts, I have forwarded to Bros. Webb and Spencer President Young's instructions to me respecting this business. I hope they will be carried out as far as practicable, suggesting that great attention be paid to their strength, and that the best of seasoned timber be used. Not having been informed as to the exact numbers of the European emigration who would want hand-carts, I found it impossible to make any correct estimate as to the number that would be required. I have had a hundred made in St. Louis previous to learning the wish of others on this subject. These were made according to a schedule given by a committee of Elders who had just traversed the plains. They are a very neat article, well finished, ironed, and painted, well adapted for the purpose, and will cost about twenty dollars. Some time ago I appointed Elder George D. Grant to have another hundred made in Iowa City in a more primitive style, and without iron. These will cost about ten dollars each. Elder Grant is sanguine that they will answer the purpose. Elder Chauncey Webb is superintending the manufacture of a number more, and anticipates being able to make them for a still smaller sum. By having this variety we shall at least have a test of all.

"Elder F. D. Richards, President of the European Churches, has sent out our much esteemed Bro. Daniel Spencer as his travelling agent, to attend to the financial affairs of the P. E. Fund passengers. Knowing his abilities, and being desirous that everything should harmonize in relation to emigration, I have appointed him to superintend the whole of the emigration in the West. I had previously appointed those other brethren referred to; but knowing the necessity of concentration of action, and one head to dictate, I appointed him to give direction. The brethren, therefore, will receive him in that capacity, listen to his suggestions, and carry out his plans.

"I would further recommend that a constant intercourse be kept up with Bro. Spencer by the different parties employed in this business, that he be thoroughly posted in relation to all matters, so that no delay may be occasioned; but that as the passengers arrive at the place of outfit, they may immediately proceed on their journey. He will confer with me from time to time.

"THERE IS MORE LOSS, UNPLEASANTNESS, AND SICKNESS OCCASIONED BY DETENTION THAN PERHAPS BY ANY OTHER THING. I wish the passengers, on their arrival at the place of outfitting, to be prepared to start the next day, or, in a day or two, at furthest.

"Elder N. H. Felt started to Boston on the 18th inst., for the purpose of assisting the passengers expected on the 'Enoch Train,' and making all necessary arrangements for the continuation of their journey. They come by New York, as I am enabled to make better arrangements for the West direct by this route than that of Boston.

"As I am informed by President Richards, from time to time, of the sailing of vessels, I shall immediately communicate with Bro. Spencer, so that he may be duly informed in relation to the general movements, and be enabled to make arrangements accordingly.

"Praying that God may bless you, brethren, in all your laudable exertions for the welfare of Zion; that you may be blessed with union, energy, faith, and power, to bring to a successful and happy issue your present labors, and return to the bosoms of your families in peace,

"I remain your Brother and fellow-laborer in the Gospel, JOHN TAYLOR."

Soon after this Bro. Erastus Snow came, and we then considered our labors in the west at an end. If our presence had been necessary in the west we should have gone; but Bro. Spencer, who is himself a very active business man, had as efficient a body of men to assist him as perhaps ever were assembled together for an object of the kind; and, as we said before, they certainly were not impeded by us, for so free did they feel themselves of our control that they never even gave us a report of their proceedings, and we did not know of their late start until some time after their departure. In fact, so far from hindering, if ever there was a subject that we felt interested in being done speedy and safe, it was that of the hand-cart emigration; we felt it an important move, and lent it all the aid in our power.

In regard to our being uninterested, the following letter will exhibit what our feelings were on that subject:

"NEW YORK, June 5, 1856.

"BRO. SPENCER—Dear Sir: * * * *

"From the reports we get from the valley, of the great loss of cattle, and the very great scarcity of provisions, as well as the helplessness of many now on their way to Utah, having carefully examined the subject, I am more than ever convinced of the necessity of being very careful in our moves about the emigration.

"They ought to have 60 lbs. of breadstuff for every person to start with, instead of 55 lbs. per person; and I wish to propose, that you send an extra team loaded with flour to each of the two first companies, of 400 persons each. In consideration of your postponement of the cost of said extra supplies, in addition." I propose for these two first companies, to add cattle, wagons, and flour; i. e., if you send six yoke of cattle, two wagons with forty hundred weight of flour for these two first companies, to be forwarded to near Fort Laramie, I will bear the expense of three yoke of cattle, one wagon, and twenty hundred weight of the flour. But I will do this only upon these conditions, viz: that each person—man, woman, and child—go provided, as above, with 80 lbs. of breadstuff, independent of this supply, and that you, out of the P. E. Fund, advance the other half of the above supplies and outfit; and I would recommend that the companies be not informed of this arrangement until their arrival at Laramie. If this arrangement meets your views, you can draw upon me, at St. Louis, for the half of the expense of the said teams, wagons, and flour.

"By the time of the arrival of the later companies at Laramie, there will be some return from the new crop, which, with this advanced supply, will likely relieve them of much suffering. You will please inform me, by return of mail, whether you accept of the above terms, that I may make arrangements to meet in St. Louis.

"Remember me to Bros. Grant, Kimball, Ferguson, and all our brethren in the West.

"With kind regard to yourself, I remain your brother in the Covenant, JOHN TAYLOR."

* Bro. Spencer was agent for Bro. Richards, and not the principal.

We have been at this pains to set all of our friends right in relation to this matter, and we think after a review of our course all will agree with us that no person acquainted with the above facts could have made such statements as those referred to without being guilty of foul calumny and base misrepresentation.

Utah.

BY the arrival of the George Law from Aspinwall at this port, on Friday evening, with California mails, we have news from Utah as late as the 7th of Decr. For some length of time we have failed to receive our file of the Deseret News, and for the present information from that source we are indebted to the kindness of the editor of the New York Herald, who very politely accorded to us the privilege of perusing his.

The Saints will no doubt learn with surprise and regret of the death of President Jedediah M. Grant, at Great Salt Lake City, on the evening of the 1st of December last. He had been ill about two weeks, at first with chills and fever, followed by billious and lung fever. He died in the prime of life, a faithful laborer in the Kingdom of God, and much beloved by the Saints for his holy boldness in the advocacy of Truth and Righteousness. With his family we sincerely sympathize in their bereavement, yet in the midst of sorrowing their souls will be filled with consolation and joy, knowing, as they do, his sterling worth and sure position in the Kingdom of God. By the next mail from Utah we expect details, and shall publish them.

Captains Smoot and Willie, with the 4th hand-cart company, arrived at G. S. L. City on the 9th Nov., and were well received by the citizens, and ministered to in all their necessities. Of Captain Martin's arrival with the last hand-cart company, the Deseret News of the 3d of December says:—

"ARRIVAL.—Capt. Edward Martin and company, it being the last hand-cart company of this season, arrived on the 30th November. As was to be expected, they have suffered considerably from storms and inclement weather, and several have had their feet and hands more or less frosted, but are now comfortably housed and cared for.

"Notwithstanding some deaths, and the suffering and frost bites since leaving the North Fork of the Platte, we can plainly recognize the kind hand of an overruling Providence in opening a way of escape for so many, in dictating wise and timely counsels to the living oracles, and in moving upon the minds of such numbers to operate promptly and liberally, even to manifest their faith by their works. For never have we witnessed a greater general alacrity in answering to the calls of the First Presidency, and in turning out at such a time of the year with animals, provisions and clothing in abundance, to rescue brethren and sisters, that the most who went forth had never seen. Let the world oppose the gathering of Israel; let the wicked scoff, rage and imagine vanity, so long as the Saints give dilligent heed to the counsels of those placed to direct, the gathering will progress as it shall please the Most High, until, through selecting "two of a family and one of a city," the honest in heart shall have been assembled and the tares left in the field.

"CAPTS. HODGETTS AND HUNT'S COMPANIES.—A few have been brought in from the only companies still back, but the remainder are unable to come in without assistance. For this reason some 60 horse and mule teams, mostly with two spans to a wagon, left this city on the 2d inst., with a supply of provisions and forage expected to be amply sufficient for all wants, as the out-going wagons will load back with persons, and will probably be able to bring in all who can endure the journey, or are not needed to help take care of animals, that may have to be left at Forts Bridger and Supply until spring.*

"No person abroad can realize the immense self-denial and drawback upop places of comfort comprised in sending out so many fine teams and active men to encounter the inclemency of mountain cold and storms at this season of the year. Well may sinners be astonished and dismayed at the love of the Saints, seeing that they are ready, at the word, to cheerfully endure privation and hardship for the Truth's sake and the salvation of man."

* By President Young's letter it seems they had ultimately determined to bring these ox-companies into the city.—ED. MORMON.

The New Settlement.

WE wish to direct the attention of the Saints to the letter of Bishop A. Cunningham, in another column. Every man who wishes to amalgamate his interest with that of the Kingdom of God, will listen to this call, and lend his aid to the carrying out of this new movement of the Church. The advantages to be derived from the establishment of the new settlements between Florence and Great Salt Lake City will be apparent to every reflecting person. The Church, the general emigration and the settlers will be alike benefited. We hear persons sometimes expressing their regret that they had not the opportunity of taking part in the first settlements in Utah—and sharing now the honors and advantages of first on the field. They can now have both, where they are wanted, if they join the Bishop in his mission.

Anticipating that those who purpose taking part in these settlements, will require considerable information respecting the route of travel, manner, expense, best adapted implements of husbandry, counsel in drawing up stakes at home &c., we recommend them to begin immediately, and inquire of their respective presidents what they should do to save themselves from this untoward generation.

From the Bishop's letter we learn that the first company will probably start from Florence to the first settlement on Beaver river about the end of March. Be ready.

The New Volume.

TO-DAY we commence the third volume of THE MORMON. We have lately received numerous letters from brethren and friends, complimenting us on our past labors and encouraging us to continue in the same career. We cannot but feel pleased at the appreciation of our humble efforts to serve the cause of Truth, especially when such comes supported by the approbation of those whom the Lord has chosen to guide and direct His people in the last days. In coming time we shall endeavor to discharge our duties as we have done in the past, with our mind steadily fixed upon our mission—the advancement of correct principles and the advocacy of truth. We shall, with the blessing of the Most High, do our best to render THE MORMON worthy of the noble cause we are engaged in, and shall count upon those who love the ways of righteousness to strengthen our hands.

During the past two years we have frequently received letters from subscribers, complaining of the irregularity and frequent non-arrival of THE MORMON. To all who have suffered thereby we can only reiterate what we have before published, that our paper is regularly mailed to subscribers every Friday and Saturday. That there is pilfering of our paper somewhere is evident from the numerous complaints; but our subscribers are not the only persons who suffer in that particular. Some of our cotemporaries in this city receive regularly their file of the Deseret News, while we seldom receive ours, and are obliged to go borrowing from others, or but rarely see that paper. How comes this? Simple enough. There is an interest felt throughout the States on the progress of Mormonism; and when anything addressed to us from Utah passes through the hands of certain parties, by a kind of accident it falls into the wrong bag. So it is with our paper going to many subscribers. If they are known to be Mormons at home, they may count upon a dishonest post-office employee feeling at times a little curious. Our large wrapper is not always sufficient to cover our vignette from the piercing, curious, greedy eye.

A thought has just passed through our mind, and though it may flavor a little of the vendor, we venture to print it. Let subscribers, when they can, get a neighbor to subscribe, and then they have a better chance of seeing THE MORMON, as both copies are not so likely to disappear at the same time.

Old subscribers will please remember that we will only send the first number of this volume for their accommodation—a renewal of subscription being absolutely necessary to secure its continuance.

General Summary.

THE Chinese and the English are still at war, and the latter purpose retaining, when they capture it, Canton as a "material guarantee" for the better fulfillment of the last treaty. The Celestials made an apology to the American Commander for having fired upon anything carrying the Stars and Stripes. It is believed that Persia has submitted to the demands of Great Britain. Verger, the assassin of the Archbishop of Paris, was executed on the 30th ult. The want of employment in England is causing a great emigration to Canada and Australia. King Bomba's dominions are getting, if possible, in a more deplorable condition. Terror reigns throughout the capital and Kingdom. Arrests continue incessantly. A priest attempted lately to assassinate the Archbishop of Matera while he was giving his benediction to the people. The Archbishop was wounded, and a canon, who attempted to protect him, was shot dead by the assassin. Victor Emanuel has lately paid a visit to the Empress Dowager of Russia at Nice, and was enthusiastically received everywhere by his subjects.

At home here nothing very special; murders, garrotting, poisoning, and gentlemen disappearing are common things. The Burdell murder is still before the public. The Coroner's investigation lasted fifteen days, and is now in the hands of the Grand Jury. Snodgrass has been apprehended and committed to prison for perjury and participation in the murder. The Irish navies employed in tunnelling through Bergen Hill for the Erie Railroad Company, had a row on a large scale last Saturday in the little city of Hudson, N. J. Plenty of blood in the field, lots of broken bones, scarred faces, and a few persons killed. Military companies have to keep order while the trial of the ringleaders is going on. News from Walker: his friends have him up again.

We are deeply sorry to be obliged to add to our summary that the last news from Havana leave little hope of the life of Dr. Kane. He was then regarded in his last moments. This generation loses in him a great, good and noble man.

☞ THE columns of THE MORMON are open to the correspondence and articles of the Elders, but, while we believe in according full liberty to all, we hold ourselves irresponsible for the particular sentiments of any.

Correspondence of Prest. Ezra T. Benson.

35 JEWIN STREET, London, Eng.,
29th January, 1857.

PREST. JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Brother: No doubt you will be glad to have a line from Bro. Ezra. As you are doubtless aware, I have found out by experience that the atmosphere of this country and our mountain breezes are two different things; but I am getting a little acclimated, after losing nearly all my voice at one time however in the attempt.

Since I last wrote you, I have been travelling a good deal through the British Conferences, when my health has permitted. I find a good people all round, but room for improvement in some particulars, according to my judgment; but all things in their time, and the time for some things is not far off either.

I am glad to receive THE MORMON from time to time; that paper is a credit to the Church, and especially to the Editor. When your renowned Senators can find time to cease their butting at each other for a while, we shall be glad to learn how their heads sound on the Mormon "sound-board" question, "Utah's admission;" perhaps the key will be high, and not over musical. I hope, however, they will take your advice, and bring a little common sense to bear on the matter, and understand that we have inalienable rights that they cannot vote away.

I am glad to learn of the whereabouts of Bros. Parley, George A. and Erastus Snow, also to hear of "Parson Taylor's" movements. I feel thankful the latter was at New York instead of Utah, and thus escaped being "crippled and near-sighted" with the rest of his brethren. It seems we "Mormons" have a curious House of "Representatives;" for the sake of "poor humanity," we can only hope that such a company of cripples don't truly "represent" their constituents.

I don't know how you stand New York; for my part, I should soon choke in such a fog of political humbug. Figuratively speaking, talk about "cripples" and "near-sighted," to me it seems you need not go far from your enlightened city of New York to score up a few thousands of such characters, for they have eyes truly, but they see not, lest the light of the glorious gospel should shine in upon them.

I am feeling well on my Mission, and full of the spirit of preaching and testimony. Right and left I want to kick away the old guideposts that this generation have had and cling to so tightly, and point them to Zion and the revelations of Jesus Christ for their directory all the time; and the Good Spirit says: Purify! purify! call upon the people to sanctify themselves, that I may reign in their midst, and develope my power through their instrumentality.

By prayer, fasting and much diligence, we are trying to cleanse the British Conferences from every kind of rubbish, and spreading out Tracts by thousands and thousands in every street, alley and lane. In the London Conference alone they will have fifty-six thousand in circulation when the whole of the series now publishing are out. Tract Committees and General Tract Committees are being fixed up in every Branch and Conference, and the Saints are volunteering in every direction as distributors; though we find that nine out of every twelve will not receive more than the first number, yet we feel to persevere, and warn the people and leave them without excuse.

No doubt you have had news of the reformation going on in the valleys of the mountains; by God's help we wish to spread the same fire through this Mission, until this people are powerful with their God, and live so that they can command the blessings of Eternity to rest upon them night and day.

For the last few weeks I have been laboring here in London among the Branches, in company with Pastor Ross and Henry Lunt, with Elder Budge, and others, attending Priesthood meetings and addressing the Saints, in the largest halls of the London Conference. The meetings are well attended, and there is much inquiry among the people, and there are considerably more baptisms than for a year or two past.

I have read with interest of the social meetings held in New York and elsewhere, but I would like you to understand that we in London are not behind the times in such matters. One party I will mention. It was held at Westminster on the 6th of January, 1857. Elder James A. Little and myself were present; but owing to my indisposition, I did not take a very active part in the proceedings. The hall was decorated with flags, mottos, &c.; the most conspicuous were two large banners presented to the Conference by Miss Redding—one symbolizing the Bee Hive State, and the other a representation of the American Eagle standing over a Globe, between two flags, with the stars and stripes, and the words "God's Kingdom Rules the World" inscribed beneath. A large drawing of the Valley Temple surmounted the platform. Among others, the following toasts were given:

BY C. W. PENROSE:

"Brigham, Heber, and Jedediah"—A blessed Trinity; may they ever be a mighty Unity.

"The Temple"—Beautiful, original, and holy, with God for its author, His Lion for its protector, and an Angel for its architect.

"Anti-Mormon Literature"—A cup of filthiness—the dregs go to the wicked; who'll have a cupful?

"Apostates"—Rotten Branches, ready for the burning—where's a Lucifer?

BY E. L. T. HARRISON:

"The First Presidency"—One head under three hats; there are three that bear witness in Utah, and these three are one: Amen, amen, amen.

"The Presidency of the British Mission"—Mormon philosophy, backed up by Mormon thunder. The thunder is hoarse to-night, but the lightning is "live and kicking"—should they be called to lose a Little by the coming emigration, may one of heaven's Rays shine upon them so brightly as to make up the deficiency.

"Elder Ezra T. Benson"—A "whipper-in" among the Lord's huntsmen—Pottawatomie to witness! May his bow abide in strength, and the arms of his hands be made strong by the mighty God of Jacob.

"Elder J. D. Ross"—A hard hammer for soft nuts.

"The Sisters"—"Flowers of Creation," but, like other flowers, they look best in bunches! who's for a nosegay?

"The American Editors and THE MORMON"—A litter of pups barking at a hedgehog.

Bro. Little preached a good emigration discourse, and prophesied that unless some of the Saints made more efforts to get out of Babylon, a mob at their heels some of these fine days would teach them how to emigrate without waiting for a "fit-out" and a cartload of luggage; in fact, it was a first-rate practical sermon, and many present seemed to feel its influence.

When I read the manglings and twistings of the pious editors by whom you are surrounded, I feel like saying, "go it, ye cripples, wooden legs are cheap." Hell and the devils may chase "Mormonism;" it's too far on the road to be caught this "heat." So sound your trumpets, you poor miserable persecutors, and let the world know we are coming; but to the Saints, I say let us be humble and keep the Good Spirit's influence, or we shall crumple up like a broken reed, and our influence vanish like morning dew; for nothing but righteousness can stand in the kingdom of our God.

I have just received a letter from President O. Pratt, in which he says, "This morning the Salt Lake mail arrived via California." "There is a great work of reformation going on in Utah; the President counsels us to commence the work of reformation in this land; commencing at this office and with ourselves, and let it extend down through all the missionaries, and officers, and members, until all the Saints are pruned, reformed, and converted over again, in England, Wales and Scotland;" and I rejoice in it, for I know it will give a new impetus to the work here. I fully believe that all the missionaries from Utah are prepared to co-operate with us in this spirit, as well as the Elders generally, and the great body of the Saints. From the experience I have had in these lands, the spirit of obedience is on the increase among the Saints.

Bros. James A. Little and W. O. Young are expecting to sail about the middle of February for the States, en route for Great Salt Lake City; they will, no doubt, give you a call. Thousands of the honest in these lands will say, may the blessings of the Almighty go with these brethren who have so faithfully labored in the vineyard of the Lord.

Bros. Ross, Lunt, Budge, and Harrison, join in love to yourself, also to those of the Twelve who are with you, and to Bros. Stenhouse and Appleby, and all in the office.

Yours as ever,
EZRA T. BENSON.

Correspondence of the Elders.

ELDER D. M. THOMAS, writes us from San Bernardino, Cal., Jan. 5th.

"The reformation which commenced at Salt Lake has reached San Bernardino, and between three and four hundred have renewed their covenants, and there has apparently been a great change here amongst the Saints, which I hope will be permanent. Presidents Lyman and Rich, are well and daily employed in adjusting their Branch matters and teaching almost every evening at our different meetings. There is, among the Saints, generally good health and prosperity."

"This part of the country has been very dry this last summer, making pasturage very poor; in consequence of which thousands of cattle are dying in the lower counties in this State. Within the last week we have had good rains which have revived the future prospects of the inhabitants, as a great portion of the people are engaged in stock raising."

Elder A. P. Welchman, writes us from Welmington, Del., Feb. 4.

"I have preached in many places through the upper part of Delaware, in Maryland and also in Chester Co., Pa., and as a general thing find the hearts of the people closed against the influences of the Gospel of Jesus. I am becoming more and more convinced that the cup of iniquity of the people of the United States is nearly full, and with increasing knowledge of Mormonism I rejoice the more. I find some of the Saints struggling well with the opposition in the world; doing their utmost to keep the commandments of God, striving to go West. Others scarcely know what they are or where they are, what they are doing or what they mean to do—the kingdom to-day, as anciently, is the field in which grows the wheat and tares.

My principal efforts are devoted to hunting up the scattered sheep, some I have found and expect to re-baptize and re-organize them. I expect I shall get a dozen or more subscribers shortly for your valuable paper: my heart rejoices to know that it will be continued another year. For its support I will do the best I can for I realize that if THE MORMON should cease to be, the Kingdom of God would have to bewail the loss of one of the brighest stars of its constellation."

Elder Homer Ducan, writes us from Waxahatchir, Ellis Co., Texas, Jan. 20th.

"Once more I write you that you may know of our whereabouts. Bro. John Ostler is with me at present. Bros. Wm. C. Moody and John M. Moody, are in Anderson and Grimy Co., Bro. Wm. Martindale, at Grand Bluff, Panola Co.; other Elders I know not of. Bro. Martindale writes me that he has a small company that will go to the mountains next spring, leaving in March. Another company will leave this county and vicinity the 1st of April at the latest. We shall join company on Red River at Pineston or at Fort Gilson, if the Lord will, about the 15 of April, taking all the Elders from this State that I know of. I expect to be at Leavenworth City about the 15 of May ready for the plains, perhaps it may be a little later. The Saints here are determined to help to build up Zion that they may behold the joy of the countenance of our Lord. The brethren here are rejoicing in this last dispensation, the eleventh hour, knowing that we have but one hour to work. A day of warning and not of many words."

Correspondence of Judge Appleby.

Holyoke, Mass. Feb. 12, 1857.

Prest. Taylor—Dear Brother; Being desirous at all times to communicate to you the situation of the scattered Saints, and Branches of the Church where I travel, and the progress of the work of the last days, in which we are engaged, and which cheers, gladdens, and inspires the hearts of the faithful above every earthly consideration, and having a portion of leisure time this afternoon, I cheerfully occupy the same, in writing you.

The day I left New York I arrived at Bro. Young's, Westport, Connecticut, having got thoroughly drenched in the storm, in riding there in an open sleigh from the depot. On Sabbath, February 1, I preached twice at Bro. Young's, according to appointment. On Monday morning following I left for Ashley Falls and Canaan, in Conn., but on my arrival at Bridgeport, I learned that no cars had been down on the Housatonic Railroad, (the route I purposed taking,) since the Friday preceding, on account of the storm; accordingly I came to New Haven, thence to Mr. Yuttle's at Fair Haven, so on to Wallingford, North Haven, Springfield, to Keene and Gilsum in New Hampshire, and arrived at Bro. Solomon Mack's, a cousin to Bro. Joseph the martyred prophet. I tarried at Bro. Mack's over sabbath last, had meeting there, and truly he rejoiced. Bro. Mack is endeavoring to do all he can in arranging his affairs, to leave for the valley. He is a good, and noble man, may the Lord bless him and his, and give him the desires of his heart, to gather with his brethren in Zion.

On Monday last I came to Greenfield, Mass. there I found a small branch, Elder William Walker, formerly of G. S. Lake City, presiding. I tarried with them one day and night, held meeting, and enjoyed ourselves much. From thence I came to this place, Elder Walker at my request accompanying me. We arrived here yesterday, called the Saints together last evening and had meeting. There are some twenty two members here, some eighteen of them being females, from Scotland, operatives here in the Factories; some of them have been here some eighteen months, I understand, and being quite unknown. There has been but one Elder to see them since they have resided here until we came; they have been unorganized, and like sheep without a shepherd. Bro. Erastus Snow, I understand, was here some time ago, to see a relative of his, but did not know there were any Saints here, I presume. Truly they were glad to see an Elder to instruct them, and impart counsel unto them. I attached them to the Greenfield Branch, for the present, under the care of Elder Walker, who will visit them from time to time. I expect to have meeting again this evening—and tomorrow leave for Boston, Lowell, Lawrence, Lynn, thence to Wallingford, New Haven, Canaan, Westport, to New York, so as to be in Washington City, if the Lord will, early in March. The Saints whom I have visited, with few exceptions, are endeavoring to live their religion, and preparing to gather up to the Valley of the Mountains. The weather is very cold here, the travelling has been very bad—first on account of snows that blocked up the Rail Roads, and made travelling almost impossible on the waggon roads, the snow, as a general thing, being even with the top of the stone fences. On last Saturday and Sunday there came quite a rain, which, with the melting of the snow produced a terrible freshet, which has done considerable damage to Rail Roads and otherwise.

My health is tolerable, except sore lungs on account of much speaking—My kindest regards to yourself, and all in the office. May peace be with you all. Amen.

I remain yours, &c., W. I. Appleby.

Letter from Bishop Cunningham.

St. Louis, Feb. 10, 1857.

Editor Mormon,—Dear Sir:—I find in perusing The Mormon of the 17th Jan., that you have not received my report relating to the settlements in Nebraska Territory, I will therefore again give you a few outlines.

I left Florence the 6th of Nov., with a small company to look for a place in order to make a settlement. We located on Beaver river, 100 miles from Florence, and there made large claims. It is a beautiful country, well adapted to farming and to raising stock. We returned to Florence on the 15th of the same month, and I immediately wrote to you, giving you some account of our prospects. On the 24th of Decr. I left Florence for Quincy, Ill., where I expected to find the copy of The Mormon that I had requested to be sent there to my address; but I was disappointed. I wrote to you from Quincy, the 12th of Jan., and in the letter sent you $11 of subscription money, with a list of names, but have not yet learned that you received it. I have made a contract for an engine and saw mill, which we expect to take to our new settlement in April. I would like to invite my brethren, through the columns of your valuable paper, to come and share with us the blessings of making a new settlement.

Come, brethren; come with your teams, wagons, plows, seed, grain, potatoes, in fact every kind of seed, so that we may raise a good crop this season. I have made arrangements to have a portable grist mill taken out by harvest. I expect to return to Quincy in a few days, and shall proceed on to Florence the latter part of March, and then shall start for the new settlement at Beaver river as early after as possible. Those who are ready will then go on, and others will follow. May the Lord bless all who bless Zion.

A. Cunningham.

[The letter referred to with the subscription money, was duly received, and the papers forwarded.—Ed.]

The Fallibilities of Scientific Evidence in Medical Jurisprudence.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune:

Sir: The science of medical jurisprudence unquestionably is intended to teach that truth and facts are alone the desiderata to be sought for, whether introduced before a Coroner's inquest or a Jury in a Court of Justice. These requirements, it is to be feared, are too often lost sight of. In treating, as I now do, of scientific evidence, as it pertains to medical jurisprudence, I am not forgetful that I take high ground against plausible theories, philosophical experiments, and medical antecedents, as well as against customary trammels, and the opinions of the admiring and astounded million, who, ignorant upon this branch of natural philosophy, accept the results of scientific research as the evidence of immutable mathematical truths. The fallibilities of scientific evidence to the thinking mind, present themselves as a subject of the highest importance, demanding the profoundest attention of every one; they relate to the loss of liberty, to life, to death.

The records of important criminal trials for the last thirty years afford many proofs of the compressible, the expansive and the elastic nature of the scientific reasonings, as well as the philosophy of scientific evidence. Fortunately, however, in these recorded cases, in accordance with those immutable principles of an Eternal Justice, blood will cry from the earth, "murder will out." It is not contradictory scientific evidence which developes and fixes the crime, but other proofs, which, in an eminent degree, have been brought to bear, and which have verified science as an accessory, rather than that science has enacted the part of principal in elucidating or verifying facts or doubts.

In the case of the celebrated Madame Lafarge, tried in France some years since for poisoning her husband, I commented upon tests usually employed for detecting and testing poisons found in the human stomach—for example, opium, nux vomica, strychnine, tobacco (juice,) arsenic, corrosive sublimate, coculus indicus, &c. Now, everybody knows, or should know, that of the above vegetable poisons, more or less are often used in the adulteration of beer and porter, and sugar of lead and other mineral poisons in adulterating champagne and other wines. These poisons, too, are frequently taken or administered in these popular beverages, either for the purpose of committing suicide or murder. Who shall swear to or prove the character of individual poisons under such circumstances, with simple tests merely? Will or can chemical science do it? So far, it never has. My objections attracted the attention of the celebrated French toxicologist Orfila, who at once perceived their correctness, and the French press at the time acknowledged their obligations to Orfila for his toxicological investigations— which were the means of saving Madame Lafarge's life.

Prussic Acid—On this subtile poison Guy's Hospital Report says "that a liquid may have the odor of prussic acid when chemical agents fail to detect the poison;" and the Judge who tried Tawell for the murder of Sarah Hart, in his charge to the Jury, laid it down as a rule, "that the smell of prussic acid was a proof of its presence, but the absence of the smell was no proof of the absence of the poison." Facts, not medical jurisprudence, convicted Tawell.

In the case of the murderer, Palmer, of strychnine notoriety, who destroyed wholesale by the use of strychnine, antimony, &c., the trial proved that scientific evidence was signally at fault; the most eminent men disagreed upon the poisons found, and upon chemico-medical science. It was other chains of circumstances that convicted the greatest murderer on record; but the murderer died without confessing the crime, and scientific evidence, as well as the guilt of the convicted, is still, and ever will be, an open question for debate.

The common law secures trial before a jury of twelve (competent) men. Yet, according to the usual mode of proceeding, a man placed on trial for a capital offense by poisoning may be convicted or acquitted, resting on the judgment of any one man, who is professionally a chemist, and whose judgment, one way or the other, may rest upon an impure or imperfectly formed test. For who ever heard of a chemist—notwithstanding the numerous poisons and adulterations in common food and beverages—discovering any other poison than that poison he has been requested to search for! The prisoner can bring no evidence that the tests used are pure; and if pure, that the process of testing is conducted in a proper manner. The Court awards the prisoner counsel, but no chemist to ascertain the manner of conducting an analysis that may affect his life. The chemist, therefore, in fact, is the judge, the counsel and the jury combined, in his tests and judgment!

Of all the practical nonsense ever brought to bear in medical jurisprudence before a Court of Justice are the fallibilities of scientific evidence in proving the presence and characteristics of human blood; male human blood from the female blood, and again contra-distinguished from the blood of the lower animals. When Webster was tried for the murder of Dr. Parker, a distinguished man of science stated that the use of the microscope is the best and the safest and the most certain method for detecting human blood. Not so in New Jersey. In the case of the murder of Suydam by Robinson, the chemist preferred chemical tests, and the few spots of blood scraped from, and with a portion of new pine boards, where the blood had dried and remained dried for several days, were stated in evidence to be "male human blood." All this was of little consequence, as other and more palpable and practical evidence convicted Robinson. Yet no chemist in Robinson's behalf exhibited his scientific evidence to show that the three separate and compound agents, pyroligneous acid, turpentine and time and atmospheric influence, may have, (as no doubt they had) decomposed and altered the chemical and physical character of the blood tested. In the case of Colt for the murder of Adams, chemical tests were used, and after ten or twelve days had elapsed, spots of dried blood were scraped from and with a portion composed of the carbonate and sulphate of lime, &c. This lime, powdered and administered to any person poisoned by any mineral or vegetable acids, will neutralize and render inert these poisons, entirely changing their properties. It was other proofs that convicted Colt. Yet Colt had no chemist to show how and in what manner time, evaporation, carbonate and sulphate of lime and atmospheric influence has changed the characteristics of the "male human blood."

What are the chemical tests to detect and distinguish male from female blood, and female from the catamenial fluid, and the human blood from that of the lower animals?

The serum of the herbo-carniverous human blood and that of the herbivorous ox, according to Berzelius, are as follows:

	Human blood.	Ox blood.
Water	905.00	905.00
Albumen	80.00	89.00
Lactate of soda	4.00	4.79
Muriates of soda and potassa.	6.00	6.00
Soda and animal matter	1.52	1.21
Loss	3.48	3.00
Parts	1,000.00	1,000.00

The ashes of salva, filbine blood of the ox, and human blood, in one hundredth parts, give the same figures, as closely as the above, of their constituent parts, so as to render their elementary constituents nearly the same. Mons. Le Cann and others differ from Berzelius by adding two fatty substances (one of which is chrystaline,) &c., to the blood; and they differ also in the various figures, and add additional constituents. When authorities disagree, who shall decide? Where is and what is the test, then, to distinguish (chemically) the human from the various blood of animal creation? The Colleges of Medicine, no doubt, would be willing to learn. Well, we have it. It is the all-wonderful microscope, the all-faithful, never-failing, never-mistaken microscope. It sees "fungi" of infinitesimal particles floating in and filling the atmosphere—superinducing cholera and other epidemics—that one of these "fungi" so small in comparison with the ultimate dilution of a homœopathic atom, would appear to the astonished optics as a huge massodon. It sees murderers in dead men's eyes—like the "moon hoax" telescope of magnifying powers; it sees things that do not exist in any other place than in the imagination. I may ask, what does the microscope prove regarding the blood? It is usual for physiologists to torture frogs, in connection with, and to ascertain the difference of, the physical formation, and the circulation of the blood against the physical formation of the human blood.

Why the blood of man, "the image of God," should be placed in juxta-position and comparison with that of the mean reptile frog, remains for the physico-logical physiologist to explain—unless, indeed, as Prof. J. A. Smith observed, that man in his embryo state is in existence analagous to the tadpole! The dignified and flattering physical difference of the human blood is sought after then, not from that of the noble-blooded and highly nervous-strung animal, the lion, or from the ignoble, phlegmatic pig, or the proud, full-blooded rooster, or the mimic ape, or the blowing whale—from none of these—it is the reptile frog's blood that is chosen—the distinguished and the distinguishing difference of which is, that the globules of the human blood are said to present the physical appearance of rings like round O's, rings like flattened O's, all sorts of rings of round O's. The globules of the frog's blood present (physically larger) oval rings O, flattened oval rings, and all sorts of oval rings. The wonderful dependence upon the results of microscopic research from eminent chemists' experiments who are used as authorities as reference may illustrate what truth there may be in philosophical evidence. The size of human globules, as found by these eminent men, was as follows:

By Young	1-1660 of an inch diameter
By Bawer	1-1700 of an inch diameter
By Liewenock	1-1940 of an inch diameter
By Jurin	1-3240 of an inch diameter
By Kater	1-4000 of an inch diameter
By Wollaston	1-5000 of an inch diameter
By Berzelius	1-6000 of an inch diameter
By Liebig	1-8000 of an inch diameter

Which chemist is correct? How will frogs' globules compare with globules of human blood so varying in size? Liewenock, at one time, said that one thousand millions of globules of blood were not larger than a grain of sand! Wonderful microscope! Then Haller never could see globules in warm-blooded animals, but he could see them in cold-blooded animals. Some chemists insist that no physical difference exists in the globules of the various animals, "all are alike;" others say that the globules are not rings, but solid; others, that they are hollow, round, flat, spheroid, &c. The celebrated Majendie, after much patient and numerous microscopic experiments, never could discover globules in the blood; he could only see "coloring matter;" but he found that the human blood assumed all the peculiar physical appearances of other experimentalists, according as the particles of blood were situated within the focus of the instrument. He found that all the appearances of the human, as well as the blood of the lower animals, produced, at pleasure, the various forms by the mere variation of the position of the blood. Thus, then, errors of the imagination and optical illusions have influenced, may influence, and do influence experimentalists, according to the wish or the habit of the individual and the experiment will be in accordance with his independent originality, or absence of originality, when a mere copyist of what others have published before; thus giving ex cathedra, the confirmatory as well as the contradictory results and opinions of the chemical nature and physical difference of the human from the blood of the lower animals. Whether it is commendable in the laws, or whether usage shall be prolonged to condemn and execute or acquit a man upon the fallibilities of such microscopic hallucinations, or to hang or acquit a murderer upon the chemical test of one chemist, employed by the prosecution, remains for time and an enlightened public to decide. Facts, and not scientific evidence, have convicted criminals. Scientific evidence only has tended to mystify and not to elucidate. It was so in the case of Webster, it was so in the case of Lafarge, in the case of Palmer, and many others, and always will be so. So confident am I that no chemist can be found who can detect one blood from the other, or who will undertake to solve this scientific problem, that I am safe in my position in making this offer.

There shall be given one pint of human male arterial blood, one pint of arterial ox blood, and one pint of venous blood of each, one pint of human female blood and a pint of the catamenial fluid, one pint of pig's blood and any quantity of frog's blood; these shall be severally placed in separate vessels and numbered by the parties superintending the investigation, so that they may be distinguished by them and unknown to the chemists who shall undertake to test and point out the blood belonging to the animal from which it was taken, or simply to distinguish the male and female human blood from the lower animals. I confidently believe that none will hazard their reputation, by undertaking to solve this interesting problem, and if they do, I am confident that they will fail to distinguish one fluid from the other, with the exception of the catamenial, which has such unmistakable peculiarities that science need not be consulted to distinguish it from the arterial or venous blood of any animal whatever.

New York, Feb. 9, 1857.

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

Washington, Feb. 11, 1857.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock, and immediately repaired to the hall of the House to take part in the speaking and counting of votes for President and Vice President of the United States, in pursuance of the resolution passed some days since.

When the Senate returned to their chamber from the House, Mr. Bigler, the teller on the part of the Senate, made a report as to the counting of the Electoral votes, adding the fact that the electors of Wisconsin did not assemble and cast the vote of that State till the day after the time prescribed by law. Though the vote of Wisconsin could make no difference in the election of President and Vice President at the present time, the Senate was all the day occupied with the discussion of whose right it would be to decide on receiving or rejecting a like vote, should such occur at a future time. Pending the question, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Washburne (Me.) under the instruction of the Committee on Elections, made a report, concluding with a resolution, that John W. Whitfield is not entitled to a seat in the House as the Delegate from Kansas, and moved that the further consideration of the subject be postponed till Saturday next.

Mr. Oliver (Miss.) moved to lay the resolution on the table, and made a majority report, and asked to have read the memorial of Mr. Whitfield in response to the report of the majority of the Committee.

Further proceedings were interrupted by the arrival of the time fixed (12 o'clock) for opening and counting the votes of the electors of the several States for President and Vice President. The Senators, accompanied by their officers, entered, the members of the House receiving them standing. The President of the Senate took a seat on the right of the Speaker.

Mr. Bigler, on the part of the Senate, and Mr. Jones (Tenn.) and Mr. Howard, on the part of the House, acted as tellers, and occupied the Clerk's desk.

The President announced the object of the joint meeting, it being pursuant to law and in obedience to the concurrent orders of the two Houses.

The President first opened the vote of Maine, which was read by the tellers, and continued taking the various States in rotation.

The certificate from Wisconsin having been read, Mr. Letcher said he understood the electoral vote of that State was cast on the 4th instead of the 3d of December, as prescribed by law. He did not know what was now the proper course, but desired that the fact might be brought to the attention of the country. The time might come when such a state of things would convulse the Union.

The President of the Senate said that Mr. Letcher was not in order while the tellers were counting the votes.

All the votes having been counted, the tellers reported the result, with the fact that all the returns were found regular, and the electoral votes cast on the proper day, excepting those of Wisconsin. These were cast on the 4th, instead of the 3d of December.

The President then announced the state of the vote in detail, and in further execution of the concurrent orders of the two Houses, announced that James Buchanan and John C. Breckenridge were duly elected President and Vice President of the United States for the term prescribed by the Constitution, commencing on the 4th day of March next.

Here commenced a lengthy and confused discussion about receiving the vote of Wisconsin, during which a member of the Senate proposed the retirement of that body from the convention, which was sustained, and they retired. After some time Mr. Florence moved that a committee be appointed to inform Messrs. Buchanan and Breckenridge of their election.

Mr. Campbell (Ohio) offered a resolution setting forth that Congress was satisfied of the election of Messrs. Buchanan and Breckenridge, but that for the reason stated it is the opinion of the House that when the Senate again return to the House, the vote of Wisconsin ought to be counted, and that the Senate be notified of the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. Letcher suggested that a Committee be sent to the Senate.

Mr. Campbell replied that the Senate went away of their own accord, and hence he would not accept the amendment. When they returned he trusted that they would be treated with becoming courtesy.

Further debate was continued, and without taking the question the House adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 12.

Mr. Wilson offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on the Post Office to inqure into the causes of the repeated failures of the mails between New York and Washington during the present season, and report what legislation, if any, is necessary to regulate the evil.

Mr. Pearce offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the presiding officer to appoint a Committee of three to make the necessary arrangements for the reception and inauguration of the President elect.

Mr. Crittenden offered a joint resolution that the electoral vote of Wisconsin in the late Presidential election, being given one day different from that prescribed by law, was, therefore null, and ought not to have been admitted and included in the count of electoral votes.

After a brief debate the resolution was tabled.

The Senate concurred in the House resolution for the appointment of a Committee to inform Messrs. Buchanan and Breckenridge of their election. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Jones of Tennessee offered a resolution that a committee of two be appointed by the House and one by the Senate to wait upon Messrs. Buchanan and Breckinridge and inform them that they were duly elected President and Vice-President for four years from the 4th of March, 1857. Mr. Jones said that this resolution was agreed upon by the Tellers.

After much opposition and an effectual motion by Mr. Walbridge to lay the resolution on the table, it was adopted.

A resolution was adopted to close the debate on the tariff bill on Monday next. The House then went into Committee of the Whole on that subject. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 13.

On motion of Mr. Walker, a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of War to communicate copies of all reports which may have been made to that department by the officers who were sent to the seat of war in Europe in 1855 and 1856.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of private bills.

After transacting some unimportant business adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed several private bills, including one giving a pension to a black man who acted as a spy in the War of 1812.

Among many reports of a private character was one presented by Mr. Chaffer from the Committee on Patents, extending Hayward's India Rubber patent for seven years.

Other business interposed to prevent a vote. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 14.

On motion of Mr. Weller of California the Senate considered the House bill for the construction of a wagon road from Fort Kearney via the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains and the Great Salt Lake Valley to the eastern portion of California, and it was passed.

On motion of Mr. Toombs of Georgia, the Senate took up the Minnesota Land bill, introduced by him in compliance with a memorial from Gen. Shields and others.

Mr. Stuart, of Mich. explained that the quantity of land granted by the bill was one million three hundred thousand acres—much less than some of the States have received.

The bill finally passed by yeas 32, nays 10. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation of $10,000 for instituting a series of researches for promoting the manufacture of niter.

The consideration of private bills was resumed.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Tariff bill.

SENATE. Feb. 16.

Mr. Weller presented the credentials of Mr. Gwin, Senator from California, was qualified and took his seat.

Mr. Fessenden presented the credentials of Mr. Hamlin, Senator elect from Maine from the 4th of March next.

On motion of Mr. Fish, a resolution was adopted, calling on the Postmaster-General to inform the Senate whether any, and if so, what additional legislation is required to insure the transmission through the Post Office, and delivery to the persons to whom directed, of public documents franked by members of Congress.

Nothing of general importance was done in open session. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Washburne (Ill.) from the Committee on Commerce, reported, under a suspension of the rules, about fifty Senate bills making appropriations for River and Habor Improvements, which were referred to the Committee of the Whole.

There was an earnest Parliamentary contest between the friends and foes of the bill authorizing the settlement of the clams of a company of South Carolina Militia for services during the war of 1812. Three hours were thus spent. The subject was passed over till Monday next.

The House went into Committee on the Tariff bill. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 17.

The Senate passed the bill in addition to an act the more effectually providing for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States; also the bill to amend the act providing for the better organization of the Treasury, and for the collection, transfer, safe keeping and disbursement of the public revenue; also the bill confirming to the several States the swamp and overflowed lands therein.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill to increase the pay of officers of the army. Passed after debate without amendment.

On motion of Mr. Toombs a resolution was adopted calling on the Committee of Commerce to inquire into the expediency of exploring the River Niger in Africa.

On motion of Mr. Brodhead, a resolution was adopted directing the Committee of Commerce to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretaries of War and the Navy, under direction of the President, to employ such officers as they think proper to make such exploration and verification of general surveys already made for a ship canal near the Isthmus of Darien, to connect the waters of the Pacific with the Atlantic by the Atrato and Trundo Rivers.

Mr. Johnson, from the Committee of Printing, reported in favor of printing twenty-seven thousand extra copies of the Mehanical part of the Report of the Commissioner of Patents. Agreed to. Adjourned

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Wakeman called up Mr. Barbour's motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate's Submarine Telegraph bill was referred to the Committee on Post Offices. The consideration of this bill caused much discussion finally Mr. Wakeman moved to re-commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, where such amendments as proper could be made. Agreed to.

The House passed, by a vote of 99 against 79, a bill for the relief of the people of Kansas; and repealing all the rules and regulations, purporting to be laws, adopted at the Shawnee Mission by a body of men claiming to be the Legislature; and declaring invalid all the acts and proceedings of that Assembly; likewise providing for a new election of members to the Legislature, and pains and penalties for illegal voting and unlawful interference with the rights of voters.

A separate vote was taken on the preamble of the bill declaring unjust and unwarranted the test oaths prescribed for voting or holding office in Kansas, and that the House Committee of Investigation report that the Legislature was not elected by legal voters but was forced upon them by non residents, in violation of the organic act of the Territory, and having thus usurped legislative power, it enacted cruel and oppressive laws. Adopted by 95 against 68. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 18.

The bill to prevent the counterfeiting of United States coin was passed; also a bill supplimentary to the act of March, 1851, to ascertain and settle private land claims in California.

The Senate passed the bills dividing Missouri and Texas into two Judicial districts.

Mr, Gwin, of Cal., gave notice of his intention to introduce bills authorizing the construction of Northern, Southern and Central Pacific Railroads, and securing the right of pre-emption on Californian lands.

Mr. Bell, of N. H., presented a petition from the Boston, Concord and Montreal Railroad companies, praying for a grant of lands to enable them to pay the debts contracted in constructing the road. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, reported back from the Committee of Ways and Means and the Senate's Submarine Telegraph bill, with the following amendments, viz.: That the United States and the citizens thereof shall enjoy the use of the said submarine telegraph communication for all time on the same terms and conditions which shall be stipulated in favor of the Government of Great Britain and the subjects thereof, recognizing the equality of rights among the citizens of the United States in the use of said submarine communication, and the lines of telegraph which may at any time connect with the same at its terminus on the coast of Newfoundland and the United States, in any contract so to be entered into by such person, persons or association with that Government, and providing that it shall be in the power of Congress, &c.

An ineffectual effort was made to table the bill, which was passed amended as above, by a vote of 112 against 81. The amendments require the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, presented a bill, and explained that it was reported by a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means last session, and modified by adding various articles to the free list, and leaving the item of wool with a proviso that all wool of the value of sixteen cents or less, and fifty cents and over, per pound, at the port of importation, shall be duty free, and leaving the intermediate kinds with the present duty of thirty per cent. Lead, hemp, iron and sugar remain as they are. This bill would reduce the revenue six millions of dollars directly, and probably four to six millions indirectly, by the facilities it would give the manufacturing interests of the country.

This, after a debate and the offering of other propositions, was agreed to as a substitute for Mr. Millson's bill, which contemplated a reduction on all the present schedules. The former is still open to amendment.

The House concurred in the Senate's amendment to the Coinage bill, making it lawful for two years to pay out at the mint the new cents authorized to be coined for the fractional parts of the Spanish and Mexican dollar. Adjourned.

The Moniteur de la Flotte publishes a letter from Manilla, dated the end of November, giving the following details of the late hurricane in the Philippine Islands:—

"About the middle of last month we had very heavy gales from the westward, but about the 24th the weather became more calm and the wind veered round to the south. On the 25th there was a complete calm, with particular indications which are well known to the inhabitants as presaging some violent collision of the elements, and considerable uneasiness prevailed. In the morning of the 27th the wind rose suddenly, and went on increasing in violence during the whole of the day, and became at length one of the most terrific hurricanes that had ever been witnessed in the country. Trees were torn up by the roots, houses carried away, and men and animals in the fields dashed to the ground with terrific violence. All the island of Sunda is literally ravaged, and the town of Manilla only presents the appearance of a heap of ruins; the quays and houses along the banks of the Passig have been blown into the river; in the capital alone upwards of 5,000 houses have been destroyed. All the archipelago of the Philippines has suffered; Mandinao, Soulou, Palaouan, Leyta, and Panay have been completely desolated. On the small island of Samar, where there were 300 buildings, not a house or tree now remains—all have been swept away. Boats which had been previously on the shore have been since found many miles inland, and a small river in the southern part of the island has been dried up by the force of the wind. On the glacis of the city of Manilla some guns were blown from their carriages and carried to a distance of more than 100 yards. The number of houses destroyed is immense, far greater than was at first supposed. The loss of vessels on the coast is not yet known, but it must have been quite considerable. This hurricane, which lasted altogether about eight hours, exceeded in violence that of 1776, and was felt in all the Philippines at almost the same moment. It has been also felt at Borneo and the Moluccas, and as far as Java, but in a less violent degree.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu!

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

The Saints' Invocation.

BY MISS H. R. KNOW.

Roll on thy work, Eternal God,
And speed the glorious time
When thy pure Gospel, spread abroad,
Will gladden every clime.

When burnish'd error will return
To chaos, whence it came;
When truth, the lamp of life, will burn
With clear, Celestial flame.

When knowledge, flowing from on high,
Will o'er the earth be spread,
Deep-mantling as the waves that lie
Upon the ocean's bed.

O, give the happy period birth,
When strife and war shall cease;
When all the nations of the earth
Will learn the arts of peace.

When foul iniquity will hide
In shame its hateful head,
And wicked men no more in pride
Upon the righteous tread.

When all the people will be wise,
And all their dealings just;
When lying tongues and envious eyes
Will moulder in the dust.

When Zion will be plac'd on high
In bold security;
When all the watchmen, eye to eye,
Upon her walls shall see.

When love to God and neighbor, will
Pervade each human breast;
And in the light of Zion's hill
The nations all be blest.

When Zion's lofty towers will rise
Above all earthly height;
And, mingling with the joyful skies,
Eclipse yon orbs of light.

Propel thy glorious kingdom forth,
Extend its light abroad;
Perform thy purpose on the earth,
Thou great, Eternal God.

New York, Feb. 14, 1857.

Mr. J. Taylor—Dear Sir: As the subjoined report contains a new theory, affecting much more than the subject at issue in the paper read, and the deductions from it appearing correct and reasonable, I think it will prove interesting to many of your readers.

I am not prepared to say how far it may or may not be capable of demonstration, under the various conditions to which it may be subjected; but, it is to be desired that the author of the following paper, having found, (if I may so term it,) a rough gem; will take measures to have it cut and polished so that its value and truth may be apparent.

Yours truly, W. J. Silver, C. H.

A PAPER,

READ BY MR. W. MT. STORM,

Before the Scientific Club of the American Institute, on Wednesday, Feb. 11, 1857.

REPORTED BY ELDER WM. J. SILVER.

Subject—The Chemistry of Steam, as Bearing upon the General Construction of Steam Boilers.

We must, to render the investigation of this subject of any value or avail, first bring to a focus what light we may upon the darkest points of our subject, in our efforts to advance in the knowledge of any general law or laws, to be observed in the general construction of Steam Boilers; for, as to the rest, we need little further enlightenment to enable us to draw clear and definite lines for the boundaries of our subject.

Of practical every day facts and effects, we have a large capital; while, of the fundamental causes, which are the keys to unlock the secret of the existence of many of those facts and effects, we labor under a greater shade of ignorance in what most concerns us, than almost any other class of professionists. This, however denied, is as true as it is mortifying.

In direct return to our subject; we must bear in mind that it is not in itself, that the Steam Boiler interests us; for it is only an instrument we employ, as a necessary evil in a sense, to accomplish the only end we have in view; viz. the cheap and rapid generation, and ready and safe control of steam, as a motive agent; leaving out of consideration its importance as a chemical agent, to the artizan, as contra-distinguished from the mechanic. The application of Steam relates to the Steam-Engine, not properly to the Boiler, and would be merely incidental to the present subject.

The chemist would scarcely be so bold, not to say absurd, as to design an apparatus for forming a given neutral salt, without first making himself master of the laws governing the affinity of the alkali and the acid that combined to form it; and had learned the chemical equivalents of each; in other words, until he had analyzed it. Let us then, at least attempt to analyze steam, before we assume to decide what should or should not be fixed conditions in the general construction of Steam Boilers.

Therefore it is indispensable that we consider, as preliminary, the question: What is steam? Strange as it may seem, it is a question few engineers have asked themselves. Even the more able minds in that field have devoted their attention too exclusively to its Dynamics; ignoring or not appreciating, and not appreciating because not sufficiently investigating, its chemistry.

It is thus that a heterogeneous mass of facts has been accumulated, upon which a fashion, rather than a solid system, has been established, such as an exact science would aspire to; governed by, and based upon, some fixed and guiding laws; upon which its phenomena and correct practice would unfailingly depend.

In regard to this comparatively neglected field, the chemistry of steam, I assert that it is susceptible of the clearest proof that all its phenomena, whether useful or detrimental, are fundamentally of an electrical nature, and controlled by electrical laws, from the condensation or vaporization of a drop of dew, to the explosion of a steam boiler, or the formation of an iceberg.

I would say, as it were in parenthesis, that I have spent several years and some thousands of dollars in the experimental study of the fundamental laws of electricity; principally, in regard to their relation to meteorology, and to steam as a motive agent, and, from various reasons deduced from scores of experiments I have become convinced, that during the process of forming steam, the water takes up what we recognize by the term heat, so long as its increment may be noted by the thermometer, but at the instant a particle of water at the boiling point flies into elastic vapor at the same temperature, it takes up what would be more properly expressed as combined electricity, than by the usual term of "latent heat," a term, in itself, in some respects, paradoxical. In either case the source of it being the combustion of the fuel in the furnace certainly, and its developement being due probably to the greatly less specific electricity, hitherto, I believe, unrecognized, of the products than of the elements of combustion; of carbonic acid, than of the oxygen and the combustible.

Steam at the atmospheric pressure for instance, instead of being water combined with 212 degrees or nominal units of sensible heat, added to 990 "latent," may be more truly described as water impressed with 212 degrees of temperature and combined with 990 equivalents of electricity.

Everybody has a specific electricity, the equivalent of and identical with what is now termed its specific heat, which means simply the quantity of heat converted by any means into the condition called latent, while that body is being elevated to any given temperature, which is only an attendant condition, and this latent heat, so called, is, in truth, combined electricity; the attending temperature, by its very presence, as it were, causing the given body to have a stronger affinity for, and power to receive and convert this electricity into a latent condition; in other words, it simply renders its specific heat, i. e. its specific electricity, greater, while its capacity, other things equal, is less, than the ratio of the increment of temperature, and thus, that electricity becoming combined or specific, is prevented from being sensible to the electrometer, any more than the supposed latent heat is to the thermometer.

It may not be altogether irrelevant to remark that, combined, latent, integral or specific electricity, these being equivalent terms, never developes magnetic effects or polarity, as does electricity, which we may properly term superficial, as distinguished from combined, whether static or dynamic, and, vice versa, magnetism produces superficial electrical effects. The separation of electricity and magnetism is, in many respects, but more confusing, although, in every case, one or the other may be considered a primary, and the other a secondary or induced condition, and their relative antecedence has a most important influence, normally, upon the structure of all bodies, for, in the case of the latter, the body, as a whole, will be crystalline or fibrous, as wood, ice, or asbestos; and in case of the former, homogeneous in organization, being an aggregation of spheroidal atoms, as oil, water, or vapor; whether the atoms be solid or vesicular, or the fibres, in the other case, solid or tubular.

Latent heat, combined electricity, is the cause of all expansion in homogeneous bodies. Its conversion to that condition and their expansion being always simultaneous and inseparable, one cannot occur without the other.

Steam, for instance, is a homogeneous body, and, in its expansion, the total amount of the dynamic effect it has exerted, whether usefully realized or not, is exactly measured by the number of degrees of temperature it has lost in so doing, for that is the measure of the amount of heat it has converted into the latent, whether it be called in that condition heat, or electricity.

The same laws apply to gases, as well as steam or other simple vapors, in fact, gases generally are but the vapors of some liquids, known or unknown to the chemist, but that, to exist in the liquid form may, or may not, require the attendant conditions of greater pressures and less temperatures, than those of the atmosphere, or than any yet produced by art.

Why electricity can become latent during the expansion of bodies, especially seriform bodies like steam, is as hard a question to solve as why heat should become so, under the same circumstances, if we accept of the heat theory. It is quite possible that, in either case, if it were practicable to separate and insulate a single atom of steam by itself, we would find its electricity sensible to a correspondingly delicate electrometer.

That immense quantities of electricity are developed from steam, whatever be the source of that electricity, is already well known, and has been for several years past, and a boiler of about 4 horse power, specially adapted to that purpose, is referred to by Noad, which gave flashes of lightning over 20 inches in length at the rate of about 200 per minute, the steam issuing from it at a pressure of about 60 pounds per square inch.

Faraday tried a series of experiments on a very small scale, which superficially indicated that, the electricity developed from steam was due to friction upon the nozzles from which it issued, and he so decided, which dictum having gone forth to the world, the world is satisfied.

I believe however, that it will yet prove to be but one of the many instances, where erroneous opinion has been taken for granted, as fact, and shews how prone the human mind is to believe by habit and from hearsay. If each thinker would ask himself: Do I know this? he would be startled to see how little he knew of his own positive knowledge; and high authorities especially, having promulged error, dislike to recant.

Compared to this, unbiassed ignorance is worthy of respect; for it stands upon neutral ground, and is open to conviction; while accepted and maintained error is the most fatal of barriers to the approach of truth, silencing the independent investigator, under penalty of being considered a conceited innovator, because a rebel against those Czars of science, the men of reputation.

The supposition that the intense flashes of lightning developed from effluent steam are produced by its friction upon a few little issue nozzles is most improbable. It is evident we cannot manufacture electricity, therefore, it must be developed from somewhere, that we may accumulate it at particular points; and no power is adequate to compel this accumulation of a fluid whose pre-eminent property is repulsion, but the power of electricity itself. Whether we are awake to it or not, it is only by electrical agency that we ever do or can develope it, and I believe it to have been specific or combined somewhere, or it could not have been developed.

I would suggest, as a probable law, that, in every method of developing electricity, not induced dy the presence of other already electrized or magnetized bodies, the amount developed, whether positive or negative, will be proportional to the amount of oxygen, concentrated or diffused, whether chemically or mechanically, but particularly the former, and, however the connexion may be disguised, I think we will always find such the case, if we search to the fountain head.

Now let us see how all this, bearing upon the theory of specific electricity, relates to steam: I will call attention to the fact, that, just as certain as electricity in motion, but conducted, not absolutely free, produces magnetism, so, wherever electricity is in motion but unconducted, it produces light and fire.

We put water in a boiler and place coal on the grate; but the oxygen of the air and the carbon of the fuel have little or no affinity while cold and nothing occurs. In common language we must light the fire, in chemical nomenclature we must bring a portion of the combustible, or the supporter, or both, at some limited point of contact, to a state of incandescence or a temperature of about 800 degrees Fahrenheit.

At this point the chemical affinity, which combustion simply is, becomes intense, heat is developed and communicated to other surrounding points, affinity and combustion are spread through the mass; temperature, light and electricity, whether identical or not, are set free.

Electricity, unconducted and in motion; always attendant upon which are light and fire as before pointed out, is developed its quantity being as the difference, between the specific electricity of the products, and that of the elements of combustion, proportional also, almost, if not entirely, to the oxygen consumed; as in the same case the heat is to be.

As heat—temperature—was necessary to bring about the affinity that produced combustion, between the oxygen and the carbon, so was temperature necessary to produce a similar affinity, for electricity, on the part of the water, to cause it to absorb it and take vapor form; and, let it be observed, as circumstantial evidence of what forces are at work in this case, that, there is no medium state between the existence of the water as a liquid and its existence in the vapor form. The change is instantaneous with each particle by itself.

How is it that the water, in being brought to the boiling point, expands by heat, as we commonly consider it, only about 1-30th of its volume; and having received this heat but slowly, water being but a poor heat conductor, at once expands many hundredfold, and has suddenly become capable of taking up, in an instant, much more heat than it had received during all this previous time? I leave the question for advocates of the "latent heat" theory to answer.

This, at least, would be fair proof that the heat at this point of becoming latent is converted to something else. Which, although contrary to what might at first appear, involves, if true, something more than a mere change of terms; whether considered as latent heat or latent electricity, because although equivalent in their effects, our minds are aroused to a very different understanding of what we have to deal with, in the generation and control of steam, and can bring to bear all those laws, so familiar to us, relating to electricity, both as aid and protection, which would not be deemed applicable, if we considered it simply as heat rendered inert and incapable of exerting any sudden and uncontrollable force. For, although it is now generally admitted that heat and electricity are but different phenomena of the same cause, and, that they are also sometimes, if not always convertable, yet it is well known that heat and electricity are universally recognized as agents, possessed of very different properties, and controlled by very different artificial means.

If we assume that it was electricity that it took up in this latent form, as a particle of water flew into steam, warm water being a good conductor of electricity, every adjacent particle would supply its quota.

In lieu of the electricity of effluent steam being derived from friction, as Faraday assumed, I consider the friction as only the means of its transference, while, condensation is the means of its developement, and the "latent heat," so-termed, its source.

The electrical theory of steam has its bearing on our subject in the most direct manner, for taking electrical laws as our guide, and not only what are familiar to us as laws of heat simply, we shall be directed in our course to the adaptation of the proper means for the more rapid and cheap generation with ready and safe control of steam.

As passing proofs of the soundness of the theory of specific electricities, and its reference here to the assumption that the latent something of steam is latent or combined electricity, I would offer as proof: First, that wherever electricity is developed from steam no other equivalent for the latent heat can be found. Second, that a charge of electricity of moderate intensity, passed through water at the boiling point, flashes it instantly into vapor; and herein lies the secret of steam-boiler explosions, as distinguished from simply bursting asunder by an over pressure.

Again, place two like vessels equally filled with water, under equal conditions of temperature &c., one being insulated and the other being provided with a good conductor from the water to the earth. In equal times, a far greater amount of water will have disappeared from the latter than from the former; and, as in this as in most other cases, the affinity increases with the temperature, there would be a still greater difference, if the water in each vessel could be kept warm by some means not in connexion with it, as a reflector.

In conclusion, I will remark, that the laws which apply to vaporization will, by their inversion, apply equally to condensation

As the absorption of electricty into the latent form, whether it be directly or by the conversion of heat, is the cause of vaporization and expansion in steam, so would the drawing off, so to speak of this electricity, could it be effected, produce its sudden liquefaction and condensation.

Such means, for instance, as a brush of wire on the end of a negatively electrized conductor may yet be applied in the progress of knowledge, in lieu of a jet of cold water, in the condenser of a steam engine.

Plurality of Mites.

I fell asleep the other evening after dinner. I had been dining alone, and, the more serious business of meat and pudding having been disposed off. I had sat for some time idly playing with the cheese, some loose dry crumbly bits of which were lying about my plate. I fell asleep and had a dream.

I dreamt that in some strange unexplained manner (when was ever anything explained in dreams!) my eyes became all at once endowed with microscopic power, and, happening to light upon a crumb of cheese, beheld a goodly colony of mites. I watched their movements. As I looked, they seemed to increase in size, until I could distinctly single out individuals from the mass. I saw them striving and struggling with each other, some of the weaker getting most cruelly trampled under foot by others who marched over them; I saw them toiling with difficulty up the caseous mountains, or resting quietly in the deep shady valleys into which the inequalities on the surface of the cheese were magnified. I saw some of the larger, plumper-looking mites hoarding up heaps of the rich matter that formed at once their food and the dwelling place; and I saw other leaner ones who, dig as deeply as they would into its substance, never seemed to be able to get food enough to eat.

Then, as I looked, I thought I heard a sound like voices in the distance, and, by degrees, my ears partaking of the supernatural powers already enjoyed by my eyes, I caught their accents, found that I could understand the language of the mites.

"What a brave world is this of ours!" cried an old fat mite whom I was watching (he spoke louder than the others, and his were the first words that I caught.) "How bountiful has nature been in placing us upon it! Here, have we all we want—our food provided for us, and to be had simply for the picking up. Had we been cast upon the dreary void that separates us from the nearest world to this, we must have died from hunger. Look over yonder; what now appears to you a tiny spot in the distance, once formed a portion of this world of ours. Now it is millions of our longest measure from us."

On hearing this, I could not for the life of me refrain from laughing, asleep though I was. The distant object that he had pointed out was one of the crumbs of cheese that I had scattered with my knife some half an hour before; the dreary void that intervened was about two inches of the plate which chanced to be uncovered.

I listened again. The old mite was discoursing learnedly about the atoms that made up their universe. "Look where we will," he said, "we find on every side, far, immeasurably far from us, small specks to all appearance, but supposed to be in reality worlds like our own. It has been said, indeed, that they possess inhabitants like ours; but that we cannot know. Convulsions do occur sometimes that bring two worlds together; but, when this happens, those residing near the spot where the phenomenon occurs seldom survive the shock. Whole nations have been sometimes known to perish in the collision; some being crushed to death, and others thrown far from any habitable spot by the concussion."

Then came a mite apparently much older than he who had already spoken, and declared that he knew, of his own knowledge, that the worlds around must, to a great extent, resemble this. Long, long ago, he recollected that the whole, formed one enormous mass, vast beyond all conception; that by degrees, with fearful shocks, the worlds they saw in the far distance were, one by one, detatched and flew off into space. He was too young, when these disruptions happened, to know much about it; but he had pondered on it since, and felt convinced that all existing matter, their own world, and the thousands that they saw around them, once formed one mighty whole!

A derisive shout of laughter followed this assertion. The thing was too preposterous to be believed. The younger mites especially were boisterous in their incredulity. They were not going to be taken in by tales like that—they knew better. There was no other world beside their own. The bit of cheese they dwelt on was the only bit of cheese that ever was, or would, or could be habitable. See what a size it was. No mite could walk round it in a lifetime. If what they had been told was true, how insignificant would this great world of theirs become, compared to the enormous whole! How very insignificant the individual mite! No, no, there was no other habitable cheese.

The old mite shook his head, and spoke not. For my own part, I felt half tempted to convince the skeptics of their error by scraping all the crumbs together on my plate, and thus once more uniting their scattered universe. But I had heard of the disasters that ensued whenever these convulsions, as they called them, did occur; and, having by this time conceived an interest in the tiny disputants, I spared them and continued listening.

"Come, now," exclaimed one of the incredulous young mites with the air of one about to put a poser, "if you have told us true, and everything we see around us is cheese like this we live in; if there really exists as much cheese as would make a thousand of our worlds; why may not there be even a thousand times as much as that again! Why may not there be cheese enough in being, to form a million, million worlds—all fit for mites, like us, to live on, eh!"

"Why not, indeed!" the sage replied. "For my part I believe there is."

"Ho! ho! ho! ho!" There was not one mite in the whole community that didn't fairly shake its tiny sides with laughter at this wild assertion. They all declared the old mite must be in his dotage. They kicked and cuffed him cruelly, and even threatened to expel him from the cheese he stood on, and so compel him to find out the truth of his own theory by endeavoring to make a pilgrimage to one of the distant worlds he spoke of.

Then, other mites came up to join in the discussion. There was one who had been a great traveller (how proud the little fellow was of his experience! he had been nearly half-way round the crumb of cheese they all resided on.) He astonished his hearers, by declaring that, in spots that he had visited, there were objects visible in the distance utterly unlike the little specks they saw from where they stood. One in particular was more than fifty times as big as any they could see; but even this was nothing when compared with the great world they lived in.

(Mistaken mite! The object that you saw was the distant lump from which all your pigmy worlds were shaken!)

As to there being other bits of cheese inhabited besides their own, the traveller would not hear of it. It was true that there were other mites dwelling in distant portions of their world whose manners differed in several ways from their own. (His audience seemed surprised to hear that even this could be; but he had seen them, so there was no disputing it.) But as for the other worlds of mites, the thing was too preposterous!

Then came another—a mite of most imposing aspect, and attended by a long train of followers. I soon found out he was the monarch of the colony I was observing. With royal condescension, the sovereign mite paused to inquire into the subject of discussion. On being told, his majesty grew wroth, and vowed it was high treason to suppose there could be any other communities to govern than the well-known and established nations of their world. It was an insult to the dignity of the few favored mites who divided the sovereign sway among them, to think that there were others who in their own spheres might be no less potent (or even more potent—which was a horrible and blasphemous thought!) than themselves. So, the poor mite who broached the theory about other worlds was ordered to recant on pain of death; and the fact was established unmistakably by royal edict, that there was no cheese—could be no cheese—inhabited, but theirs.

Then I awoke, roused from my after dinner dream by an Italian boy beneath my window, grinding on his organ Home, Sweet Home. It chimed in well with what I had been dreaming of. No place like home! No people like ourselves, no country but our own, no worlds but the globe we live on. No cheese that mites can dwell in, but our own particular crumb!

Yet cheese—and milky cheese—is sold by tons! Yet suns and systems roll around us; the planet we inhabit, but one atom in a mighty group; that in its turn, an atom in another mightier one. Where shall we stop! Clusters of satellites revolving around a world; clusters of worlds revolving around—what!

Take physic, pomp! Pride, get thee hence! How little any of us, men or mites can comprehend what may exist beyond the limits of our one especial crumb—whether of earth or cheese!—[Household Words.

The Ostrich.

The cry of the ostrich so greatly resembles that of a lion as occasionally to deceive even the natives. It is usually heard early in the morning, and at times also at night. The strength of the ostrich is enormous. A single blow from its gigantic foot (it always strikes forward) is sufficient to prostrate, nay, to kill many beasts of prey, such as the hyena, the panther, the wild dog, the jackall, and others. The ostrich is exceedingly swift of foot; under ordinary circumstances outrunning a fleet horse. "What time she lifteth up herself on high, she scorneth the horse and his rider." On special occasions, and for a short distance, its speed is truly marvellous, perhaps not much less than a mile and a half in a minute. Its feet appears hardly to touch the ground, and the length between each stride is not unfrequently twelve to fourteen feet. Indeed, if we are to credit the testimony of Mr. Adamson, who says he witnessed the fact in Senegal, such is the rapidity and muscular power of the ostrich, that, even with two men mounted on his back, he will outstrip an English horse in speed. The ostrich, moreover, is long-winded, if I may use the expression; so that it is a work of time to exhaust the bird. The food of the ostrich, in its wild state, consists of seeds, tops, and various shrubs and other plants; but it is often difficult to conceive how it can manage to live at all, for one not unfrequently meets with it in regions apparently destitute of vegetation of any kind.—[Anderson's Africa.

The earthquake which was felt in San Francisco on the 9th Jan. seems to have extended nearly throughout the entire length of the State. The shock was felt at Sacramento at 7 3-4 o'clock A. m., in San Francisco at 8 1-4, at San Diego and other points along the southern coast at about 8 1-2 o'clock. At the latter place it was more severe than any similar visitation within the memory of its oldest inhabitant. Men and women rushed from their houses into the street; the shock lasted several minutes. By express from Fort Tejon we learn that the shock was also felt at that place and lasted from three to five minutes, shaking down adobe walls and chimneys. One Mexican woman was killed. Many of the streams throughout the lower country were turned from their usual channels.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, FEB. 28, 1857.

The New York Tribune and its Utah Correspondent.

WE transfer to our columns a long letter from the New York Tribune of Feb. 13th, and also extracts from another of the 24th, with Mr. Greeley's comments. We publish these, not because of their truth, nor because we care anything for the unblushing falsehoods and meanness contained in them, but in order that our brethren in the West and in Utah may know something about their maligners both there and here. As we presume, there cannot be many persons, even Gentiles, so mean in Utah as not to be easily distinguished by those letters, we shall leave them to father themselves; but at present we wish to say a word in relation to Horace Greeley and his course. We do this because we have met with many of our people who have expressed a favorable opinion of him, and we wish them to be undeceived. We have discovered, for some time past, that if there was any dirty business to be done about Utah, he was always on hand, and his columns are always open to any and every nasty story that either himself or his delectable correspondents can concoct; in fact, we have some time regarded him as the New York editorial scavenger, and his paper as the receptacle of the very dregs of filth and pollution that can be raked and scraped together by the fœted talons of his craven, anonymous correspondents. Furthermore, it is our candid opinion, that if he had the influence, and could, by any means in his power, cause the destruction and extermination of the Mormons, he would not shrink from any misrepresentation, falsehood, or other means, no matter how diabolical, to accomplish his fiendish ends. We have watched his course, and the above are our candid sentiments; nor are we alone in this matter. The Albany Atlas makes the following remarks:

"The Pharisees, with Beecher, Greeley, and Co. at the head of them, propose to exclude any State from the confederacy which refuses to persecute the Mormons, after the fashion of the 'border ruffians' of Missouri and the mob of Illinois; for Beecher, Greeley, and Co. are not jealous, but so holy that they cannot live in a Confederacy, any one of whom can be guilty of wickedness like this. The zeal with which these men and their followers rush to the solution of this question, (the admission of Utah,) by the expedient of a test of conformity or process of exclusion, shows how

'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

We know that Mr. Greeley excuses himself, and so did most persecutors and defamers in every age of the world; but with us facts speak louder than words, and we feel it our duty to lay before our readers those things that they may know who are their maligners, the manufacturers and circulators of falsehood.

If Mr. Greeley, however, is sincere in what he publishes and professes to believe and state, we are prepared to discuss the subject of Mormonism with him, either before the public or in any other way; and are prepared to prove that Mormonism, including polygamy, is both as scriptural and philosophical as any other system, and that the inhabitants of Utah are more moral, virtuous and patriotic than any other city, State or Territory that he can refer to. If he refuses to do so, and continues to circulate his vile calumnies, we shall publish him as a wilful defamer and barefaced liar. We can account for men catering to a morbid, vitiated public appetite for the sake of dimes; but when this degenerates to wilful and malicious lying and wholesale slander, and aims at the liberties and rights of a whole community, it is inexcusable even in the worshippers of mammon. We have thought of noticing several items of his correspondent's last letter, but in looking over it again we find that it is a wholesale tirade of abuse, without scarcely the semblance of truth. There is one item, however, to which we would wish to draw the attention of our friends, and that is his "bead" story. Now no man, that was not an abandoned wretch, could ever conceive such a thing; and we would recommend our friends in Utah to be on their guard against poison, infection, or any association with such vile scum as he and his compeers. He says: "I have noticed articles in Mormon papers denying the existence of slavery in the Territory," and pronounces it as mendacious, &c. Now will Mr. Greeley or his anonymous correspondent quote from these papers those statements? We allow people to go to Utah from the North, East, West and South, and never yet thought we had any right to use either "Sharpe's rifles" or "border ruffianism" to prevent them. We have been of the opinion that Americans had a right to settle anywhere in America. We know that this opinion is a political heresy in the estimation of Mr. G., but we can't help that; these are our sentiments. Furthermore, to prevent the Indians from making war upon one another in order to obtain prisoners to sell as slaves to Mexicans, who came frequently to Utah, as the slave-dealers did to Africa, to purchase those captives, the Legislature passed an act to stop this traffic, and another authorizing the purchase of Indian prisoners, stipulating that they should be well fed, clothed and schooled, and at a certain age liberated, after the method of apprenticing in these States. Perhaps this method would not suit Mr. Greeley; he likes underground railroads and unconstitutional and dishonest means, to carry out his philanthropic purposes. We believe in equal rights to all; and although not strong advocates of involuntary servitude, and many abuses associated therewith, we don't believe in turning thieves and robbing by the grace of God; our acts are all open, and we are willing they should be investigated.

In regard to the babies being "nearly all white headed," we think that Mr. Greeley's correspondent must have been laboring under a hallucination, and had everything so mixed up with Mr. Greeley and the color of his wool, that it has, to his vision, transformed all the babies' heads to the hue of that of his patron. If all stories are true, however, we think there will be some few blackheaded babies, arising from the zeal of some of those correspondents to introduce a better (!) stock among the Indians. In regard to ignorance, schools, vice, &c., we let it pass. But now comes the cap sheaf. This blatant, filthy liar now turns religious and moral, and sets himself up as a reformer; hear him: "We want here the Bible, a free press, faithful missionaries, and a complete system of education." We would advise him to take an emetic and a few ounces of salts, to hire a nigger to scrub him in the hot springs, to take a bath in the Salt Lake, to put on clean clothes if he has any, and then to speak for a passage to California; his piety may pass current there—it is altogether below par at Salt Lake. The Bible! missionaries! education! in the mouth of such a vile wretch—what next! why, his endorsement by Horace Greeley. O tempora! O mores! It is true that Mr. G. partly repudiates some of the first article—he feels a few qualms of conscience; but the thing is so good and so nice, that he must publish it, and the second he unquestionably endorses. We have been at a loss to comprehend how a man like Horace Greeley could conceive that such a wholesale abandonment to profligacy and meanness could exist, among a whole community, as that described by his amiable correspondent, unless he has met with it among his Fourierite friends—so many of whom are now bitterly repentant and helpless; but we do not believe that such depravity exists even among them. Human nature is bad enough, as exemplified in New York and other eastern and western cities; but we opine that it is scarcely as degenerate as he has painted it. But how does he reconcile what he is pleased to term the "auricular confession" with all this impurity? Is that in accordance with his former philosophy? Here it is:

"THE QUESTIONS INTRODUCED BY BRIGHAM YOUNG IN HIS NEW SYSTEM OF AURICULAR CONFESSION.

Have you committed murder, by shedding innocent blood or consenting thereto?
Have you betrayed your brother or sister in anything?
Have you committed adultery by having any connection with a woman that was not your wife (or man that was not your husband?)
Have you cut hay where you had no right to, or turned animals into another person's fields without his consent?
Have you lied about or maliciously misrepresented any person?
Have you borne false witness against your neighbor?
Have you taken the name of the Deity in vain?
Have you coveted anything not your own?
Have you been intoxicated with strong drinks?
Have you found lost property, and not returned it to the owner or used all diligence to do so?
Have you fulfilled your promises in paying your debts, or run into debt without the intention of paying the same?
Do you pay your tithing promptly?
Do you teach your family the gospel of salvation?
Do you speak against your superiors in the Church or against any principle taught in the Book of Mormon, Book of Doctrines and Covenants, or against the revelations given through Joseph Smith the Prophet and the Presidency of the Church as now organized?
Do you pray in your family, night and morning, and attend to secret prayer?
Do you labor six days, and rest or go to work on the Sabbath?
Do you and your family attend the ward meetings?
Do you preside over your household as a servant of God? and is your family subject to you?
Have you labored diligently and earned faithfully the wages paid you by your employers?
Do you oppress the hireling in his wages?
Are you acquainted with any circumstances connected with the cutting off from this earth by our Danite brethren of any person unworthy to reside upon it? If so have you ever revealed the same to any enemy of the Church?
Have you ever broken any of your vows to the Church by communicating in any manner to its enemies the nature of those vows, or of the most sacred rites of our endowments and covenants?"

Now although we have never heard of any of these questions being put to the people, we have heard of a reformation which gave us very great pleasure. And we are prepared to receive most of this statement as correct. Taking away the Danite portion, the putting of the people under oath, the murder operations and a few little items of this kind, for which, of course, we must make some little allowance. How does he reconcile this with Mormon impurity and vice? Is a scrutiny so strict, as that which is here described, a vigilance which enters every house and makes the most searching inquiries into the acts, practices and faith of the people, compatible with that corruption of which Mr. Greeley speaks? Why the forbidden things are many of them those that are practiced daily, by what is here called respectable society. If the gentleman seriously believes it, he is a bigger fool than what we took him for.

In regard to the above questions we are prepared to believe that even in Utah, among a population of one hundred thousand persons, there must necessarily be a large number that could not say not guilty, although we believe his correspondent's statement to be a fabrication. How would they stand the test in New York? If men who set themselves up as patterns to society cannot stand the loose ordeal of a Congressional investigating Committee, the degenerate part would cut a sorry figure with the above Mormon test. We would here state that we have no auricular confessions, nor anything secret in our confessions, if we have any they are confessio aperta, or open, and we think that an open confession would be good for other persons' souls, as well as the Mormons.

One thing more. Is it not surprising that a man claiming the respectability of the Editor of the New York Tribune, should magnify and apparently gloat over what it describes as the miseries of the Mormon hand cart emigration? Now they were bad enough, God knows; but not as bad as he would represent and as he would have it, we gave an account in The Mormon of last week; that may be relied upon. After fully endorsing his very candid and truthful correspondent's statements, he says: "we have never heard of anything so shamefully dirty or so wretchedly repulsive." Mr. Greely your memory is short. We can refer you to a man that you probably may have heard of—Col. Fremont—who led quite as sickly, dirty, ragged and frozen a company to Utah; who fed them on the entrails of dead animals to whom carrion was a relish, who lived for some time on the carcasses of worn out horses and mules, and considered their boiled skins a dainty; some of whom died in their saddles, and were left unburied and uncared for; who were ragged, in many instances shoeless, unwashed, unshaven, and filthy, with frozen feet, fingers and bodies; and who if they had not fallen in with the Mormons would all have perished. To use your own words, Mr. Greeley, "This cadaverous caravan" reached "this miserable mecca," they were fed, nursed, washed and cared for. These miserable Mormons had a degree of sympathy for poor suffering human nature, they felt it a duty to relieve their fellow man And a Col. Smith who is now in the East, and whom you have calumniated, in one of your vile articles, as a cripple, than whom there is not a more gentlemanly, courteous, honorable man to be found, was among the first to give this poor famished company aid and succor.

These, last, then, were all gentlemen, Col. Fremont, a "Pathfinder and a Hero." The Mormons a "Cadaverous caravan endeavoring to reach their miserable mecca." Such is Mr. Greeley's philosophy. We have read of immense sufferings in all parts of the East and West from freezing, perhaps we have noted more than a hundred published as frozen to death in different parts, in the midst of houses, farms and civilization. We have felt to sympathise with their misfortunes, and have felt grateful that our brethren, with all their exposure, have suffered no more. We had not expected to find persons to gloat over their misery. And then after all this with affected piety and humanity he says:—

"Will some one who may have the opportunity and the heart, call the attention of those emigrants who may come to New York with the intention of an overland journey to Utah, to the painful and disgusting details which our correspondent furnishes."

Why Mr. Greeley we will do that for you. We have a congregation of some five hundred who meet in Brooks's Assembly Rooms in Broome street, New York, twice every Sunday. We invite you to come, sir, and deliver your lectures, we invite any clergyman, or any number of them, of respectability to come and aid you in your reforms, we will promise you at least a candid hearing, and if you or they, can make any convert you are welcome to them. These people, notwithstanding your publications, are all calculating to go to Utah. Now if you are as sincere and as philanthrophic as you profess, do come and enlighten us. Send your missionaries here, to convert us, as it is much easier than going to Utah.

As we have already said more on this subject than we caculated to do, we will now give the testimony of gentlemen who can speak of the respectability of the citizens of Utah: gentlemen who are not afraid of exhibiting their names, who have no nom de plume, who are not anonymous, and whose respectability will perhaps not lose in the comparison either with Mr. Greeley's anonymous correspondent or the philosopher himself.

You say we are immoral. We qoote the following, as we prefer the testimony of others to our own, on this subject:—

(From the Missouri Republican, 1847.)

"WE notice in the papers of Philadelphia, that T. L. Kane, Esq., delivered a lecture on Tuesday last, before the Historical Society of this city, on which occasion he reviewed the history of the Mormon people from the period of their ejection from Nauvoo, to the time of their settlement in Deseret. * * * * * *

"I have given you in terms, the opinion my four years experience has enabled me to form of the Mormons, prererring to force you to deduce it for yourselves from the facts. But I will add, that I have not yet heard a single charge against them as a community—against their habitual purity of life, their willing integrity, their toleration of a religious difference of opinion, their regard for the laws, their devotion to the Constitutional Government under which we live—that I do not, from my own observation, or upon the testimony of others, know to be unfounded."

The following is from the speech of the Hon. Truesman Smith, delivered in the Senate of the United States, July 8, 1850. Published in Washington. Gideon & Co., Printers.

After reading a letter from Dr. Bernhisel, of whom he says, "Dr. Bernhisel is the agent of the people of Deseret, he is a native of the City of New York, a gentleman of respectability and intelligence, and worthy of all confidence," he continues, "The statement of Dr. Bernhisel touching the wonderful progress made by the people of Deseret, within a space of time, incredibly brief, is abundantly confirmed by a letter which I received from Gen. John Wilson, dated at Salt Lake City, Sept. 6th, 1849, from which I submit the following extract:

"A more orderly, honest, industrious and civil people I have never been among than these, (meaning the inhabitants of Great Salt Lake City,) and it is incredible how much they have done here in so short a time. In this city, which contains now, as I believe, about four or five thousand inhabitants, I have not met in a citizen a single idler, or any person who looks like a loafer. Their prospects for crops are fair, and there is a spirit and energy in all that you see that cannot be equalled in any city of any size that I have ever been in, and I will add, not even in old Connecticut. Gen. Wilson is now Navy Agent at San Francisco, and is a citizen of the first respectability."

The following is from the pen of Mr. Fuller, at that time editor of the New York Mirror, who visited Salt Lake—not the present Mr. Fuller, his former colleague, under date of ——:

"A more industrious, honest, law-abiding community can hardly be found. The municipal regulations of Salt Lake City are admirable, and a more moral (barring their open polygamy) and orderly citizens we have never seen in any part of the world. They number very many men of intelligence and education, and a residence of several weeks among them failed to note a single "vagabond" in their midst. They are exceedingly hospitable to California emigrants, and furnish them supplies at reasonable rates. Their settlement is a great benefit to "overland travellers."

At the Legislative party, given in Salt Lake City, at the Social Hall, on the 1st of January, 1855, an address from Hon. J. F. Kinney, Chief Justice United States Supreme Court, Utah Territory, being announced, he rose and said:

"This is to me an occasion of rejoicing—this a time when the mind will reflect on the past history of this country. I can scarcely realize that we are here, ten or fifteen hundred miles from civilization, and yet we are in the very midst of it—not only civilization, but the most perfect refinement. I am reminded of the words of Daniel Webster, on the occasion of celebrating the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. 'The same heaven,' he remarked, 'is over our heads, the same earth under our feet; but all else how changed!' The same remarks may appropriately be applied to this Territory, when we consider only seven years have gone since this people landed here, without food to support them, living on herbs and roots, and behold now the splendor, the magnificence and taste that has been displayed here, we may wonder and be astonished."

At the same party the Hon. George P. Styles, Associate Justice in Utah, alluding to his official visit to Iron county, says:

"I have been to Iron county. I organized a Grand Jury, with all the requirements and paraphernalia of law; I gave them a solemn charge; my advice to them was, that they never should have Iron county tarnished with a lawsuit. There was no case for me to adjudicate."

On another occasion, at the re-union of the Members of the Assembly, at the dwelling of the Hon. A. W. Babbitt, Judge Kinney spoke as follows:

"I do not rise to tell a story, to offer a toast, or propose a conundrum, but to express my feelings. I have watched the doings of the Legislative Assembly during the past session. I see you have adopted the wise policy of enacting few and simple laws. Those governments are accounted the most wise which have enacted the fewest and simplest laws. You do not wish to rule your people by law; you try to rule them by love. I speak this not merely to eulogise Gov. Young, or his council. Everything in this Valley bespeaks the enterprise, the industry, the refinement, and the intelligence of this people. Your fine settlements, unsurpassed in loveliness and beauty, your public buildings, your machinery, and the union and good feeling pervading throughout your Territory, are all monuments of the wisdom and power that influence and control every department. No stranger coming into this Territory but will be struck at the luxury, magnificence, symmetry, and ingenuity that exists throughout this Valley.

"I was one of the Judges of the Supreme Court in Iowa for seven years; my salary was $1,000 per year; the salary of Chief Justice in Utah was then $1,800. I had a delightful home in Iowa, as many of you have here. My appointment to Utah was soon rumored, and my friends, the members of the bar, reasoned with me on the propriety of leaving Iowa; my post was flooded with letters from my friends on the subject; my old friends in New York, with whom I studied law for years, informed me that I could not live here and discharge the official duties assigned me. If I examine my own feelings in relation to coming to this place, I was actuated by one feeling, which was to show to the world the slanders that had been heaped upon the people, than by any other motives. It could not be for wealth or honor. I have a wife and five children, one daughter grown to womanhood; and I can say there is less immorality, less drunkenness, and less licentiousness here, than anywhere I have ever been. I turned my back on the advice of my friends; I have never regretted the step I took. They tried to stay my family, but I controlled them enough; I left it to their choice to come or stay. If you call this a compliment to your Territory, you are welcome to it, and I am proud of it."

In addition to these we might refer to the remarks made by Judge Lazarus Reid, (now dead,) of New York, Judge Leo. Shaver, and hundreds of disinterested witnesses, who have resided in Utah, and are acquainted with the state of affairs in that Territory; but space will not admit of introducing one tithe of their testimony, we shall, therefore, only add that of Mr. Carvalho, who was associated with Col. Fremont in his last mountain expedition:

"During a residence of ten weeks in Great Salt Lake City, and my observations in all their various settlements, amongst a homogeneous population of over seventy-five thousand inhabitants, it is worthy of record, that I never heard any obscene or improper language; never saw a man drunk; never had my attention called to the exhibition of vice of any sort. There are no gambling houses, grog shops, or buildings of ill-fame, in all their settlements. They preach morality from their churches and from their stands, and what is as strange as it is true, the people practice it, and religiously believe their salvation depends on fulfilling the behests of the religion they have adopted."—Published by Derby, N. Y.

We might go on, but we forbear; we have given a string of unexceptionable testimony from 1847 to 1855. What are we to think of Mr. Greeley and his poor apologies for men, ycleept correspondents, in the face of the above? Why the Mormons would not touch the mean, corrupt wretches with tongs, and yet one of the leading journals of New York city will employ these filthy wretches to scrape together nastiness to vilify a people, as much superior to them as light is to darkness, and that journal will not only publish, but endorse the statements of these canailles.

Workingmen, to the Frontiers!

We have just received a letter dated Feb. 6. from our much esteemed friend, James C. Mitchell Esq. of Florence, N. T., a portion of which will, no doubt, be read with pleasure by many of our readers.

"There will be a great rush to this place in the spring, and property will, no doubt, reach a high figure. Preparations are being made for improvements, the coming season, on a large scale; and I predict, that by the first of January next, Florence will contain, at least, 600 houses, and number not less than three thousand inhabitants. We want mechanics of all kinds, and will esteem it a great favor if you will use your influence in sending us some, the more the better, no trouble about their getting steady employment at high wages, say from three to five dollars per day, and we also want laborers. There are, no doubt, many excellent mechanics and working men among your people, who will not go to the valley this season. To you and to them I can say, that I am confident that there is no place in the Union, where they can do better than at our own Florence."

We think the above worthy of the attention of our brethren, as Florence is the starting point for the Plains. From there likewise the emigrants will proceed to colonize the new settlements. Whoever of our brethren goes out there, with the view of passing further on in due time, and will live their religion, keeping themselves free from the evils of the world, they may do well, very well. There will always be competent Elders at that place to instruct and preside over the Saints, and their religious privileges will, in no wise, be curtailed.

Corruption in and around Congress.

It will be seen from our Congressional columns that the Corruption Investigating Committee have terminated their labors, and handed in their reports to the House last Thursday. From the gentlemen composing that committee, great things were at first anticipated. If at their appointment, they were not universally approved as being the best that the Speaker could choose for the business, they were pretty generally regarded as being well adapted to hunt up and expose, without respect to men or parties; but now that the reports are published the same unanimity of sentiment upon their labors is absent. There seems a universal dissatisfaction—"Honorable members" in the House think that the Committee have transcended the limits of their mission, and made a Star-Chamber, Inquisition; but another class, and that by far the more numerous, think that they have been too easily satisfied, and given up the chase before they had well beat the bushes. The Committee have probably done all they could under their circumstances; whether or not, one thing is manifest—they have been dilligent on what they were engaged.

The persons charged deny the implication, and explain this and that, very probably, to their own satisfaction; but the members of the Committee seem to think that they deserve expulsion from the House, and recommend its adoption. The offenders who are before the public are from New York, and one from Connecticut, and all of the immaculate "Black Republican" school. The Editor of the Daily Times, when examined, knew nothing; but held on to almost the last, that if he would he could say great things. The published report, however, seems to us to warrant the impression that the Committee thought there was really nothing in him for their purpose, and let him slide. The correspondent, Mr. Simonton, was less fortunate. He stood firm for a considerable time, that he could not betray confidence; but compelled to answer he let out so much unfavorable to himself that he is recommended to be expelled from the House. Philosopher Greeley is among the notables, but of course he is really innocent. Outrageous to think otherwise. He happened to be out West, frozen up somewhere, or it is very probable he would have been called to explain something about a $1000 draft that got into his hands. Greeley says he is still immaculate, that he was no lobby agent, that he received not a dime for any services, and the curse cleaves not to his hands. We don't think the Philosopher had a cent of the $1000, but other folks would like to know who did get it, and for what. Well, Mr. Greeley will probably tell them, if they only give him time. We refer our readers to the report of the scene last Thursday, in the Congressional column—it's worth reading.

Anniversary of Washington's Birth-Day.

The 125th anniversary of Washington's Birth Day was observed here with great eclat on Monday. The weather was fine, the streets, of course never clean, were passable, and promenaders to witness the processions of clubs and military companies were numerous. "The Friends of Civil and Religious liberty" had a grand banquet at the Astor House. Judge Douglass was to have been present, but had to telegraph his unability. James T. Brady, Esq., presided; and in the opening address uttered the following sentiments, that we think worthy of our circulation:—"We have met to commemorate an event far more important, and of much nobler results than usually engage the attention of mankind. Around this festive board are ranged men of all ancestries, and of various religious and political creeds, rendering homage to the memory of a man than whom none better, wiser or more dignified ever adorned his race, his country or his era. Another purpose, even loftier than gratitude has summoned us together. We come to attest our veneration for the great principle which generated our national existence, and should ever control the action of our institutions and our people. You anticipate my utterance of the words 'civil and religious liberty.' This was the sublime object for which the heroes and sages of '76 contended. For this were employed the elevated aspirations and unrivalled achievements of the great Washington. To preserve this in its full vigor should be the effort of all who dwell in their own broad territory. And he who by word or act impairs the sacred inheritance, or who would hesitate to strive for its eternal ascendancy, should be treated as a foe to the best interests of his country and mankind. During the struggle for our independence Washington recorded his memorable declaration: 'The cause of America and of liberty is the cause of every American citizen, whatever may be his religion or his descent.' When the constitution of the United States had been adopted, he urged his countrymen to cherish it 'for the sake of those who, from every clime are daily seeking a dwelling in our land.' He subsequently uttered these noble words: 'If I could have entertained the slightest apprehension that the constitution, framed in the convention where I had the honor to preside, might possibly endanger the rights of any ecclesiastical society, certainly I never would have placed my signature to it.' It is useful to recall these sentiments. I regret that it seems necessary to do so. The last great canvass in our country produced a spectacle such as I trust may never again be witnessed. The political press and partizans addressed both the sympathies and the prejudices of our people in reference to the religious tenets of a candidate for the Presidency. How deplorable this seems in view of Washington's address to the members of the new church in Baltimore, in which he says: 'In this enlightened age, and in this land of equal liberty, it is our boast that a man's religious tenets will not forfeit the protection of the right of attaining and holding the highest offices that are known in the United States.' In presence of the spirit here displayed, the rancor of the biggot and the fury of the fanatic should ever have been repressed."

Death of Dr. Kane.

It is with deep regret that we announce the death of Dr. Kane. A dispatch from New Orleans on Monday states that his remains had arrived there. His body was to lie in state at the City Hall till Tuesday evening, and then be sent on by steamboat to Philadelphia. The highest authorities of Cuba paid high honors to the virtues and memory of the deceased as his mortal remains were taken from their island, whence he had gone in search of health. There is deep sympathy for his family everywhere. The Dr. was young in years; but has lived long enough to earn untarnished fame, not only in his native country, but everywhere in the civilised world.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE Grand Jury has found an indictment against Mrs. Cunningham and Mr. Eckel for the murder of Dr. Burdell. Young Snodgrass is out on $2,500 bail to appear when required as a witness. Nothing having been alleged against the Misses Cunningham they are released. Dr. Spicer, an acquaintance, and for some time a partner in business with the Dr. in Bond street, has made affidavit that the Dr. wrote to him that he had been led to marry Mrs. C.; but cannot produce the letter. Though this may bother the relatives of the deceased who are after the property, it changes in nothing the motives to lead to the murder; marriage assumed or real was necessary to bring part of the property to Mrs. C. The marriage and the murder are mysterious, that no information yet made public can touch.

The disunionists have been holding conventions at Utica and Albany. In the former place they met with little sympathy—a very meagre attendance.

Hon. Chas. Sumner, returns to Congress for a few days, and purposes leaving on a visit to Europe early next month.

The President elect will, it is said, be accompanied to Washington on Monday by the Lancaster Fencibles. Everything at the Capital is putting on its best face for the inauguration on Wednesday. General Cass is Premier of the new Cabinet.

Mr. Dunn and the Mormons.

THE following letter is from P. P. Pratt, Mormon Missionary in Ohio, from Salt Lake:

CINCINNATI, Feb. 18, 1857.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—I see in your paper of yesterday an extract from a Washington correspondent, which represents the Hon. Mr. Dunn, of Indiana, as insinuating, on the floor of Congress, that the people of Utah Territory are "living in open and avowed hostility to the usages of morality and religion, as well as in actual violation of the laws of the United States."

I live in Utah, being one of its oldest citizens. I will thank any statesman, editor, or other citizen, to point out any instance of a violation of the laws of the United States by the people or authorities of Utah. It is possible we may be opposed to some of the "moral and Christian usages of the age." For instance, we are opposed to the usage of the "Shakers," which forbids marriage. We are also opposed to the Catholic usage, which forbids the priests and nuns to marry. In short, we are opposed to all laws and institutions which compel the surplus female population to live single; or which tend to lead them astray from the paths of virtue, and to subvert the holiest, purest affections with which nature has endued humanity to an unhallowed use.

In Utah all the people are taught to live virtuously and in purity of life and practice. Both sexes are strictly taught that it is their duty to marry at a proper age, and to honorably fill the sacred relationships of life.

There all unlawful intercourse or infectious connection is strictly prohibited. Indeed, a breach of the Seventh Commandment is considered a capital offence, worthy of death, the same as murder. In these matters, and in many others, we may indeed differ from some of the moral and religious usages in other parts of the country.

But Congress has no business with our religion or our consciences. We are constitutionally free in these respects. We shall never stoop to ask Congress, or any other human power, to regulate our marriage relations, our family institutions, or our morals and religion—nor will a few dimes, appropriated or withheld, alter our fixed and conscientious belief or practice.

By giving the foregoing a place in your columns, you will perhaps contribute an act of justice to a people forever traduced and misunderstood. I am, with due respect, your fellow-citizen,

P. P. PRATT.

The foregoing letter we clip from the Daily Cincinnati Gazette, Feb. 20. If some of our Eastern cotemporaries would take a lesson from the Gazette, and give both sides of the Utah picture, we could entertain hope of seeing them, some day, respectable citizens.—[Ed.

Correspondence of Judge Appleby.

NEW YORK, Feb. 25, 1857.

PRES. TAYLOR,—Dear Bro.:—As many of the Saints scattered through the Eastern States, no doubt are anxiously looking and expecting me to have paid them a visit ere this, from the notice appearing in THE MORMON some few weeks since, permit me through the columns of your valuable and interesting paper, to inform those of the Branches I have not visited the reason why I have not.

When I left this city, Jan. 31, I contemplated to have not returned until I had visited all the Branches of the Church situated in the Eastern States, but on account of snow storms that blocked up the roads, freshets carrying away bridges and rendering the travelling almost impossible, together with cold, and unhealthy weather. After visiting the Saints in Connecticut, New Hampshire, and some in Massachusetts, I came to Lowell, where I became so much indisposed by reason of a severe cold settled upon my lungs, and weakness of voice occasioned by much speaking, I deemed it prudent for the benefit of my health to return to this city, and refrain from active labor for a short time. I have also business at Washington, for which place I purpose leaving in a few days. After I return, if my health and circumstances will permit, I contemplate visiting some more of the Branches previous to my departure for Utah.

The Saints in general where I have traveled are endeavoring to live their religion, and preparing for gathering to Utah, and leave the ungodly, filthy, corrupt and ignorant priest ridden associations by which they are surrounded.

Priests, editors and people, talk about the immorality of the Mormons in Utah, why the poor corrupt fools, there is more real virtue in one ward in G. S. L. City, than there is in the whole of New York city put together, to the contrary of the Tribune's lying Utah correspondent notwithstanding. Just think of editors bought and sold like swine at the shambles, and the clergy, more or less of them, every week almost committing adultery, talking about the morals of Utah, and wish to bring the Mormons down to a level with their beastly corruption. Poor miserable hypocrites, wallowing in the filth and mire of their own venal abominations surrounding them on every side. Prostitutions, whoredoms, murders, infanticide, adultery, sodomy, beastiality, incest abortion, garroting, lying and all manner of abominations and corruptions that were ever practised, or had among the Antediluvians, or the Sodomites of old, according to history, are practised and perpetrated among this religious, monagamic, preaching, lying, adulterous generation, if their own reports published be true.

Howl you poor miserable beings, spit out your venom and spleen, the Mormons are well posted up, and understand your meanness, dishonesty, treachery and corruption of all kinds, and grades that exists among you religiously, socially, morally and politically, and we know that you are a perfect mass of putrid corruption, through all your different ramifications, with few exceptions. We know you are on the downward road to ruin, and nothing but a long ground sweat, or the day of burning, which is near at hand, will ever purify you from your filth and pollution. Howl on then, the Mormons care as little for your lies and vituperation, as they do for the one that utters and publishes them. We hold you in perfect contempt, unfit to be associated with men of virtue, or exalted minds, we ask no odds of you, any way you can fix it, we neither fear, care, or regard you, your lies, influence or power. Our trust is in our God, and honesty and virtue we respect.

Lies and contumely are all the arguments you can bring forth to militate against Mormonism, your best men dare not meet Mormonism upon its merits, either morally, religiously, socially, or philosophically, and well they and you know it. But the poor mean contemptible wretches will howl and cry, and publish "O, the immorality of the Mormons." This is all they can say, are not such poltroons too contemptible for any noble minded man that ever understood the principles of truth to condescend to their standard of truth and honesty. Yes, indeed, they never can get or force the Mormons to condescend to come down to a level with their ungodly man made popular, corrupt systems of the present day. They remind me of a flock of turkey buzzards, they will pass over all the clean and wholesome meat, never touch it, because their appetites do not crave it, but if there is any carrion or purtrid flesh, there they will alight and glut themselves upon it. However they will surely receive their reward, viz: "And all liars shall have their part in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone, which is the second death," which may God grant, unless they repent. Amen.

W. I. APPLEBY.

Correspondence of President Angus M. Cannon.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Feb. 19, 1857.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR,—Dear Uncle:—There is nothing more of a task to me than writing, yet, as I reported myself ready to carry out your instructions when I last wrote, it would be great weakness in me if I neglected to do so, inasmuch as you desire to hear from me regularly.

I have been endeavoring of late, with the assistance of some of the brethren, to gather up and organize the Saints who have been scattered in these parts for eight, ten, and sixteen years, and have been successful to some extent; nevertheless a number we find are content, feeling that the mere profession of Saints is enough to save them.

It is strange that persons who have obtained a knowledge of the truth and purposes of God our Father with reference to His children here, through the divine message of the Prophet Joseph, can make themselves content, and feel like being at rest, among a people who rejected that messenger, very many of whom consented to His martyrdom, while the Lord of Heaven looks with eyes of Justice upon the nation thus rebellious and corrupt, until the measure of their iniquity is well nigh filled. Mercy and Grace promised are nigh spent, and the cup of his wrath begins to be poured out. A Sermon will yet be preached louder in tones and mightier in power than anything manifested by His elders and servants whom He has sent endowed with the Holy Priesthood, when many who do not now believe will know that the Lord is God no longer to be mocked.

Many, very many, who once entered into the most solemn covenants to carry out His purposes, are seen to slip aside, that they may sleep and take a little comfort, and continue to do so, imagining they are safe, until Heaven's artillery awakens them, and then they will realize that their covenants are broken.

I think in no instance could the words of the Lord through Isaiah be more appropriately applied than to this class for it is sure to be with them "As when an hungry man dreameth and behold he eateth, but he awaketh, and his soul is empty, or as when a thirsty man dreameth and behold he drinketh, but he awaketh, and his soul hath appetite.

I returned on the 16th inst. from Chester, Delaware Co., where I organized a branch of ten members, ordained one Wm. Cockraft an Elder, and placed him to preside.

The first time the Gospel was preached in that place, I am informed was last October, when I proclaimed it in the Court House, and had the attention of quite a respectable audience; upon that occasion there were several old members present who had not moral courage enough to come forward and show themselves, and I think it would have perplexed a destroying angel to know by their actions that they ever had been Saints.

Since then, however, I appointed Elder W. H. Osmond, to look after those scattered through that section of country, and I am proud to say, through his energy and perseverance, he has been successful in finding a few who have renewed their covenants and are determined to keep awake in the future, having learned that "Mormonism" is making rapid strides and waits for no man. I preached in the Court-house twice last Sunday, in the afternoon upon the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, proving it to be of Divine Authenticity, and of infinite importance to a benighted world. I beheld with pleasure the interest taken while I spoke of it being a history of a people with whom God spoke and whom, in consequence of wickedness, He destroyed, leaving only a benighted race of which the American Indians are a remnant, yet it was strange to see the change when I announced this history to be none other than the Book of Mormon: the name was what they hated. Oweing to being led by hireling priests who have adopted the policy of placing anathemas upon all who would read it, making out that something of a bewitching nature was connected with it, least the people should be convinced of the truth and per consequence they lose their salaries and living. Many who pin their faith upon the arm of flesh, because like magpies they are taught to prattle and say, what they hear their teachers, do not realize that this practice occasioned the destruction of Jerusalem and the curse which follows the Jews to this day.

I preached in the evening upon the Gospel as taught by Jesus and his ancient apostles, and the blessings which followed their administrations, proving that the Latter Day Saints held to that Gospel, and none other, and can say the Lord did bless me with His spirit in great abundance. The house was very full and attentive during both meetings, several have given in their names for baptism, and I live in hopes that there may be a good work done in Chester.

One gentleman after meeting, being satisfied with what he heard invited me to come and preach in an adjoining town, promising to procure a house and see my expenses paid.

Accept my kindest love and give the same to George, and all the brethren, whom I pray God to sustain in their efforts to spread the truth.

I remain your humble nephew and servant in the new and Everlasting Covenant.

ANGUS M. CANNON.

The State of Things in Utah.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 3, 1856.

AFTER reading the discourses of Brigham Young respecting the discontent among the women, which you probably received in last month's mail, it may not be uninteresting to know the more immediate cause of these passionate declarations and threats of the Mormon Prophet, although you will find that no allusion has since been made of the promised manumission of Utah's white slaves.

Brigham resides in a large two-story house some fifty feet square, built in a neat style, and furnished as sumptuously as the country can afford. In this house lives with him his wife (for although he has more than sixty concubines, she alone is recognized as a wife, the others are called "spirituals") and her four children, two girls and two boys. She is not, however, his first wife, for when she married Brigham he was a widower with three children—two girls and a boy—who are now all married. His "spirituals," or, as they are sometimes called, "fixins," occupied small houses in the neighborhood of the gubernatorial mansion, living generally two or three in a house; but Brigham found that as the population of the city increased this plan did not suit—his fixins had too much liberty; in fact, they would, as he expressed it, allow brethren to "get between their sheets." He therefore, had a large establishment built adjoining his residence, containing sixty small rooms, then surrounded the whole premises with a stone wall twenty feet in hight. Into this harem he proposed to put the majority of his spirituals, make them take turns in cooking washing, &c., and thus have them under his own immediate supervision. The females, however, with unpardonable obstinacy, refused to enter into this arrangement; and, although finally compelled to, did so not without much grumbling and "whining." This circumstance called forth the sympathy of their sisters in misery, and the Prophet found it necessary to thunder his anathemas upon their unprotected heads. They say no more; the fire is smothered, not quenched.

I am told by an eye-witness of the scene that Brigham, walking down the street a few days since, met a little boy returning from the mountain side with a few cows he had been herding. Struck with something in his appearance, the Prophet stopped and called out, "Here, sonny! tell me now, whose son you are." The little curly-headed urchin answered, "Ma tells me I'm Bro. Young's son, but you ought to know who I am." The Seer knew not his own child!

Brigham Young and his associates seem determined to drive all the Gentiles out of the Territory. They have made an attempt during the past month to forcibly take possession of a tannery owned by a Gentile now in the States. Resistance being made by the gentleman's agent and some of his friends, they were arrested and fined $300 a-piece, the Mormon Judge going even to the length of fining the agent's lawyer the same amount for giving legal advice in the matter. This is not, however, surprising to us, when we see cases in which a person arrested on the complaint of some good Mormon, who may have a spite against him, is compelled to pay one-half of the costs, although no cause of action is found against him, and the good Mormon is never made to pay the other half.

A more serious charge against the Mormon leaders than this, however, more fully illustrates the ends desired by them. The Surveyor-General and the Indian Agent, the only remaining Gentile officers in this Territory, while on an excursion to the valleys south, visited the Pah-vant tribe of Indians. (This is the tribe charged with the massacre of Capt. Gunnison and his party.) They were accompanied by the chief of the Peteetneet tribe, who rode to the village some distance ahead of the party, and much to his astonishment found the Indians arming themselves, evidently bent on some hostile undertaking. On inquiring the reason, they told him that an express had just been there from Fillmore City, stating that the party was coming down to arrest them for the murder of Gunnison, and advising them to anticipate such an approach and resist it; and the Peteetneet chief had the greatest difficulty in disabusing their minds before the party arrived. Ka-nosh, the chief of the Pah-vants, is a Mormon having been baptised by Brigham himself.

Brigham Young, accompanied by his counselors and several of the principal men of the Church, left here on the 13th to visit the Shoshonee or Snake Indians—a powerful tribe occupying the country north and east of Salt Lake Valley, who resisted all the attempts made to introduce Mormonism among them. The party, however, returned on the 15th, in consequence of the illness of Brigham. He has since entirely recovered.

In connection with this, I will give you a little circumstance which came to my notice. Comment upon it is unnecessary. A party of emigrants on their way to California found it convenient to pass through this place. A day or two before reaching the city, the small-pox broke out among them; and they accordingly camped in the suburbs of the city, to rest and procure the necessary assistance. The physicians attending them naturally sought to find out the origin of this disease, which seemed to have generated in the party. Upon investigation, they found that a few days previous to the breaking out of the malady the little boy who was first seized with it had picked up on the road, near a camp of the Shoshonee Indians, a large and unusually fine bead. This bead he still had in his possession, and, on examination, the physicians found it to be filled with small-pox virus, the ends being stopped with cotton. Whence came this bead? Not from the Indian camp, for they hate the small-pox more than anything else on earth—so many of them having been swept off by its ravages; and it is very improbable that emigrants should carry such a thing put up in such a manner. The theory is that it must have been placed there by Mormons, in the hope that they would thus implant the seeds of that dreadful disease among these Indians, whom they have been unable to make tools of.

Alice Young, Brigham's eldest daughter by his first wife, was sealed a short time since to Hyrum Clawson, a pimp or spy of the Governor, as his third wife. Miss Alice was first engaged to a young sergeant in the army, who came to the Valley with Capt. Beckwith and joined the Mormons in order to secure her. As soon as his term expired he returned to Salt Lake, to be rejected. She, in the meanwhile, had engaged to marry a young Mormon named Wright, upon the condition that he would go on a mision to Australia and serve faithfully for three years. He accordingly started last Spring, but will be doomed to disappointment, for Brigham has found it necessary to practise as well as preach.

If "Apostle of the Lord" covets another man's wife, or "spiritual," and she refuses his advances, or if the husband is likely to be troublesome, recourse is had to a system which has been sanctioned and practised by the authorities of the Church. The husband will be sent on a mission, and, of course, dies or disappears! The sainted Apostle then reveals to the woman that her late husband committed some enormity which has sent him to the infernal regions, but if she will marry him she will be sure to go to heaven, and also secure the salvation of her late husband. But if (as is generally the case) she favors his advances, they go and get Brigham's consent, and their secret meetings are considered perfectly lawful, provided they stand high in the Church and are firm in the faith!

We have had some very cold weather during the past month, snow having fallen to the depth of a foot in the valleys and from three to eight feet deep in the mountains. By the latest accounts from the Third Hand-Cart Company which is now between Green and Bear Rivers we hear that they are suffering dreadfully from cold and hunger. The train contained 370 adults and a large number have perished. This news has created some excitement among the people and a great many teams with provisions have been sent out to their assistance. Of the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Hand-Cart Companies we have heard nothing. They are far in the rear, and if they are not stopped at Fort Larimie will all perish. Besides those, there are several wagon companies, and the number of emigrants yet on the Plains is estimated at 1,200. You will perhaps have later news from them through the carrier of the Eastern mail which left here the 1st, as he will pass them on his route.

I have noticed articles in Mormon papers from the States denying the existence of Slavery in this Territory, but their mendacity in this as in all cases where their institutions are concerned is notorious. There are many Slaves now owned here both Negroes and Indians, and they are as much an article of sale as any other property.

It is true that the number of negro Slaves is comparatively small, probably less than one hundred, but this scarcity arises more from the poverty of the people than from any aversion they have to Slavery. Their laws sanction it, and their religion inculcates the idea that they (the Africans) are an inferior race of being, and that this inferiority will continue in in the next world.

I suppose that not less than four hundred Indian children are held in bondage under the pretense of apprenticeship! These children are purchased from the Indians (who steal them from the neighboring tribes) for sums varying from $20 to $40 a-piece. This traffic is thus encouraged by Mormons, and in fact, sanctioned by their laws.

In regard to the Mormon children, they appear like a neglected, uncared-for set, generally dirty and ill-clad. The majority of them are girls, and this troubles the women very much, for they know that a female is doomed to Slavery and a life of misery. It is also a singular fact that a large proportion of them are white-headed. These children are suffered to grow up in ignorance and vice. Without the hallowed influence of home to restrain them; they are vicious, profane and obscene. Some of the worst language I ever heard fell from the lips of urchins in the street; but, when the most profane and indecent language is heard in their Tabernacle, and all other public meetings, no one can expect any other result. The Mormons boast or exult in calling things, as they say, by their right names; all parts of the human body are spoken of familiarly, in terms that would make anybody but a Mormon blush, and they say it is a part of their duty if not of their religion, to teach their children a knowledge of the "issues of life," as they term it.

As to education, there is none here. You may have heard of the "University of Deseret," with its Chancellor and Professors, and I know not how many high-sounding offices, and also of the proposed donation of Congress* to it; but it is all a sham. There is no such University here except in name. They boast abroad of their common schools. They consist of edifices built in each Ward called school-houses; but these are in nearly every instance used for the sole purpose of holding what they term "Ward meetings;" and yet heavy taxes are collected throughout the Territory obstensibly for school purposes. It is the settled policy of the Priesthood to keep the people in ignorance and poverty, for it is then easier to rule them.

These facts show the importance of the immediate attention of the American Government and people to the affairs of this Territory. What can be expected of this people, even if they should throw off the abominable Mormon despotism under which they are now groaning. They are nearly all foreigners of the lowest class—an ignorant but industrious, hard-working people. Accustomed from their youth to be guided and ruled in all political matters, they are ignorant of the first principles of self-government.

Uninstructed in respect to our institutions and the workings of our system of government, they are daily counseled to hate and despise it. These principles taught to the parents are by them instilled in the minds of their children, who, brought up without even a common education, are ready adepts in learning anything vicious and demoralising. Moreover it is to be remembered that they are completely isolated, and that there is no external influence to modify these circumstances; all the news they receive from the world is through the medium of the Church newspaper, which is the only one in the Territory.

What then is to be expected from them if as some writers propose they are left to themselves to work out their own ends?

We want here the Bible, a Free Press, faithful Missionaries, and a complete system of education, so that old and young may receive instruction. But these things cannot be had without a complete change in the administration of the laws, and the entire separation of Church and State.

New York Tribune, Feb. 13.

* That donation has been granted by Congress.

The following is the Tribune editorial alluding to the above letter, and though the editor professes to doubt the correspondent's justice and truthfulness, he nevertheless publishes his verbiage:

"A curious letter from a Utah correspondent will be found in another column. He is evidently disposed to see things in no favorable light for the Mormons, and in one or two cases is inclined to fix very grave suspicions upon them, upon what seems to us very slender evidence. Yet his account of matters and things in the Valley, though to be received perhaps with some grains of allowance, corresponds sufficiently with what might be expected. His statements upon the subject of Slavery are curious, and we do not doubt authentic. Those who have not hesitated to follow the example of the patriarchs in the matter of polygamy, can hardly fail to find abundant Scripture warrant for the introduction of Slavery, especially as they have in this the countenance and consent of so many of our learned divines.

"Negro Slavery, it is true, is not likely to be introduced into Utah to any considerable extent; but in the Slavery of Indians the Mormons have a resource and a temptation close at hand, nor can it be expected that as to this matter they will exhibit a greater degree of self-denial than was shown by the early colonists of New England and Virginia. Besides, it is with them a matter of policy. It often happens that two weights are easier to carry than one. Slavery will help to balance polygamy. Polygamy alone might prove a very serious obstacle to their admission into the Union; but what is there that our politicians will not gulp down to save themselves from the necessity of meddling with Slavery?"

Here follows the second Tribune editorial:

"We publish this morning, from that newest of New Jerusalems, the Great Salt Lake City, a letter which will be regarded by all the 'Saints' in this quarter as important, for it announces that St. J. M. Grant is dead since the night of Dec. 1, ult., or if not dead, has been very unjustly treated, since he was buried with all possible ecclesiastical honors on the 4th of Dec., manner the prophesies of St. Brigham Young, who foretold the invalid to be convalescent of a pneumonia. Grant was very high in the Mormon Church, but to what exact altitude he had attained we cannot with accuracy say, since we are not informed of the number of his wives. Our letter says "seven," but we discredit its enumeration. A Saint so vigorous should have left behind him at least seventy. Over him St. Brigham Young and St. Heber C. Kimball pronounced funeral discourses, proclaiming that he had fought with the unmentionable gentleman, and that just before his death he was caught up into heaven and there witnessed unutterable things, all proving the truth of Mormonism. Our correspondent adds that the people of this poor, infatuated, besotted, benighted city, believe these stories, and have canonised Grant, and perhaps by this time are praying to him. Was there ever such rascality imposed upon simple and confiding folk!

"Of the cadaverous caravans which have reached, or are endeavoring to reach, this miserable Mecca, we have news of one, just arrived, of the members of which (being five hundred when they started,) one-fourth have perished, the remainder being so frozen that upon the arrival of the 'Hand-Cart Train' not more than fifty could help themselves. The invalids, says our letter, were 'ragged' and 'filthy beyond description;' were 'helpless and despairing.' Will some one who may have the opportunity and the heart, call the attention of those emigrants who may come to New York with the intention of an overland journey to Utah, to the painful and disgusting details which our correspondent furnishes?

"The various devices resorted to by the Mormon leaders to keep their dupes down—the 'reformation' started—the auricular confession practised—the dreadful nastiness disclosed—all these and all this are referred to in the letter. We have never heard of anything so shamefully dirty or so wretchedly repulsive. In the name of decency, of civilization, of honesty, humanity and honor, cannot the United States of America free itself from the reproach of a colony controlled by lust, guided by fanaticism, and governed by the meanest of delusions!"

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19, 1857.

SENATE.

The Senate took up the House bill for the relief of the people of Kansas, repealing the laws and providing for a new election.

Mr. Adams, in order to avoid discussion, moved that the bill lay on the table.

Negatived by a vote of 17 against 24.

Mr. Green said that he had voted against laying the bill on the table, because he wanted it examined by the Judiciary Committee. He had personal information that all the obnoxious laws had been repealed by the local authorities of Kansas.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Letcher, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill extending the time for the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad to pay the duty on iron, the embarrassment of its finances having been occasioned by the late prevalence of yellow fever.

Mr. Campbell of Pennsylvania moved to table the bill. Agreed to by four majority.

Mr. Davis of Maryland, by direction of the Investigating Committee, said he had been directed to make a special report in the case of William A. Gilbert of New York. He moved that the report be printed, and stated he should move, when the question was determined, to postpone the consideration of the subject till next Monday.

Mr. Grow denied that the Committee have a right to make this report as a question of privilege. They must first obtain leave, especially if the report implicates any members of this House.

Mr. Letcher and others amid the excitement loudly demanded the reading of the report.

Mr. Grow resuming said the Committee have exceeded their authority and violated the constitutional rights of the members.

The Speaker said Mr. Davis must state the character of the report.

Mr. Smith of Virginia understood the Committee were instructed to make a report and not a statement merely.

Mr. Orr remarked that if the House desired to know the contents of the report, let it be read.

Mr. Grow resumed his speech with much earnestness, and was called to order by several members.

The Speaker said that the report could not be read because it was in the nature of debate

Amid confusion, Mr. Bennett of New York moved that the report be recommitted. He was opposed to thus proposing to expel a member by resolution, without due notice.

MR. FLORENCE—We don't know what is proposed until we hear the report read. I object to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Half a dozen members struggled for the floor.

Mr. Houston insisted on the reading of the report.

After further proceedings, Mr. Bennett said the report was of grave import, and affected one of his colleagues. No man in this land could be accused, tried and condemned without a hearing; much less could judgment against a member be brought in here and put through under the pressure of the previous question.

The Committee were appointed in consequence of an article in the New York Times, charging corrupt combinations on the part of members.

Mr. Harris of Ill., called Mr. Bennett to order.

The Speaker ruled Mr. Harris out of order, but he continued speaking amid cries of "Order," during which the Speaker said that he would direct the Sergeant-at-arms to arrest him or any other person violating the rules.

Mr. Harris's reply was not heard.

Conversation ensued as to the duties of the Committee under the authority of the resolution by which they were appointed, and finally Mr. Davis of Maryland read the report in the case of Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Sage moved that the House adjourn, but the question was decided in the negative.

Mr. Wakeman maintained that the Committee had no right to proceed in the investigation of the charges against his colleague [Gilbert.] They should have reported that in the course of the examination they discovered a member implicated, and the House would have directed them how to proceed. He objected to the position of the question. The resolution required the Committee to inquire as to whether there was a corrupt combination among members, but they have reported nothing of the kind. Instead, they have reported an argument, winding up with a resolution to expel his colleague. If the House act on this resolution, they would expel him without a fair trial. Let the report go over, the question being on its adoption.

Mr. Davis of Maryland said there were now in the hands of the Committee three special reports referring to the testimony in general, and a final report in possession of the Committee with all the testimony, including the questions and answers.

Mr. Ritchie said there was a sort of minority report by the chairman of the Committee.

All the reports were ordered to be printed, only five members objecting, and their further consideration postponed to Wednesday next.

Mr. Kelsey offered a resolution, which was adopted, that the clerk be directed to pay Francis H. Smith six hundred and fifty dollars for his services in reporting the proceedings and testimony before the Committee.

Mr. Orr moved that five or ten thousand of the reports be printed.

No question was taken on the motion.

Mr. Campbell of Ohio made an ineffectual appeal to the House to go into Committee on the Tariff bill.

The three special reports of the Committee are signed by all the members of the Committee, except Mr. Kelsey. They embody the testimony in each case, and conclude with the following resolutions:

That Wm. W. Welch did corruptly combine with Wm. A. Gilbert, a member of this House from New York, to procure the passage of a resolution or bill through the House, for the purchase of certain copies of "Triplett on Pension and Bounty Land Laws" for money—to be paid to the said Gilbert on its passage.

That Wm. W. Welch did attempt to procure money from James R. Sweeney for reporting favorably on the claim of Roxana Kimball from the Committee on Invalid Pensions at this Congress—that Wm. W. Welch, a member of this House from Connecticut, be forthwith expelled from this House.

The Committee in Mr. Edwards' case report as follows:

Resolved, That Francis S. Edwards, a member of this House from the State of New York, did on the 23d day of December last, attempt to induce Robert T. Paine, a member of this House, from the State of North Carolina, to vote contrary to the dictates of his judgment and conscience, on the bill making a grant of lands to aid in the construction of a railroad in the Territory of Minnesota by holding out a pecuniary consideration to the said Paine for his support of said bill.

Resolved, That the said Francis S. Edwards be, and is hereby, expelled from the House.

The Committee in the case of Mr. Matteson, report as follows:

Resolved, That Orsamus B. Matteson, a member of this House from the State of New York, did incite parties deeply interested in the passage of a joint resolution for securing the Des Moines grant, to have, hire and use a large sum of money and other valuable considerations corruptly, for the purpose of procuring the passage of said joint resolution through this House.

Resolved, That Hon. Orsamus B. Matteson, in declaring that a large number of the members of this House had associated themselves together and pledged themselves each to the other not to vote for any law or resolution granting money or lands unless they were paid for it; has falsely and willfully assailed and defamed the character of this House and has proved himself unworthy to be a member thereof.

Resolved, That the Hon. Orsamus B. Matteson, a member of this House from the State of New York, be, and hereby is expelled therefrom.

Mr. Kelsey made a report, in which he says he dissents from the several reports of his colleagues. He is of opinion that according to the rules of the House and parliamentary laws, the Committee have no power to institute proceedings against any members of this body under the resolution, by which the Committee were appointed.

The Committee having ascertained that certain members are involved, it is their duty in his judgment to report the fact to the House with the evidence by which the fact is disclosed, together with a recommendation that the said members be tried upon definite charges, and to submit the subject to the House for their direction, or such other proceedings as they see proper to adopt. He quotes the rule from the manual on the subject, and adds that the majority of the Committee have departed from it in having presented resolutions for the explusion of the members involved, instead of presenting the fact that they were so involved, and asking the direction of the House. He dissents from and protests against these resolutions.

All the Committee join in a general report, in which they say the delay in making their report was beyond their control. They did not feel at liberty to notice, in any manner, the numerous anonymous communications received by them, and no proceeding or inquiry has been instituted upon any such communications; but in every case where a respectable person has requested an inquiry or pointed to a witness who could probably prove a material fact, the investigation has been made as full and thorough as it was in the power of the Committee to make it.

They say no such general combinations as have been charged are proved to exist. Four cases came to their knowledge in which individual members were implicated. The Committee give the question and answers in the examination of James W. Simonton at different times, and state that his last answer was decidedly contradictory of his previous testimony. It appears, they remark, from his testimony, that while occupying a seat as reporter on the floor of the House, he personally aided in the passage of the Wisconsin Land bill under the promise of receiving a certain compensation if the bill passed.

He also aided an old friend of his in passing a private bill through the Senate, for which he accepted a small compensation. They say from the testimony taken it appears that the general charges of corrupt combinations in Congress originate from men who expect to make money by creating a belief that such combinations exist. If they can cause it to be generally believed that it is necessary to use large sums of money to carry measures through Congress, it follows that somebody must be employed to apply it; and the man who knows most about corrupt combinations would be the one naturally sought for and employed as broker, to buy up the votes of members who had entered into such combinations here.

The broker in Congressional corruption would receive money to buy up the combination, and whether he puts the money in his own pocket or pays it to somebody else, can never be known to the parties who furnish the money. They are all engaged in a criminal transaction in which the broker has the decided advantage of his employers, who must be satisfied without an account, or with any account of his agency that he may choose to render, and the probability is, that in addition to his own stipulated compensation, he will pocket the whole corruption fund.

They proceed to attribute much of this evil to the avidity with which newspaper correspondents catch up every flying report, and send it to their respective journals to appear in print.

They report the following resolution:

Resolved, That James W. Simonton be expelled from the floor of this House as reporter.

They likewise report a bill to protect the people against corrupt and secret influence in matters of legislation.

It provides that no person shall directly or indirectly offer or agree to give any money or other valuable things to any person on the contingency of the passage or defeat of a bill; that no person shall approach, converse with or explain to, or in any manner attempt to influence any member of either House relative to such measures, without first distinctly explaining whether he is interested personally in his own right or as agent for any other person in the passage or defeat of any measure.

This offense is made a misdemeanor, to be punished on conviction with imprisonment for a month, or a year, and a fine of $500 or $1,000. All combinations to influence legislation are declared null and void; and persons offending are to be punished for such misdemeanor by imprisonment in jail for six or twelve months, and a fine of $500 or $1,000. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 20.

Mr. Pugh introduced a bill prescribing the time and manner for electing Senators to Congress and the form of their credentials.

The Private Calendar was then taken up.

The Senate then passed forty-five bills, including one for paying the officers and seamen of the expedition under Lieutenant De Haven.

Mr. Wright presented the credentials of Mr. Thompson, re-elected from New Jersey.

Mr. Gwin introduced the Pacific Railroad bill. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Clingman suggested that any member named in the resolutions of the Investigating Committee have leave to file an answer to the statements concerning him, to be printed with the other papers. This, he thought, seemed right and proper. Agreed to.

The House went into the Committee of the Whole on the Tariff bill.

Mr. Campbell of Ohio, submitted an original bill—the same, with several alterations, as the last one reported from the Committee of Ways and Means; and expressed his views on the subject, passed by a vote of 110 against 84.

SENATE. FEB. 21.

Mr. Wilson of Mass., gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill granting to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, five hundred thousand acres of land for the support of public schools.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the House bill to authorize the people of Minnesota, to form a Constitution and State Government preparatory to their admission into the Union.

Mr. Biggs of N. C. moved an amendment, that none but the citizens of the United States be entitled to vote in reference to the formation of a constitution and State government.

After considerable discussion the amendment was adopted by yeas 27, nays 24.

The bill was then passed. The bill establishing a Judicial District in the Gadsden purchase, creating the office of Surveyor General, granting donations to actual settlers, &c., was also passed.

Mr. Bell of Tenn., favored the amendment, and advocated such modification of the existing naturalization laws as would provide additional securities against the gross abuses which have been practised under them.

Mr. Douglas of Ill., appealed to the Senate not to enter into long discussions, else they might lose important Territorial bills.

The bill authorizing the people of Oregon to establish a State Government was then taken up.

Mr. Green offered an amendment extending similar authority to the people of Kansas, pending which the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the Post Office Appropriation bill.

The resolution providing for the impeachment of Judge Watrous of Texas, for high crimes and misdemeanors, was then taken up.

Mr. Caskie of Va., advocated the postponement of the subject until the first Monday of December, showing that it was utterly impossible to obtain proper action during the present Congress. On the ground that such a postponement would be prejudicial to the judge the subject was postponed till Saturday next.

The House took up the resolution reported from the Committe of Elections, declaring that Mr. Whitfield was not entitled to a seat as delegate from Kansas, but was tabled, by a vote of 96 against 35.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

SENATE. Feb. 23.

Mr. Cass presented the credentials of Mr. Chandler, and Mr. Hunter those of Mr. Mason, severally elected Senators from Michigan and Virginia, for six years from the 4th of March next.

The bill to amend the Tariff act of 1846, with a view to perfect the home valuation principle, was passed.

Mr. Foster presented the credentials of James Dixon, as Senator from Connecticut for six years from the 4th of March next.

The Submarine Telegraph bill was then taken up after a short discussion.

The Senate then went into executive session, and subsequently adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the bill to supply deficiencies in appropriations, including $250,000 for printing and nearly $183,000 for books to new members—the latter item was carried by three majority, although on Saturday only twenty-seven votes were recorded in its favor.

The House passed the bill to pay a company of South Carolina Volunteers for services in the War of 1812.

The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was taken up.

Mr. Tappan moved to strike out the sum of twenty thousand dollars compensation for the Kansas Legislature, which was ultimately agreed to. Pending the consideration of the bill the House adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 24.

Mr. Hale, moved for a reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate passed the bill authorizing the people of Minnesota to form a Constitution and State Government.

Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky was opposed to the bill, because it would bring into the Senate two additional Senators against what he considered the best interests of the country.

Mr. Douglas replied that the people of the Territory have a right to admission into the Union as soon as they have sufficient population. Mr. Douglas hoped that the motion would prevail, in order that they might strike out the amendment restricting suffrages to citizens of the United States, so that the bill might pass as it came from the House.

After some opposition, by which the bill was passed was then re-considered, by yeas 35, nays 21.

Mr. Hale moved to re-consider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, restricting suffrage to the citizens of the United States.

Without disposing of the subject the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the Executive, Legislative and Judicial bill, concurring, by two majority, in the action of the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, in striking out the appropriation of $20,000 for the expenses of the Kansas Legislature.

The House passed the Senate's joint resolution for ascertaining and fixing the relative value of the coins of Great Britain in the United States.

It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a suitable person to act with such a functionary as may be appointed by the British Government; and with a view to effecting that object, the agent for this Government is to report as soon as practicable. The House made an amendment fixing his salary at $5,000 for the full service.

An explanation was demanded by Mr. Sherman, of Mr. Wright about the latter, saying: "that's a lie," while the former had been speaking, yesterday. Mr. W. acknowledged it was so, and then followed the preface to a duel.

The Californian petition for the expulsion of Mr. Herbert was introduced, and after a few words was tabled. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 25.

The bill authorizing the people of Minnesota Territory to form a constitution and state government preliminary to their admission into the Union was again considreed, and the Senate, by yeas 31, against nays 24, reconsidered the vote by which the amendment was adopted restricting the right of suffrage to citizens of the United States, and then struck out the amendment, by a vote of 32 against 24, and passed the bill in the precise form in which it came from the House, by yeas 31, against nays 22.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Gwin presented the credentials of Mr. Broderick as Senator from California for six years from the fourth of March next.

Mr. Slidell, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a joint resolution allowing Commander Hartstein, Lieutenant Trenchard, Master Morrison and the petty officers and crew of the Steamer Vixen to accept certain tokens of acknowledgment from the Government of Great Britain. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Davis, of Maryland, called up the resolution of the Select Committee, for the expulsion from the House of Wm. A. Gilbert.

To-day's proceedings vary but little from the attack and defense course pursued when the report of the Corruption Investigating Committee was read. In the course of the day Mr. Gilbert's defence was read. Adjourned.

"Woman is Constitutionally Disqualified for Action."

THE ship Neptune's Car arrived at San Francisco, (says a letter from the consignees,) Nov. 15. Fifty days ago, Capt. Patten was attacked with brain fever, and for the last twenty-five days he has been blind. Previous to his illness, he had put the first mate off duty, on account of his incompetency. Afterwards, the second mate took charge of the ship, but as he did not understand navigation, the Captain's wife worked up the reckoning every day, and brought the ship safely into port. The first mate wrote Mrs. Patten a letter, reminding her of the coast, and the great responsibility she had assumed, and offered to take charge of the ship, but she stood by the judgment of her husband and declined the offer. During all this time, she acted as nurse to the captain; studied medicine, to learn how to treat his case; shaved his head, and by her constant care and watchfulness, kept him alive. She said that for fifty nights she had not undressed herself. Few women could have done so much and done it so well. She was at once, navigator, nurse, physician and protector of the property entrusted to her husband. The matter has excited a good deal of interest here, and independent of other considerations, all are anxious for her sake that the captain shall recover.—[Journal of Commerce.

Mr. and Mrs. Patten are at present in New York. Some kind writers have tried to raise help to the sick captain and an entertainment for the gallant lady.—[Ed.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances of done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Estce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaitre que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivité, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. «Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

FOR THE MORMON.

The Mormons.

BY C. A. ROGERS.

The Mormons, the Mormons, what fuss they are making
Throughout all the nations,
With men in all stations;—
They seem to cause trouble, and also a shaking
Amongst the dry bones.

With wise looks and nods, the old politician,
As grave as an owl,
Or a monk in his cowl,
Is talking to men in every condition,
In deep earnest tones.

What sticks in his crop is their social condition—
To reform them he comes,
With trumpets and drums,
And bayonets carried by sons of perdition,
And puncheons of rum.

Priests with their neckcloths as white as the snow;
With long nasal tones,
And deep hollow groans;
Like Balaam they curse them wherever they go,
And do it for pay.

The Mobber, the Horse Thief, Seducer and Rummy;
And all of their clan,
Down to the last man,
All wish there was naught of them left but a mummy,
In all Mormondom.

And editors, wondering to see them increase,
Keep on prophesying,
And constantly trying,
To make people believe they don't live in peace—
They'd better stop lying.

The Mormons have something above the conception
Of political scum,
Of priests with their rum;
Jolly companions, so they cry out deception.
And dupes cry amen.

Since the Mormons so long have unflinchingly stood,
Would it not be better,
To follow Paul's letter,
"Prove all things and hold fast to that which is good,"
And not play the fool?

'Tis said that the truth was deep hid in a well;
Who knows then but what
The Mormons have got
It raised up from there and would like to tell
Something that is true;
What hurt will it be to try them?
Amen.

NEW YORK, Feb: 12, 1857.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR—

Dear Bro,: As many of our brethren have not had opportunities of obtaining in ther boyhood, that instruction which is so necessary to enable them to comprehend the various sciences, which in this enlightened age are in daily use amongst almost every class of our fellow men; I propose to furnish for the Mormon two or three short articles every week, which I will endeavor to supply with regularity, and at the same time not trespass too much on your valuable space; to give the fundamental rules of those branches of education which have fallen more particularly under my observation, together with examples for practice, and in such form as to be easily understood by those requiring such assistance. As winter brings with it long "Evenings at Home", some, who otherwise could not spare the necessary time, may now be able, by the exercise of that industry and application, without which we cannot hope to accomplish any thing, however small, to acquire such information as may be needful for the further developement of their ideas and faculties in a direction to which they are now strangers.

I do not profess to throw out any new ideas or language, but merely to place reliable information within the reach of many who could not, and of some who, from the apparent difficulty of making a beginning unassisted, would not otherwise become possessed thereof.

I remain yours truly, W. J. SILVER.

The Iron Horse.

A Voice from California.

ELIHU BURRIT, the learned blacksmith, thus eloquently discourses upon the iron horse:

"I love to see one of those huge creatures, with sinews of brass, and muscles of iron, strut forth from his smoky stable, and saluting the long train of cars with a dozen sonorous puffs from his iron nostrils, fall gently back into his harness. There he stands, champing and foaming upon the iron track, his great heart a furnance of glowing coals; his lymphatic blood is boiling in his veins; the strength of a thousand horses is nerving his sinews—he pants to be gone. He would 'snake St. Peter's across the desert of Sahara,' if he could be fairly hitched to it; but there is a little, sober-eyed tobacco-chewing man in the saddle who holds him in with one finger, and can take away his breath in a moment, should he grow restive and vicious. I am always deeply interested in this man, for begrimed as he may be with coal diluted in oil and steam, I regard him as the genius of the whole machinery—as the physical mind of that huge steam horse."

Now for ourselves we want to see this "iron horse" snorting and puffing through one of the many passes of Sierre Nevada mountains, and as he rushes on, on, beneath the shadows of our densely timbered forests, or darts across or down our beautiful and fertile valleys; we don't care if all the Indians in creation lift up their hands in wonder at it, or fly with fear from before it. We want a railroad.

What care we if this or that political party make it a hobby, jump astride it and seek to ride into power upon it; all we say is—give us the railroad, give it to us, somebody—give it to us, anybody—give it to us, everybody. It is the RAILROAD that we want; and we will not quarrel about the source from whence it comes. We don't care who gives it, who pays for it, or whether it pays for itself—to us that is of lesser importance, altogether. Give us the railroad, gentlemen, senators and congressmen, and give it to us at once. No shirking, no shuffling, no log-rolling delay, no quibbling, no subterfuges, nor substitutes. We want the railroad. Yes, we, THE PEOPLE, want it, and must have it. And please not forget that we want it without delay! Progress prays for it—Commerce waits for it—Peace or War demands it. Then why not give it? Besides, we want "to go a visiting 'the old folks at home,'" and as we can't afford to go one way, we want to go the other; and there are many more just like us—too many. You who live in comfort and luxury at home must not forget the "red shirts" and workers here. Certainly not. Then there are a few of our acquaintances east of the Rocky Mountains, yet; and they wish to have a little pleasure trip to see us—"drop in to breakfast" early some morning, and after "panning out" a little gold—just enough for a finger ring—to say good-by, and return by way of Salt Lake City, to see the "Saints" and elders, and their wives, as well as to take a peep at the little saints, just to see, you know, if they are like other little people; and, what is of more importance, find out if the saints of the masculine gender are simply men, or giants, that they can manage more than one wife.

Then, again, we want to send our friends a basket or two of our ripe luscious peaches, and a box of our "five pound bunches" of tempting, mouth-watering grapes, and a carload or two of our forty-five pound watermelons, and a thousand other good things that we have for dessert.

Besides there are one or two articles we wish to import in quantities—and the first to be mentioned is muslin, with a pretty, good-tempered, loving, kind-hearted, intellectual, and contented lady-love within it; or, if you will give us the latter, we will grow all that we want of the former. Now if that one consideration is not enough to tempt you to give us the railroad, we will talk to you about China and the East Indies, and—well, all the places and things that must come and go upon this great highway towards the setting sun, and the rising of empires on the broad and beautiful Pacific, &c., &c., &c., until you go to sleep; and, on awaking, find yourself a day behind the age. The "Iron Horse," gentlemen, the IRON HORSE, THE IRON HORSE—give it to us at once, and our consequent prosperity shall tell you how much we appreciate the gift.—[Hutchings' California Magazine.

A King Guarded by Females

THE Moniteur de l'Armee publishes some curious details relative to the army of the King of Siam. One corps particularly attracts the attention of strangers, which is a battalion of the King's Guard composed of women. This battalion consists of 400 women, chosen among the handsomest and most robust girls in the country. They receive excellent pay, and their discipline is perfect. They are admitted to serve at the age of 13, and are placed in the army of reserve at 25. From that period they no longer serve about the King's person, but are employed to guard the Royal palaces and Crown lands. On entering the army they make a vow of chastity, from which there is no exemption unless any of them should attract the King's attention and be admitted among his legitimate wives. The King's choice seldom falls on the most beautiful, but on the most skilled in military exercises. The hope of such a reward animates them with extraordinary zeal for military instructions, and Europeans are astonished at the martial appearance of that battalion, as well as its skill in manœuvering and its excellent discipline.

The costume these women wear is very rich. Their full dress is composed of a white woolen robe, embroidered with gold. The cloth is extremely fine, and descends as far as the knee; it is covered with a light coat of mail and a gilt cuirass. The arms are free, and the head is covered with a gilt casque. When wearing this dress on State occasions, their only weapon is a lance, which they handle with wonderful dexterity. With their undress they are armed with a musket. The battalion is composed of four companies, and each company of 100 women, commanded by a captain of their sex. Should the captain die, the company is drilled for three days by the King, who appoints the most competent to succeed to the command. The battalion has been commanded for the last five years by a woman, who saved the King's life at a tiger hunt, by her courage and skill. She possesses great influence at Court, and is much respected by those under her command. She has the same establishment as a member of the Royal family, and 10 elephants are placed at her service. The King never undertakes any expedition without being accompanied by his female guard; nor does he ever hunt or even ride out without an escort of the same guard, who are devotedly attached to his person. Each individual of the battalion has five negresses attached to her service; and having thus no domestic occupation, she can devote herself exclusively to the duties of her profession. There is a parade ground near the city, where one company is stationed for two days every week to exercise themselves with the lance, the pistol, the musket and the rifle. The King attends once a month at those exercises, accompanied by his brother, who shares in some degree the sovereign power, and distributes prizes to those most deserving. These rewards consist of bracelets or other valuable jewelry, to which the girls and their families attach great importance. Those so honored fill the offices of sergeant and corporal.

Punishment is very rare in this corps, and when it is inflicted it consists of a suspension from service for a period not exceeding three months. But duels are much more frequent. They must be sanctioned, however, by the female captain, and be fought with swords in presence of the entire company. When the death of one of the parties ensues, the deceased receives a magnificent funeral, and the high priest pronounces a panegyric declaring that the deceased by her valor has merited eternal rest in the abode of the blessed. The survivor receives the congratulations of her companions; but as a measure of discipline, she is sentenced to pass two months away from her company in fasting and prayer. The military organization of this battalion is so perfect that the entire army endeavors to imitate it.

Life's Vicissitudes.

Twenty years ago a fatherless boy was placed in a third or fourth rate country store "for his vituals and clothes." His cherry face and laughing countenance, his accommodating disposition and the alacrity with which he served his customers, soon advanced him to a better store, at a dollar a week extra, which he regularly placed in the hand of his mother, to aid her, by marketing for others, to support her little family. He now ships cargoes, for his own vessels, but embarks in no important enterprise without first consulting that mother still.

The son of "an apple woman" we know to be one of the richest men in the United States, and who accumulated his wealth by his own activity and enterprise; not by speculation, but by legitimate commerce—by honorable mercantile competition.

A "nice young man," ten years ago worth fifty thousand dollars, who delighted in horses, hounds and gunning, married a young lady of refinement and education; he is now living in poverty, with that same wife, and small children, in a country village beyond the Mississippi.

Let us now go back to times long past, and see how history teaches the same lesson:

In 1777 Mr. Hastings received an humble petition from the Great Mogul for aid against his enemies; ten years later and Mr. Hastings is on his knees in the House of Lords, and was obliged to give bail that he would not run away.

In 1776, Lord North was prime minister of England, the counsellor of kings; ten years later, and it is recorded, "Lord North was led out of Westminster Abbey by one of his daughters."

In 1777, there was a smart active waiter at a country tavern; ten years later he was a nabob, a baronet, a knight of the shire.

In 1777, Dr. P. went to the gallery of the House of Commons to hear Mr. Pitt's speech, and was turned out; ten years later and Dr. P. rose in his place in the House of Lords, to defend a dairyman, while Mr. Pitt stood in the bar below to hear him.

By such examples let young men learn that attention—diligent, persevering, loving attention to almost any of the useful callings of human life guarantees success, whether in a monarchy or republic, whether under Kings or Presidents. That to be good at one thing is of itself elevating, and aids to higher successes. That what gives enduring success, is not family, name, nor wealth, nor accident, nor position, nor even genius itself; but it is steady, energetic following up of any one calling in the love of its nature, and the belief of its importance. And more—without this faith and affection, no man has ever yet succeeded in any creditable occupation, nor do we believe ever will.

Dr Kane.

PHILADELPAIA, Feb. 27, 1857—9 P. M.

IN pursuance of a notice published by the Mayor of Philadelphia, a large and respectable meeting convened at the County Court-House on Friday evening, the 27th ult, for the purpose of making arrangements to receive the remains of Dr. Kane, which are expected here on Thursday next.

The Mayor of the city, the Hon. Richard Vaux, was called to preside. On taking the chair, he spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN: The occasion of our assembling is to pay, on behalf of this community, a tribute of respect to the memory of Elisha Kent Kane. He lived for his country, philanthropy and science. He died a victim to the devotedness of his life to his life's purpose. A citizen of Philadelphia, with a fame co-extensive with learning and humanity, his mortal remains are about to be placed in a grave of his native soil. The nobleness of his self-devotion, the heroism of his exertions, the cause of his early death, have placed his name among those of whom it is justly said, "Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori."

William B. Reed, Esq., then offered the following resolutions, which were adopted with acclamation:

The citizens of Philadelphia, convened in General Town Meeting, at the call of their Chief Magistrate, desire to unite with the constituted authorities in doing honor to the memory of their distinguished townsman, Elisha Kent Kane, who recently died in a foreign land, and whose mortal remains now approach their final resting place in his native city. With this view they have

Resolved, That Philadelphia discharge the simplest duty of self-respect in doing honor to one who on the great theatre of the enlightened world, has attracted the interest and the applause of all who sympathize with the noblest impulse of humanity and watch the progress of scientific discovery and gallant adventure.

Resolved, That, aside from the debt of gratitude we owe for the fame he has gained for Philadelphia, as Christians and citizens of the world, we honor him for the persevering resolution with which he conducted the second American Expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, with no superior officer to control or direct him, and no other support in long years of trial and privation than his own moral and intellectual resources and the sympathies of the gallant men under his command.

Resolved, That the English people owe (and, we doubt not, will gladly pay) to Dr. Kane this special gratitude, that he, more than any other, by the power of his pen and the influence of his example, awakened the interest of America to the career and fate of those heroic men, whose undiscovered destiny is yet the problem of this age of active enterprise.

Resolved, That Philadelphia, sorrowfully but proudly welcoming the mortal remains of her dead son home again, thanks with earnest sincerity the distant communities whose kindness consoled his latest hours upon earth—those who strove by all the appliances of professional skill and domestic comfort to arrest the progress of disease, and when, in another land, the hour of final agony came, those who mourned with tender sympathy around the bed of death.

Resolved, That the citizens now assembled, thus inadequately expressing the general sentiment of the community, will unite with the Councils and the other authorities in such funeral ceremony as may be determined on, and that the Mayor be requested to appoint a Committee of —— citizens to act as a Committee of Arrangements.

Resolved, That a copy of the proceedings of this meeting, duly engrossed and authenticated, be communicated to the family of the deceased, and to such of the authorities of the British and Spanish Governments as may hereafter be determined on as best representing those whose kindness to our lamented townsman we desire to commemorate.

After the appointment of a Committee of Arrangements the meeting adjourned.

Horrors of Chinese Opium Smoking.

CLIVE, in his description of China and Chinese Customs, states that one of the streets of Canton is occupied entirely by shops for the sale of this deadly drug: "One of the objects at this place that I had the curiosity to visit, was the opium smoker in his heaven; and certainly it is a fearful sight, although not so degrading in the eye as the drunkard from spirits, lowered to the level of the brute and wallowing in his filth. The idiot smile and death-like stupor, however, of the opium debauchee, has something far more awful to the gaze than the bestiality of the latter. The rooms where they sit and smoke are surrounded by wooden couches, with places for the head to rest upon, and generally a side room is devoted to gambling. The pipe is a reed of about an inch in diameter, and the aperture in the bowl for the admission of the opium is not larger than a pin's head. The drug is prepared with some kind of conserve, and a very small portion of it is sufficient to charge it, one or two whiffs being the utmost that can be inhaled from a single pipe, and the smoke is taken into the lungs as from the hookah in India. On a beginner, one or two pipes will have an effect, but an old stager will continue smoking for hours. At the head of each couch is placed a small lamp, the fire must be held to the drug during the process of inhaling; and, from the difficulty of filling and properly lighting the pipe, there is generally a person who waits upon the smoker to perform the office. A few days of this fearful luxury, when taken to excess, will give a pallid and haggard look to the face, and a few months or even weeks, will change the strong and healthy man into little better than an idiot skeleton. The pain they suffer when deprived of the drug, after long habit, no language can explain; and it is only when to a certain degree under its influence that their faculties are alive. In the houses devoted to their ruin, these infatuated people may be seen at nine o'clock in the evening in all the different stages, some entering half distracted to feed the craving appetite they had been obliged to subdue during the day; and others laughing and talking wildly under the effects of a first pipe; while the couches around are filled with their different occupants, who lie languid with an idiot smile upon their countenances, too much under the influence of the drug to care for passing events, and fast merging to the wished for consummation. The last scene in this tragic play is generally a room in the rear of the building, a species of dead house, where lie stretched those who have passed into a state of bliss the opium-smoker madly seeks—an emblem of the long sleep to which he is blindly hurrying.

Moral Influence of a Literary Taste.

To a young man away from home, friendless and forlorn in a great city, the hours of peril are those between sunset and bed-time; for the moon and the stars see more evil in a single hour than the sun in his whole day's circuit. The poet's visions of evening are all composed of tender and soothing images. It brings the wanderer to his home, the child to his mother's arms, the ox to his stall, and the weary laborer to his rest. But to the gentle hearted youth who is thrown upon the rocks of a pitiless city, and "stands homeless amid a thousand homes," the approach of evening brings with it an aching sense of lonelinsss and desolation, which comes down upon the spirit like darkness upon the earth. In this mood, his best impulses become a snare to him, and he is led astray because he is social, affectionate, sympathetic, and warm-hearted. If there be a young man thus circumstanced within the sound of my voice, let me say to him, that books are the friends of the friendless, and that a library is a home to the homeless. A taste for reading will always carry you to converse with men who will instruct you by their wisdom and charm you by their wit, who will soothe you when fretted, refresh you when weary, counsel you when perplexed, and sympathise with you at all times. Evil spirits in the middle ages, were exorcised and driven away by bell, book, and candle; and you want but two of these agents, the book and the candle.—George S. Hilliard.

Creation of the Human Race.

DR. HITCHCOCK, the eminent geologist, said, in a discourse delivered by him in Albany, that geological science places man among the most recent of created things. We find the surface of the earth, (says Dr. H.,) composed, to the depth of some eight or ten miles, of rocks. These rocks are full of the remains of animals and plants. Thirty thousand species of them, which differ from any living species, have been disinterred, yet no human remains are found among them, until the loose soil—alluvium—is reached, which soil is universally acknowledged to be of recent origin. The remains of other animals are found several thousand feet below the surface, while the fossil remains of man have never been found so low as one hundred feet below the surface. But, if man had been in existence when these other animals lived, his remains would also have been found there; for his bones are of the same structure as theirs, and consequently no less likely to resist destruction.

How to Promote Peace in a Family.

1. REMEMBER that our will is likely to be crossed every day, so prepare for it.
2. Everybody in the house has an evil nature as well as ourselves, and, therefore, we are not to expect too much.
3. To learn the different temper and disposition of each individual.
4. To look on each member of the family as one for whom we should have a care.
5. When any good happens to any one, to rejoice at it.
6. When inclined to give an angry answer, to "overcome evil with good."
7. If from sickness, pain or infirmity, we feel irritable, to keep a strict watch over ourselves.
8. To observe when others are suffering, and drop a word of kindness and sympathy suited to them.
9. To watch the little opportunities of pleasing, and to put little annoyances out of the way.
10. To take a cheerful view of everything, even of the weather, and encourage hope.
11. To speak kindly to the servants—to praise them for little things when you can.
12. In all little pleasures which may occur, to put yourselves last.
13. To try for "the soft answer that turneth away wrath."

THE following process for making wood incombustable is simple, and should be adopted by those who are necessitated to put up buildings wholly of timber: Take a quantity of water proportionate to the surface of the wood to cover, and add to it as much potash as will dissolve therein. When the water will dissolve no more potash, stir into it a quantity of flour paste and a sufficiency of pure clay to render it of the consistency of cream. Immerse the wood in the preparation, and it will ever after be secured from the action of fire and water. This preparation may be applied to the surface of wooden roofs or other places particularly exposed to the action of fire. In the most violent conflagration wood saturated thus may be carbonated but it will not blaze.

The Earthquake in Candia.

S. MOUNFORT, in a letter to the editor of the Boston Post, gave an account of the terrible earthquake at Candia, on the 12th of November. In a more recent letter, he gives the official "returns" made to the pasha, which state the loss of life and property as follows, viz:

Ascertained to be killed, and whose bodies have been taken from the rubbish	525
Taken from the rubbish wounded	627
Total killed and wounded	1,152
Buildings overthrown and destroyed in the city of Candia	2,239
Do. badly injured and uninhabited	1,863
Do. much injured, but partly occupied	17

Destroyed in other sections of the Island	6,111

A "Socialist" Failure.

THE Icarian Community, at Nauvoo, Ill., having proved a disastrous experiment, causing dissatisfaction to all concerned, the members, now reduced from the original aggregate of one thousand two hundred persons to some four or five hundred, have petitioned the Illinois Legislature to repeal the act of incorporation, in order that the stock, now amounting to about forty five thousand dollars, may be divided. A bill for that purpose has been printed, and will probably pass.—[Ex.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH. 7, 1857.

Mormonism and Insanity.

It has, for some time, become quite fashionable for every scribbler, priest, editor, or lecturer, to introduce Mormonism into his performance, according to his ideas of it; but generally as foreign from truth as light is from darkness. The assumption by these spouters and very enlightened literati is, that Mormonism is a great big swindle and a monstrous humbug, and that its professors are fanatics, fools, and recreant to every principle of virtue and truth. These gentlemen, in many of their lectures and essays, forget one peculiarity of the present literati, priest and spouter, amounting almost to a monomania, a lunacy which exhibits itself in false and unsupported assertions, foul and wicked misrepresentations, and unscrupulous and barefaced slander, when writing or speaking anything about the Mormons; and as the old adage is, "a lie will travel a day's journey before truth gets his boots on," many well-meaning and really good-intentioned men, only weak in this particular, receive these stories as "strong evidence as proofs of sacred writ," and publish and speak of them accordingly. Many, however, know better, and for such there is no excuse. Some of these in a sixpenny lecture, and others for a penny a line, aided by the examples of priests and some of our leading editors, who really know they are lying, and for whom there is no excuse of ignorance; in order to pander to the morbid taste of a vitiated public appetite, will form an ideal monster which exists nowhere but in the fitful imagination of their own bewildered brain; and after having formed this creation, put on their boots and spurs, and attack the horrible fantasy a la mode Don Quixote—and thus, from our most respectable journalists and lecturers, down to our sixpenny orators, through all the grades of literature, to our penny-a-liners, we find the same principle in existence, or, more properly, the same lack of principle. Their speeches, articles, lectures, scribblings and orations, are generally interlarded with some of their own mental aberrations about Mormonism, of which they are generally most notoriously ignorant.

If our otherwise intelligent men would confine themselves to things which they know, and leave alone those of which they are evidently most egregiously ignorant, they would show themselves, to those informed at least, a little more intelligent, honest, candid, and truthful.

One of the prominent editors of our city called upon us a few days ago, and wished to obtain some information from us relative to Mormonism. We informed him that he "acted more like a rational being than most gentlemen of his cloth that we had met with; that most of the editors wrote from theory and speculation, and contented themselves with rumor rather than fact; and that perhaps there was no subject upon which people generally were more ignorant than upon the subject of Mormonism." He replied, "That is so; in writing on Mormonism, we generally strike off in the dark, and we must acknowledge ourselves green on the subject." We replied, that "we had discovered this greenness long ago; it was nothing new to us." As he desired, so we expressed our willingness to give any information that lay in our power. It is too often the case, however, that editors employ men of very questionable position to write articles or correspond with them on Mormonism; sometimes some adventurer on his way to the Golden State is engaged to be the correspondent of some of our leading journals; they have their cue given them, and must write to order; these gentry, not being able to get into society, see nothing and know nothing of practical Mormonism if they really desired it, which, in nine cases out of ten, they do not; finding their associates among loafers, (for we have some of these gentry in Utah,) and mixing with the very dregs of society, especially those of their own kith and kin, they can very readily form a very precious morgeau for the morbid appetites of their employers and their readers, which is about as fair a representation of the inhabitants of Utah as that of a man taking up his residence at Five Points and writing a history of that vicinity would be a faithful record of New York society. The Utonians do not think themselves very highly honored either with the scum of New York, or that of any other city; such men are neither hugged to their bosoms nor introduced into their families; they would rather let them float off and find another atmosphere more congenial to their tastes. The New York Tribune has had some very precious articles of this kind of late. He vouches for his heroes, and many of the weekly papers find it quite agreeable to copy and send them forth in a new dress, remodelled and garnished to suit the market, and thus priests, lecturers, and all the pious are horrified at Mormon abominations.

We find in a lecture by Dr. Edward H. Dixon, editor Scalpel, on the history of crime, and the comparative value of medical and lay testimony, many very sensible remarks. He has handled his subject, in the general, very well; but, like our editor referred to, and like all men who speak and write about things that they don't know, he has shown himself profoundly ignorant in speaking on Mormonism. We extract the following from the New York Herald, March 1:

"Mormonism, Latter-day-Saintism and spiritual rapping, belong to this department of moral insanity; their influence in filling the lunatic asylums is now acknowledged to be alarming. With one of them, ere long, the national Legislature must take issue; the others, I fear, are moral fungi, which education alone can remedy."

We have read of many spiritualists becoming deranged, and consequently finding a place in our asylums; but we have yet to learn of any Mormons becoming the inmates of those very useful institutions. Now it is either true or false that "Mormonism, Latter-day-Saintism .... belong to this department of moral insanity, and that their influence in filling the lunatic asylums is now acknowledged to be alarming." If it is true it is easily proven, and as the gentleman is the editor of a paper he will please furnish us with some official reports, for anything so alarming must be easily known and proved. We deny it in toto, and call for proof. We defy him to find one Mormon in a lunatic asylum. If this statement then is false, what are we to think of its author? We shall be able to tell better after he has read this article, which we shall forward. We call for proof, and if not forthcoming, we call for a retraction as public as the one made in his lecture. Let us have the proof. If Mr. Dixon does not notice this we shall be under the necessity of delivering a lecture on the low state of morals among lecturers and professors.

The New President.

THE Fourth of March 1857 is written on the calendar of Time, and the inauguration of James Buchanan to the Presidency of the United States of North America is un fait accompli. The unexpected severe storm in the beginning of the present week undoubtedly prevented many from visiting the capital, nevertheless the city on Wednesday was all stir, bustle and gaiety.

Ex-President Pierce, now that his reign is over, retires to where he may—few care, as his high patronage is at an end, and President Buchanan enters the White House, the bright star of many a hopeful heart. Mr. P. has had his four years of glory and trouble, and Mr. B. enters upon new experience. Whether the latter may be more successful than the former in satisfying the nation over which he is called to preside, is beyond the reach of mortal ken; he has, however, before him troublesome factions to commence with, which may disturb his dreams by night, and his vision by day. The Dis-unionists of the North have entered openly and boldly upon their campaign, holding their conventions all round, and anything the new President may do, good or bad, for or against slavery, will change in nothing their course—it is measures and not men against which they take their stand—no union with slaveholders. The Southern Democracy have been comparatively quiet since the 4th of November—as Mr. Buchanan was their choice, and in him they had hope; but now that the Cabinet which he has drawn around him does not embrace gentlemen with extreme Southern proclivities, the signs in the political horizon indicate trouble to the new administration, and promise a fiercer contest in 1860 than that of 1856.

The new President may maintain his integrity, and four years hence his conscience may be as pure as the falling snow, and in his farewell message he may challenge his enemies, as undoubtedly he will have them, to point to the first deviation of his administration from constitutional law; but all will avail nothing, for Dis-union is the watchword.

The folks are blind, and rush to ruin. There is something more than Filibusterism in "Destiny." Watch it.

Shabby—Mean—Uncharitable.

Horace Greeley, the editor of the New York Tribune, has, previous to the organization of the Corruption Investigating Committee, enjoyed the harmless reputation of being the false philosopher of a false philosophy peculiarly his own, and the worst that his enemies ever could say of him, up to that time, was that, in addition to his eccentricities and proclivities for slandering anything he couldn't overcome, he delighted in a dirty face, dirty boots, unbrushed coat and uncombed hair; but now some of his cotemporaries propose to fix Stryker to his name in remembrance of the Stryker $1000 draft got at Washington. Now that seems shabby and mean. Give Horace time, he has made a very fair beginning. He has already said that he gave the $1000 to somebody. Take time editors and he may shortly tell you to whom he gave it, when, how—and what for. Give him time: he has scarcely got over the fright.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE Corruption Investigating Committee have triumphed, and Messrs. Gilbert, Edwards and Matteson are no longer Honorable members of Congress. They sent in their resignations to save their expulsion. Differences of opinion, of course, exist respecting their criminality. With Messrs. Gilbert and Edwards, especially with the former, there is considerable sympathy, but with Mr. Matteson, none. Dr. Welch of Conn. was regarded more in the light of the victim of his friends than that of a transgressor. The friends of the fallen members maintain that they have been unjustly dealt with, and have been made the scapegoats for a greater number of unpublished names. This investigation, if it has not done everything, will at least be a caution for some time to come. Mr. Simmonton, of the New York Daily Times, the writer who drew particular attention to the corruption in Congress, is to be henceforth denied admission to the reporter's privileges in the House, on account of his own corruption. Mr. Triplett has likewise been expelled. Served them right.

The fine spring weather of last week suddenly terminated on Sunday evening, and the following morning every thing outside was deep covered in snow. The wind was furious and must have done considerable damage on the coast.

Last Thursday there was something approaching a row in the House. Mr. Sherman of Ohio, and Mr. Wright of Tennessee were all but at it. The subject of quarrel we noticed in last week's Congressional. Mr. Wright had said in an under tone in reference to something spoken about Kansas, "that's a lie." Mr. Sherman called the attention of the House to it next morning, and Mr. W. would not retract. On Thursday, Mr. S. says that Mr. W., when near the seat of the former, had looked menacingly at him, whereupon he threw wafers in his face. Wright attempted to strike and Sherman endeavored to draw a weapon. Who can complain of rowdyism in low groggeries, and butchery in street fights, while the House of Representatives gives such examples of refinement? Fine lively times.

Connected with the last levee of ex-President Pierce, on Friday evening, is linked another of the many tragedies that mark the age we live in. Col. Doddridge C. Lee, a clerk in the pension bureau, at the moment of entering the President's reception room felt his pocket-book leave his "pants," on which he collared Mr. D. Hume, a very respectable citizen of Alexandria, Va. After a denial on the part of the latter and a few words of explanation, they separated. Mr. Hume went to the office of Mr. Lee next morning, asked him in the presence of others if he retracted the accusation, and on his answering in the negative he began to cane him, whereupon the Col. drew a pistol and shot Mr. H. dead. The affair was so hurriedly done, that the parties present had no time to interfere—so they say—and Col. L. pleads that he did so in self-defence. At the Coroner's inquest, Mr. S. G. Heaton testifies to the whole affair; saw the beginning at the levee in the evening, and saw Mr. H. shot next morning. In his testimony he states that Mr. Lee told him previous to the meeting in the morning that a gentleman assured him that "he had mistaken his man" in Mr. Hume—that he was indeed a respectable gentleman. We presume the shooting probably arose more from the altercation in the morning than from the affair of the previous evening.

Gov. Geary of Kansas has had a narrow escape from "Border Ruffianism." On refusing to appoint, on the recommendation of the Legislature, Mr. Sherrard as sheriff in the place of Jones, Mr. S. took umbrage and sought a quarrel. Meeting the governor, he spat in his face, but could not get up a row. An indignation meeting being held, Sherrard and Jones were present to oppose, and a squabble began, and Sherrard fired freely his revolver, wounding a Mr. Sheppard. A friend of the Governor, a Mr. James, drew his pistol and shot Sherrard dead. According to the telegraphic despatches, the Council condemns by resolution the outrage upon the Governor, and the House sustained Sherrard.

Formal charges of incompetency have been preferred against Coroner Connery by the counsel of Mrs. Cunningham, to which Gov. King requires Mr. Connery's refutation. Unless the coroner can very successfully rebut the charges, there is a very great likelihood of his official career terminating abruptly, as the prejudice is great against him for the levity and tomfoolery he manifested throughout the investigation into the murder of the late Dr. Burdell. Of this case nothing of special notice has transpired since the indictment by the Grand Jury of Mrs. Cunningham and her accomplice Eckel, except an institution into the legality of Mrs. C.'s marriage with Dr. Burdell, now pending before the Surrogate.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

The opening of the British Parliament on the 3rd ult. brings out the views of that government upon its foreign relations. Palmerston acknowledges the steps of Admiral Seymour against Canton, is well pleased with firing into the Celestial city. The latest advices from Hong Kong state that all the foreign buildings at Canton had been burned and pillaged. Admiral Seymour had been throwing hot shot into Canton, but at the latest dates had ceased hostilities, and was strengthening his position. The Chinese threatened to burn down Hong Kong. Troops were about to be sent from India. It was rumored that the Emperor was desirous of peace, but the Cantonese were uncontrollable.

The Persian Ambassador at Paris has opened negotiations with Lord Cowley, with the view of settling the difficulties between their respective governments.

Paris is now definitely named as the place of conference on the Neuchatel question. The conference will meet probably early this month. The statements now current in Europe warrant the conclusion that the Helvetians have been a leetle too prompt in releasing the prisoners. The King of Prussia may yet show himself magnanimous, but thus far he has the game in his own hands: they can force him to nothing, he has promised nothing.

ST. JOHN'S TOWN, Du Quoin, Ill., Feb. 24, 1857.

PRESI. TAYLOR—Dear Brother: Please send on five copies of THE MORMON to the enclosed address. The Saints here are unfortunately not so well off in worldly circumstances as you were informed by an Elder from St. Louis, as published in No. 48 of THE MORMON. With one exception, we are certainly from Scotland, and perhaps not so smart as some other folks, still we don't consider ourselves anything the worse for our place of nativity. The most of the brethren here are opposed to anything of a "fossil" nature about Mormonism, and are determined to roll on the work of God and live in righteousness. Though represented lukewarm, we think none who know our course this last fifteen years will say so. We never had much to give, but what we have had we have given freely to the last cent, and would again if we had a thousand-fold more. Respecting support for THE MORMON, we have done our best, and will do to the utmost of our ability, for I can assure you that if we fail in our duty we are every week sensible of the fact that the editor of THE MORMON does not fail in his, and is faithful to the confidence we repose in him, upholding the work of God against all opposing powers. THE MORMON is to us a welcome messenger, and is earnestly looked for every week as an absent friend that is to bring us good tidings from a far country.

May God bless you in your arduous duties, until the enemies of the Church of Christ are subdued. Your brother and fellow laborer in the Kingdom of God, JAMES JARDINE.

News from Kansas.

St. LOUIS, Feb. 28, 1857.

Accounts from Lecompton states that Governor Geary having visited the Territorial Legislature, was assaulted at the door by Sheriff Sherrard. While leaving, Sherrard insulted Geary and spit on him. He had arms, and it was supposed it was a plot to assassinate the Governor, but he was prevented from using his arms.

The Council condemns the outrage by resolution, while the House fully sustains Sherrard.

A law has passed both branches to punish rebellion with death. All resistance to Territorial law or authority is declared rebellion.

The bill repealing the test oaths, which passed through the Council, has been almost unanimously defeated in the House.

Governor Geary fears assasination, and sent yesterday for the troops at Tecumseh, to remain here for his protection. A detachment of dragoons have gone to arrest Captain Walker.

The Day

Arrangements for the Inauguration of the President Elect on the Fourth of March, 1857.

THE doors of the Senate chamber will be opened at 11 o'clock, or as early as the closing of the present session of Congress will permit, for the admission of Senators, and others who, by the arrangement of the Committee, are entitled to admission, as follows:

Ex-Presidents and Vice-Presidents.

The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court.

The Diplomatic Corps, Heads of Departments, and ex-members of either branch of Congress and members of Congress elect.

Officers of the Army and Navy who by name have received the thanks of Congress.

Governors of States and Territories of the Union, and Ex-Governors of States; the Comptrollers, Auditors, Registers and Solicitor of the Treasury, Treasurer, Commissioners, Judges and

The Mayors of Washington and Georgetown;

All of whom will be admitted at the north door of the Capitol.

Seats will be placed in front of the Secretary's table for the President of the United States and the President elect, and on their left for the Committee of Arrangements.

The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court will have seats on the right, in front of the eastern lobby.

The Diplomatic Corps will occupy places on the left of the principal entrance; Heads of Departments, Governors of States and Territories, and other gentlemen entitled to admission, will occupy those on the right.

Members of Congress and members elect will occupy the eastern lobby. They will enter the Senate Chamber by the door at the top of the main staircase.

The eastern gallery will be occupied by other citizens, who will be admitted by the outside north-eastern door only.

The circular gallery will be reserved entirely for ladies, who will enter the Capitol from the terrace, the principal western door, and be conducted to the rotunda and gallery.

The other doors and entrances to the Capitol, except those to be opened under this arrangement, will be kept closed.

The Senate will assemble at 12 o'clock.

The Diplomatic Corps and the Justices of the Supreme Court will enter the Senate Chamber a few minutes before the President elect.

The Vice President elect will be accompanied to the Capitol, and conducted into the Senate chamber, by a member of the Committee of Arrangements.

At 11 o'clock the President and the President elect, accompanied by two members of the Committee of Arrangements, will proceed in a carriage to the north gate of the Capitol square, and entering the Capitol by the north door, will proceed to the Vice President's room.

The Senate being ready to receive them, the President and the President elect will be introduced by the Committee of Arrangements to the seats prepared for them in the Senate chamber.

After a short pause, those assembled in the Senate chamber will proceed to the eastern portico of the Capitol in the following order:

The Marshal of the District of Columbia.

The Supreme Court of the United States.

The Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

The Committee of Arrangements.

The President of the United States and the President elect.

The Vice-President and the Secretary of the Senate.

The Members of the Senate.

The Diplomatic Corps.

Heads of Departments, Governors of States and Territories, the Mayors of Washington and Georgetown, and other persons who shall have been admitted into the Senate chamber.

On reaching the front of the portico, the President elect will take the seat provided for him on the front of the platform.

The ex-President and the Committee of Arrangements will occupy a position in the rear of the President elect.

Next, in the rear of these, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court will occupy the seats on the left; and the Vice-President, Secretary, and members of the Senate, those on the right.

The Diplomatic Crops will occupy the seats next in the rear of the Supreme Court; Heads of Departments, Governors and ex-Governors of States and Territories, and ex-members of the Senate, ex-members and members elect of the House of Representatives, in the rear of the members of the Senate.

Such other persons as are included in the preceding arrangements will occupy the steps, and the residue of the portico.

All being in readiness, the oath of office will be administered to the President elect by the Chief Justice; and, on the conclusion of the President's address, the members of the Senate, preceded by the Vice-President, Secretary, and Sergeant-at-Arms, will return to the Senate Chamber; and the President, accompanied by the Committee of Arrangements, will proceed to the President's House.

The Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, with the Marshal of the District, are charged with the execution of these arrangements, and aided by the Police of the Capitol, will preserve order.

All carriages and horses will be excluded from the Capitol Square, whether in the use of the military or otherwise.

These arrangements have been made with the desire that the greatest possible accomodation be given to the people to witness the ceremonies. The arrangements within the Capitol were of necessity formed with reference to the limited capacity of the Senate Chamber; and those for the exterior were deemed most appropriate with a view to affording the assembled multitude an opportunity of witnessing the Inauguration.

Should the weather prove unfavorable, the ceremony of the Inauguration will take place in the Senate Chamber.

JAMES A. PEARCE, WILLIAM BIGLER, SOLOMON FOOT. } Committee of Arrangements.

MR. BUCHANAN'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

FELLOW CITIZENS:

I APPEAR before you this day to take the solemn oath that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States. In entering upon this great office I must humbly invoke the God of our fathers for wisdom and firmness to execute its high and responsible duties in such a manner as to restore harmony and the ancient friendship among the people of the several States, and to preserve our free institutions throughout many generations. Convinced that I owe my election to the inherent love for the Constitution and the Union which still animates the hearts of the American people, let me earnestly ask their powerful support in sustaining all just measures calculated to perpetuate these, the richest political blessings which Heaven has ever bestowed upon any nation.

Having determined not to become a candidate for re-election, I shall have no motive to influence my conduct in administering the government, except the desire ably and faithfully to serve my country and to live in the grateful memory of my countrymen.

We have recently passed through a Presidential contest in which the passions of our fellow citizens were excited to the highest degree by questions of deep and vital importance; but when the people proclaimed their will, the tempest at once subsided and all was calm. The voice of the majority speaking in the manner prescribed by the Constitution was heard, and instant submission followed. Our own country could alone have exhibited so grand and striking a spectacle of the capacity of man for self government.

What a happy conception, then, was it for Congress to apply this simple rule—that the will of the majority shall govern—to the settlement of the question of domestic slavery in the Territories. Congress is neither to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, not to exclude it therefrom; but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, as a natural consequence. Congress has also prescribed that when the Territory of Kansas shall be admitted as a State, it shall be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their Constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission. A different opinion has arisen in regard to the time when the people of a Territory shall decide this question for themselves. This is, happily, a matter of but little practical importance, and beside, it is a judicial question, which legitimately belongs to the Supreme Court of the United States, before whom it is now pending, and will, it is understood, be speedily and finally settled. To their decision, in common with all good citizens, I shall cheerfully submit, whatever this may be, though it has been my individual opinion that under the Nebraska-Kansas act the appropriate period will be when the number of actual residents in the Territory shall justify the formation of a Constitution with a view to its admission as a State into the Union; but be this as it may, it is the imperative and indispensible duty of the Government of the United States to secure to every resident inhabitant the free and independent expression of his opinion by his vote. This sacred right of each individual must be preserved. This being accomplished, nothing can be fairer than to leave the people of a Territory free from all foreign interference, to decide their own destiny for themselves, subject only to the constitution of the United States. The whole Territorial question being thus settled upon the principle of popular sovereignty—a principle as ancient as free government itself—everything of a practical nature has been decided, and no other question remains for adjustment, because all agree that under the constitution, slavery in the States is beyond the reach of any human power except that of the respective States themselves wherein it exists. May we not, then, hope that the long agitation on this subject is approaching its end, and that the geographical parties to which it has given birth, so much dreaded by the Father of his country will speedily become extinct. Most happy will it be for the country when the public mind shall be diverted from this question to others of more pressing and practical importance. Throughout the whole progress of this agitation, which has scarcely known any intermission for more than twenty years, while it has been productive of no positive good to any human being it has been the prolific source of great evils to the master, to the slave, and to the whole country; it has alienated and estranged the people of the sister States from each other, and has even seriously endangered the very existence of the Union, nor has the danger yet entirely ceased.

Under our system there is a remedy for all mere political evils in the sound sense and sober judgment of the people. Time is a great corrective. The political subjects which but a few years ago excited and exasperated the public mind, have passed away, and are now nearly forgotten; but this question of domestic slavery is of far greater importance than any mere political question; because, should the agitation continue it may eventually endanger the personal safety of a large portion of our countrymen where the institution exists. In that event no form of government, however admirable in itself, however productive of material benefits, can compensate for the loss of peace and domestic security around the family altar. Let every Union-loving man therefore exert his best influence to suppress this agitation which, since the recent legislation of Congress, is without any legitimate object. It is an evil of the times that men have undertaken to calculate the mere material value of the Union. Reasoned estimates have been presented of the pecuniary profits and local advantages which would result to different States and sections from its dissolution, and of the comparative injuries which such an event would inflict on other States and sections. Even descending this low and narrow view of the mighty question, all such calculations are at fault. The bare reference to a single consideration will be conclusive on this point. We at present enjoy a free trade throughout our extensive and expansive country, such as the world never witnessed. This trade is conducted on railroads and canals, on noble rivers and arms of the sea, which bind together the North and the South, the East and the West of our confederacy. Annihilate this trade, arrest its free progress by the geographical lines of jealous and hostile States, and you destroy the prosperity and onward march of the whole and every part, and involve all in one common ruin. But such considerations, important as they are in themselves, sink into insignificance when we reflect on the terrific evils which would result from disunion, to every portion of the confederacy—to the North not more than to the South—to the East not more than to the West. These I shall not attempt to portray, because I feel an humble confidence that the kind Providence which inspired our fathers with wisdom to frame the most perfect form of government and union ever devised by man, will not suffer it to perish until it shall have been peacefully instrumental by its example in the extension of civil and religious liberty throughout the world.

Next in importance to the maintenance of the constitution and the Union is the duty of preserving the government free from the taint or even the suspicion of corruption. Public virtue is the vital spirit of republics, and history proves that when this has decayed, and the love of money has usurped its place, although the forms of free government may remain for a season, the substance has departed forever.

Our present financial condition is without a parallel in history. No nation has ever before been embarrassed from too large a surplus in its treasury. This almost necessarily gives birth to extravagant legislation. It produces wild schemes of expenditures, and begets a race of speculators and jobbers, whose ingenuity is exerted in contriving and promoting expedients to obtain the public money. The party, through its official agents, whether rightfully or wrongfully, is suspected, and the character of the government suffers in the estimation of the people. This is in itself a very great evil. The natural mode of relief from this embarrassement is to appropriate the surplus in the treasury to great national objects for which a clear warrant can be found in the constitution. Among these I might mention the extinguishment of the public debt; a reasonable increase of the navy, which is at present inadequate to the protection of our vast tonnage afloat—now greater than that of any other nation—as well as the defence of our extended sea coast.

It is, beyond all question the true principle that no more revenue ought to be collected from the people than the amount necessary to defray the expenses of a wise, economical and efficient administration of the government. To reach this point it was necessary to resort to a modification of the tariff, and this has been accomplished in such a manner as to do as little injury as may have been practicable to our domestic manufactures, especially those necessary for the defence of the country. Any discrimination against a particular branch for the purpose of benefitting favored corporations, individuals or interests would have been unjust to the rest of the community, and inconsistent with that spirit of fairness and equality which ought to govern in the adjustment of a revenue tariff.

But the squandering of the public money sinks into comparative insignificance, as a temptation to corruption, when compared with the squandering of the public lands. No nation in the tide of time has ever been blessed with so rich and noble an inheritance as we enjoy in the public lands. In administering this important trust, whilst it may be wise to grant portions of them for the improvement of the remainder, yet we should never forget that it is our cardinal policy to reserve these lands as much as may be, for actual settlers, and this at moderate prices. We shall thus not only best promote the prosperity of the new States by furnishing a hardy and independent race of honest and industrious citizens, but shall secure homes for our children and our children's children, as well as for those exiles from foreign shores who may seek in this country to improve their condition, and to enjoy the blessings of civil and religious liberty. Such emigrants have done much to promote the growth and prosperity of the country. They have proved faithful both in peace and in war. After becoming citizens they are entitled, under the constitution and laws, to be placed on perfect equality with native born citizens, and in this character they should ever be kindly recognised. The federal constitution is a grant from the States to Congress of certain specific powers, and the question whether this grant shall be liberally or strictly construed has, more or less, divided political parties from the beginning.

Without entering into the argument, I desire to state at the commencement of my administration, that long experience and observation have convinced me that a strict construction of the powers of the government is the only true as well as the only safe theory of the Constitution. Whenever in our past history doubtful powers have been exercised by Congress, they have never failed to produce injurious and unhappy consequences. Many such instances might be adduced if this were the proper occasion. Neither is it necessary for the public service to strain the language of the Constitution, because all the great and useful powers required for a successful administration of the government, both in peace and in war, have been granted either in express terms or by the plainest implication. While deeply convinced of these truths, I yet consider it clear that under the war-making power, Congress may appropriate money towards the construction of a military road, when this is absolutely necessary for the defence of any State or Territory of the Union against foreign invasion. Under the Constitution, Congress has power to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to call forth the militia to repel invasion. Thus endowed in an ample manner with the war-making power, the corresponding duty is required, that the United States shall protect each of them (the States) against invasion. Now is it possible to afford this protection to California and our Pacific possessions except by means of a military road through the territory of the United States, over which men and munitions of war may be speedily transported from the Atlantic States to meet and repel the invaders? In case of a war with a naval power much stronger than our own, we should then have no other available access to the Pacific coast because such a power would instantly close the route across the Isthmus of Central America. It is impossible to conceive that whilst the Constitution has expressly required Congress to defend all the States, it should yet deny to them, by any fair construction, the only possible means by which one of these States can be defended. Besides, the government, ever since its origin, has been in the constant practice of constructing military roads. It might also be wise to consider whether the love for the Union which now animates our fellow citizens on the Pacific coast may not be impaired by our neglect or refusal to provide for them in their remote and isolated condition; the only means by which the power of the States on this side of the Rocky mountains can reach them in sufficient time to protect them against invasion. I forbear for the present from expressing an opinion as to the wisest and most economical mode in which the government can lend its aid in accomplishing this great and necessary work. I believe that many difficulties in the way, which now appear formidable, will in a great degree vanish as soon as the nearest and best route shall have been satisactorily ascertained.

It may be right that on this occasion I should make some brief remarks as to our rights and duties as a member of the great family of nations. In our intercourse with them there are some plain principles, approved by our experience, from which we should never depart. We ought to cultivate peace, commerce and friendship with all nations; and this not merely as the best means of promoting our own material interest, but in a spirit of Christian benevolence towards our fellow men, wherever their lot may be cast. Our diplomacy should be direct and frank—neither seeking to obtain more nor accepting less than is our due. We ought to cherish a sacred regard for the independence of all nations, and never attempt to interfere in the domestic concerns of any, unless this shall be imperatively required by the great law of self-preservation. To avoid entangling alliances has been a maxim of our policy ever since the days of Washington, and its wisdom no one will attempt to dispute. In short, we ought to do justice in a kindly spirit to all nations, and require justice from them in return. It is our glory that while other nations have extended their dominions by the sword, we have never acquired any territory except by fair purchase, or, as in the case of Texas, by the voluntary determination of a brave, kindred and independent people to blend their destinies with our own. Even our acquisitions from Mexico form no exception; unwilling to take advantage of the fortune of war against a sister republic, we purchased these possessions under the treaty of peace, for a sum which was considered at the time, a fair equivalent.

Our past history forbids that we shall in the future acquire territory unless this be sanctioned by the laws of justice and honor. Acting on this principle, no nation will have a right to interfere or to complain if, in the progress of events, we shall still further extend our possessions. Hitherto, in all our acquisitions the people under the protection of the American flag have enjoyed civil and religious liberty, as well as equal and just laws, and have been contented, prosperous and happy. Their trade with the rest of the world has rapidly increased, and thus every commercial nation has shared largely in their successful progress. I shall now proceed to take the oath prescribed by the constitution, whilst humbly invoking the blessing of divine Providence on this great people.

FOR THE MORMON.

The Works of God and the Works of Man.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

WHEN, in pensive contemplation, our thoughts disengage themselves from the trivial topics of every day life, and resort to the sublime and magnificent works which have been accomplished under the forming hands of the great Creator, we cannot help being struck at the utter insignificance and vanity of human greatness. Well may talent and genius occupy prominent places in the temple of Fame; well may the intellectual monuments of man be crowned with the gaudy laurels of worldly honors, and gain the gazing admiration of the multitude—but they are nothing, when compared to those lofty and stupendous works achieved by the overruling power of Omnipotence. What can impede the corroding influence of time, when striding over centuries, and shrouding every thing in the mist of hoary age! Where is the workmanship of man, to whose founders the world has paid the praising and fawning court of short-sighted mortals! Alas! its grandeur is mouldering in the urn of corruption!

In order to illustrate better the foregoing, we will compare a few monuments of the great repository of human knowledge to those of the allwise Creator. How wonderful appears to the reflective mind, for instance, the intellectual and physical economy of the human system, which is constituted of 240 variously articulated bones, and more than 440 muscles of different forms and contextures, of marrow and blood; and all these physical niceties of the structure are productive of the endless modifications of motion, of facilitating every bodily performance or operation, we have to engage in, imparting thus to the system that grace, harmony and beauty which are so pleasing to the eye of refined taste. What a sublime machinery that of man! There he is, having the immortal spark within himself, by means of which both the physical and intellectual principles are guided, and have sufficient scope for a full developement. It is true, that the genius of man has accomplished much; it is true, that automata or machines have been invented, which having the finishing touch of artistical perfection, are pronounced masterpieces. They may go through a series of mechanical performances, but then they remain motionless, till the spring of their machinery is touched anew by a superior principle, the intelligence of man. What are then all these artificial monuments of human lore, nothing but a faint imitation of man, having merely the outward resemblance of his body, without possessing that mysterious, life-giving principle, called spirit? What would we say, to see an automaton having the free exercise of its locomotive and mental powers, endowed with the gifts of thinking, speaking, hearing, seeing, feeling and tasting, through which avenues of senses, man can realize, to a certain extent, the presence of the visible world, by which he can receive, and make impressions, ideas, and convey his feelings and sentiments, in harmonious language to his fellow-beings, engage, as an intelligent self-agent, in all the multifarious transactions of life, and thus make himself useful for the accomplishment of God's own purposes? Why, he who invented such a machine, would be pronounced a demigod, before whom man would bend his knee in adoration. How is it then, that the human family does not show more gratitude and obedience to Him who achieved so many wonderful works, who endows His creations with the life-giving principle! What inconsistency, to worship the puny workmanship of man, who imitates, but cannot create, and to deny Him who speaks in the thunder, and smiles in the radiant sun.

What human ingenuity can sufficiently explain or imitate the mysterious process of the swelling, germinating, and growing of a seed of grain, by partaking of the chemical properties of the soil, and the different kinds of manure, and showing, when fully grown up, a complete developement of physiological structure and functions, and displaying all the qualities of fruits, which are either used for the sustenance of man, or other useful purposes? It is true, that by certain chemical operations, and other artificial contrivances, the growth of plants, herbs, &c. may be accelerated, but nothing more. The pictures of the most eminent painters, whose art and genius conspired to portray scenes of beauty on canvass, the most correct imitations of Nature, are nothing when compared to the harmony, majesty, loveliness, and grandeur displayed in the vast fields of God's creation, in which an endless variety of stately trees, plants, grasses and herbs wave, in sign of worship, their brandishing heads to the great dispenser of Life; and every species of living beings is expressing its joy and happiness in a peculiar way; where the gentle and melodious murmuring of brooks, the surging billow and the whispering breeze is heard; where rivers, lakes and oceans propagate their anthems, and the thundering avalanches speak their emphatic praise. The most gorgeous scenes of pageantry processions, with their bustling throng of steel-clad knights, squires, heralds, and the hundreds and thousands of lancers, with their banners flying in the air, and in all their gay and romantic accoutrements of the middle ages, are nothing in comparison to the brilliant array of celestial scenery. How insignificant appear the works of man before those of God, by whose power, according to the memorials of past history, the most stupendous events, the most awful catastrophes have taken place in relation to our terrestrial system! Events which must have horribly convulsed both the exterior surface, and the interior strata of the earth. What a power, through whose agency, the highest mountains have been more or less broken, split and displaced, so that sometimes the lowest have been lifted to the highest surface, while in other places immense portions have entirely disappeared and formed bottomless chasms! What a stupendous agency, by which mountains were hurled from their foundations, and lifted from one continent to another. The scientific explorations of Humboldt, Saussure and others, show, that evident marks of dislocations and convulsions may be found both in the Eastern and Western hemisphere; further, the discoveries of immense quantities of the organic and inorganic remains of antediluvian creations, as, for instance, that of sea-shells on the Andes in South America at an altitude of 14,200 feet above the level of the sea, confirm the fact, that the waters of the deluge must have covered the whole globe. How many of the proud monuments of human greatness have remained to tell the tale of the awful fate of a past world! Where is Nineveh, by the erection or rebuilding of which, the conquering Ninus sought to gain an immortal fame, and which city was surrounded by 1500 towers of 200 feet, and by walls of 100 feet in height, and of such a thickness, that three chariots abreast could drive upon them? Where is Babylon, the famous residence of the queen Semiramis? Where Thebes of Upper Egypt with its 100 gates? (Thebes is called in Arabic, Al Said, in Greek, Hecatompylis, from hecaton, hundred and pylae, the gates; and sometimes it is called by the inhabitants of Hellas, Diopolis, or city of Jupiter.) Where is Memphis, which, founded by Menes, the first king of Heptanonis or Middle Egypt, with its many beautiful temples, especially those of the God, Apis, and with its twenty pyramids, ranked among the wonders of the world? Where is the famous Labyrinth, of which the Greek historian, Herodotus relates, that it was far superior to the pyramids, and was situated in the Heracleotic district, near Arsinoe, or the City of Crocodiles, not far from the famous lake Moeris? (The Labyrinth was a magnificent structure of 12 joined palaces, with 1500 chambers, which were so constructed, that a stranger without a guide could not find his way out of them. The subterranean chambers, which either served as depositories of the sacred crocodiles, or as tombs or catacombs of their kings, were of an equal number. It was built as a Pantheon, (from the Greek, pan, all, every, and theos, god,) in which all the Egyptian deities were worshipped. All these wonders of human greatness are now only a heap of ruins, a sad memento of the perishableness of worldly things, where the nightingale's sweet, warbling notes are heard no more, and the lyre of the Oriental poet is silent; where the spider has woven her net and the owl has made her nest; where weeds and jungles are covering the ground, and the lonely Arab is brooding in solemn sadness over the gay scenes, over which Time has drawn its veil for ever. Ye relics of past worlds, whose sun has set thousands of years ago, ye teach us the great lesson, to have a realizing sense of our own weaknesses and frailties, and not to allow vanity to steal in our hearts, but to be humble, and obedient to God and His mandates. And while every thing in this world has to yield to the corroding influence of time, and is awaiting the doom of its corruption, the works of Jehovah built on the rock of eternal truth, stand for ever and ever; they witness the fall and rise of worlds, the funeral of whole generations; they look upon the earth as a vast mausoleum, in which millions and millions of beings are mouldering in silent repose, till the resurrection morning will call them to eternal life. The seasons come and go in silent order, causing the earth to bring forth an endless variety of fruits for the sustenance of her creations; the rivers are rising on the everlasting mountains of former ages, and discharge in the ocean; the earth is revolving every 24 hours round its axis; day is following night; the thousands of luminaries are revolving in silent majesty in elliptical spheres, without ever deviating from their course; the sun is performing his sublime office according to the laws of eternal order and harmony, and while imparting life and light to his satellites, he is writing, with brilliant rays, his testimony on the august compositions of Omnipotence, that the works of God are eternal, but those of man vain and perishable.

LETTER NO. II.

To the Editor of the Western Standard:

As in No. 1 we considered ignorance of the principles of truth the cause of evil and wrong among mankind, and the comprehension of the truth a sovereign remedy; we purpose to notice in our present letter, the nature of some of the ordinances of the Gospel, and the relationship they bear to the truth, the knowledge of which is salvation from ignorance and consequent error, and is, in itself eternal life.

The sole object of the preaching of the Gospel to mankind, is the enlightenment of the mind; as the accomplishment of this is all that saves from Sin and Death.

We are often told, that faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands, &c., are the principles of the Gospel—that they are the ordinances of the Gospel as well as the preaching of the word, we would not question for a moment,—that they are of God is true, as they are of His own appointment for the accomplishment of His work, viz., the salvation of man.

In noticing the relation that the ordinance of preaching the word, bears to the salvation of the individual to whom it is addressed, we find that the first effect produced, is to call the attention of the hearer to the enunciation of the minister. But is he then saved? No! For this simple reason, that as yet he has not determined in his own mind the truth or falsity of what he has heard for consideration and reflection. He has been told that if he will repent and be baptized, he will receive the Holy Spirit, which will enlighten him, and produce in him its legitimate fruits, among which is a knowledge of God, and as it is promised, it will take of the things of the Father and show them unto the disciple of Jesus. What, then, is it that saves? The baptism? the preaching of the word? or the spirit of truth imparting a knowledge of God, which is eternal life? We see then that the ordinances alluded to stand in the relation to man's salvation as means used for its attainment, which to answer the end of their institution must bring him to the fountain of life and immortality. Thus we see that salvation through the ordinances of the Gospel, is made to depend upon that practical purity of life that will secure the presence of the Holy Spirit and the consequent ministry of its blessings of light and life.

From this consideration of the relation of the ordinances to the accomplishment of man's salvation, it can clearly be seen, that Jesus in His Gospel gave to the world of mankind a system or rule of life, which, when honestly adopted and fully applied to man, so as to extend to the purifying of the fountain of his affections, and the consequent regulation of all his actions, should secure to him as the result or reward of his conduct, salvation from sin. Had this principle been kept in view by the so-called Christian world, the principles of practical virtue would have been spread coequally with that of Christianity, and earth would now be radiant in the light of truth, where corruption and darkness now reign.

The demoralizing influence growing out of a blind and groundless confidence in the observance of outward ordinances, has left the religions of Christendom but an empty name or a cloak for the most damning corruption.

When we regard the outward ordinances of the Gospel as the means and measures adopted in the wisdom of God, by which to bring His ignorant and erring children to the fountain of life, then they can be justly appreciated not as salvation, but the means which leads to its attainment; in the same way in which the preparation and offer of a generous repast saves the starving man just perishing for the want of food; he takes it in his hand, but tastes not, and starving on will say, I am fed. He is never saved from starvation and death until he eats. So with the disciple of Jesus in the school of universal truth; he may be taught for long years, and be baptized and rebaptized again and again, and still the clouds of darkness may lower around him, and chairs of ignorance bind him still the prisoner of corruption, and that death which comes by sin, or as its consequence; and this because he may suppose that having been baptized for the remission of his sins, he is therefore saved, and does not labor to sanctify himself through the truth and thus make his body a fitting temple for the spirit of truth to dwell in.

When the disciple of truth has so long and faithfully attended to the duties prescribed, ever keeping in his mind the object for which they are instituted, until the tree and fountain of life becomes planted and fixed within him, and is perpetually sending forth its fruits and streams of life through the whole circle of his being, he then lives in purity and holiness, simply because he does not commit sin.

Western Standard.

Instructive Chapter for the Censors of Utah.

From the Western Standard, Jan. 24.

An anonymous writer, in an article headed "Utah," published in the Chronicle of Tuesday, proposes a plan, which, if adopted, will, in his opinion, effectually dispose of the difficulty attendant on the admittance of Utah into the Union. His suggestion is for Congress to partition Utah and apportion the different parts to California and the adjacent Territories. If this should be done, the "deep disgrace" which will be inflicted upon our country by the recognition of Utah as a sister State, will, he thinks, be avoided, and the holders of the Mormon doctrines will be subjected to the laws of the Territories into which they may be incorporated, and being likely to be but a small minority in each, all their peculiar institutions will, as a matter of course, be at once destroyed.

Were it not so serious a subject, it would be amusing to see the interest which writers manifest in regard to the "deep disgrace" likely to be brought upon them by the peculiar institutions of "Mormonism." To read their writings, and not be acquainted with the people whence they emanate, it might be imagined that they were so very pure, upright, and immaculate a community that they could not view the appearance of evil without horror. Those not posted up on the subject could not imagine that writers, who so hypocritically talk about the "revolting peculiar institutions" of the Mormons and the "deep disgrace" which association with them would entail, are themselves dwelling in the midst of a community where corruption, whoredom, and abomination of every kind are glaringly exhibited on all hands. Yet such is the fact. These men who remonstrate with such affected indignation about the corruptions of the Mormons, are themselves the daily spectators of the most disgusting and hideous vice and crime in their own streets. So notorious, and of so threatening a nature have these evils become, that they have forced themselves upon the attention of the late Grand Jury, who allude to them in the following language:

"Here, as elsewhere, [Utah must be excepted] it appears that a large part of our taxation is directly traceable to the existing vices in the community. The law should be strenuously enforced against the dens of infamy which are constantly filling our hospitals, courts, and prisons, and causing a large share, not only of the misery, but of the taxation of this community."

On Chinese prostitution they say:

"In this connection the Jury would call the attention of the Court, the Legislature and the Public to an immense evil—an evil unmitigated by any, even the smallest shade of alloy—that of the importation of Chinese females for the purpose of prostitution. It was proven before the Jury that those wretched creatures are slaves by law in China; that, as such, they are there purchased at from $25 to $75 each; imported here and sold to the brothels or go to the mines at from $300 to $800 each, according to quality; that they are most brutally treated, flogged, &c., by those having the custody of them; and that when they become diseased they are always sent to the hospital to be supported at the public expense till they either die or are able to return to the service of their owners. Thus, not only incidently but directly the community—every tax-paying citizen—is made to contribute to the support of a system not surpassed in abominable infamy by any thing the history of the world has ever developed.

"It is in proof before the Jury that from half to three-fourths of all the duty and expense of our police, criminal courts, prisons, and hospitals is directly traceable to brothels. Would we diminish taxation, or make this city a fit abode for the virtuous, or even preserve our boasted civilization, these prolific fountains of all corruptions must be dried up."

This is an official document, published in the public journals, and is intended, we presume, as a fair statement of the situation of affairs here. Can any thing be conceived of more horribly disgusting, than is here represented? Dens of infamy filling the hospitals, courts and prisons with inmates! Three-fourths of all the duty and expense of the police, criminal courts, prisons and hospitals directly traceable to brothels! Women bought and imported from far-off China to supply the market with prostitutes for the gratification of the devilish and beastly appetites of wretches in human form! Could the records of Sodom and Gomorrah, were they spread out before our gaze, present any thing more revolting than is here made public in the Grand Jury Report of the Christian (heaven save the mark) city of San Francisco? Yet there are men found in this community—this brothel and hospital taxed and supporting community—who will, with the most unblushing and brazen effrontery, hypocritically talk about being contaminated by contact with Utah! We can scarcely control our indignation and disgust when we read their cant, knowing as we do that their every breath is drawn in an atmosphere reeking with the most abandonded corruption.

Go to, gentlemen, and remove the offensive and heart-sickening spectacles and sounds that meet the eye and salute the ear of the stranger on every hand as he traverses your thoroughfares—utterly destroy the dens of infamy and schools of vice which are demoralizing your youth, and training your children in habits the most vicious and vices the most infamous—arrest the further progress of that disease, the virtue of which is surely creeping into the veins, spreading through the system, tainting the blood and destroying the constitutions of your people; and then, when you have done all this, you will have barely commenced to learn the lesson of virtue that Utah is teaching you and all the world. Until these results are brought about we would advise you, gentlemen, to confine your attention and the exercise of your abilities to the concerns that more immediately belong to you, and leave Utah to attend to her own matters, for the management of which she has ever been abundantly competent.

Ridiculed as the idea may be, it is nevertheless true, that instead of a stain or a deep disgrace being inflicted on the national character by the admission of Utah into the Union, the Confederacy is actually honored by the association. So far as peace, morality, virtue, industry, good order, immunity from vice and crime of every description, are concerned, Utah is indisputably and incomparably superior to any of her sisters; and it is a great act of condescension on her part to consent to be associated with such a State as California confessedly is. Nothing but her love for the Constitution, for the perpetuity of this Republic and Government, and for the freedom obtained by the blood and sufferings of the revolutionary fathers, would tempt her to such an act. Utah is assured that unless this nation repents and puts away the abomination and iniquity that are so rank in its midst, it must inevitably go down. If she should be admitted into the Union, the leaven of virtue and truth carefully preserved in her midst, may be diffused throughout the whole nation, and be the means of saving it from the impending destruction; but if unable to save the nation, she may, at least, preserve the form of government, Constitution, freedom and privileges handed down by the fathers of our country. This is inducement enough, and prospective reward sufficiently valuable to prompt her to ask for admittance.

We have scarcely alluded to the plan proposed for the destruction of the "peculiar institutions" of the Mormons, by this anonymous contributor of the Chronicle. It is scarcely worthy of an allusion. Let Utah be divided or sub-divided, and apportioned to her present neighbors as proposed, and what will be the result? Will her inhabitants long remain a small minority in the midst of the people to whom they may be allotted? Dividing the Territory of Utah will not make "Mormonism" less attractive; it will still gather its converts, and increase and swell, until instead of being confined to one Territory as at present, the "evils" which he now complains of would be extended into three or four. The "peculiar institutions" of the Mormons, while the people who believe and practice them do their duty, are indestructible, and not subject to the mutations by which other systems and institutions are affected. Do what you please, gentlemen editors and writers, there are in Utah the germs of a great, vigorous, and universal empire that must extend and prevail, and every effort to destroy or uproot them will only tend to scatter and make them more speedily accomplish their destiny. The knowledge of this comforts us.

Thirty-fourth Congress.-Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26, 1857.

SENATE.

Mr. Trumbull of Ill. presented a memorial from twenty-seven Senators and thirty-six members of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of Indiana, against Mr. Fitch's claims to a seat in the Senate.

Mr. Pratt, of Md., presented the credentials of Anthony Kennedy, elected Senator from Maryland for six years from the 4th of March next.

Mr. Rush, of Texas, from the Committee on the Post office, reported a bill to expedite the construction of a line or lines of magnetic telegraph from the Atlantic to San Francisco, authorizing the government to pay an annual rate of compensation not exceeding $30,000 to the party or parties that will undertake its construction.

The Senate took up the House Tariff bill and continued its discussion up till half past one o'clock, A. M., when Mr. Hunter's substitute was adopted by 33 against 12.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

During the proceedings of the House, Mr. Wright of Tennessee, approached the seat of Mr. Harris, of Maryland, for the purpose, it is said, of speaking to that gentleman, and while there Mr. Sherman was of opinion that Mr. Wright acted in a menacing manner towards him, in consequence of the sharp personal controversy between them which recently occurred in the House. Mr. Sherman indignantly threw a handful of wafers in Mr. Wright's face, when the latter made an attempt to strike him. Mr. Sherman then put his hand into his side pocket, to pull out, it is supposed, a weapon, but mutual friends immediately interposed. Messrs Watkins and Savage conducted Mr. Wright to his seat, amid confusion and intense excitement, which, however, soon subsided. Rumors of a duel are current.

Several appropriation bills passed.

The Speaker announced that the next business would be the consideration of the report in Mr. Gilbert's case, whereupon, on motion of Mr. Orr, the House adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 27.

The Senate passed twenty-five private bills, including one permitting Commander Hartstein and others to accept certain tokens of acknowledgement of humane service from the British government.

Mr. Adams presented the credentials of Hon. Jefferson Davis, elected United States Senator, from Mississippi, for six years from the 4th of March next.

The Post Office Appropriation bill was discussed.

In the evening session the Senate adopted the amendment authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for the conveyance of the entire letter mail from the Mississippi to San Francisco in four horse coaches, at a cost not exceeding $300,000 dollars per annum for semi-monthly; $450,000 for weekly, or $500,000, for semi-weekly service, the contractors to have the right of preemption to 320 acres of land at each point necessary for a station, which are not to be nearer than ten miles from each other. Among the other amendments adopted is one appropriating $23,000 for the land mail service in Washington Territory.

The bill was passed and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House resumed the consideration of the resolution for the expulsion of Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Gilbert spoke for some time in repudiation of the course pursued by the Committee, and the refusal of the House to accord him a trial at its bar, and terminated with handing in his written resignation as a member of the House.

The House was evidently taken by surprise at this announcement, and Mr. Gilbert immediately left his seat.

The resolutions of the committee in the case of Mr. Gilbert were tabled by 135 against 68.

Mr. O. B. Matteson sent in his resignation, as he had no reason to hope for the justice that had been withheld from Mr. G. The House continued its course with him, and voted him guilty by a vote of 145 against 17.

The case of Mr. Welch of Conn. was brought up, and he was acquitted of the charge preferred against him, by a vote of 119 against 42. Adjourned.

SENATE. Feb. 28.

The Senate passed the House bill prohibiting the importation of obscene prints, statuettes, &c.

The Deficiency Bill was taken up, and the Senate struck out the clause appropriating $185,000 for books for members of the House. Senators in the course of the debate upon it, said it was a stupendous fraud upon the country. The bill was passed.

Three House bills, establishing three additional land districts in Nebraska, and three in Kansas, were also passed. A resolution was adopted requesting the President to communicate to the Senators all the correspondence with Gov. Geary relative to affairs in Kansas.

In the evening session an amendment was proposed by the Committee on Finance to create a mission to Persia.

After considerable debate the amendment was adopted, by yeas 25, nays 21. Then commenced a lengthy talk about fat offices.

The Senate agreed to the Committee of Conference on the Tariff bill, and Mr. Hunter, Mr. Douglas and Mr. Seward were appointed to meet Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, Mr. Letcher and Mr. De Witt, of the House. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The report of the select Committee in the case of Mr. Edwards, of New York was taken up. The resolution to expel him from the House was read; upon which Mr. E. rose and spoke in a very humble and feeling manner about his position, regarding himself as the victim of the Committee, and gave in his resignation.

The resolutions in his case were tabled.

The resolution for the expulsion of Mr. Simonton was then taken up, to this was added the expulsion of Mr. Triplet, and both as reporters were expelled from the House.

The House then took up the bill to protect the people against corrupt and secret influences in matters of legislation, which was passed, then reconsidered and tabled.

The Tariff Bill, as amended by the Senate, was then taken up and rejected, by 63 against 106, and a committee of conference was asked of the Senate. Adjourned.

SENATE March 2.

Mr. Cass, of Mich., presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan on the subject of slavery in the Territories, instructing their Senators and requesting their representatives to resist the admission of any more slave States into the Union, and gave his reasons for his course in opposition to the requirements of the legislature of his State.

Mr. Stuart, of Mich. moved, and the Senate postponed the further consideration of the joint resolutions until the 10th of March.

Mr. Toombs, of Ga. from the Committee on Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution instructing them to inquire into the proper construction of the Congressional compensation act, reported their opinion that in all cases where a member is elected after the first day of the regular session, his compensation does not commence till the time of his election, and is to be computed at the rate prescribed by law until the end of his term. The report was agreed to.

Mr. Dodge presented the credentials of Mr. Doolittle, and Mr. Cass those of Mr. Bright, the former elected United States Senator from Wisconsin, and the latter from Indiana, from the fourth day of March.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution from the Committee on Judiciary, providing for taking testimony relative to the contested election of Mr. Fitch, Senator from Indiana. On motion of Mr. Weller the resolution was tabled.

Mr. Toombs submitted an amendment, to give Lieut. General Scott his arrears of pay and the claims which Secretary Davis refused to allow. Adopted by five majority.

The Senate made other amendments to the Army appropriation bill, and then passed it. The House Post Route bill was passed.

The report of the Committee of Conference was then submitted and passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House concurred in the proposition of the Senate to suspend the joint rules which prescribed that no bill that shall have passed one house shall be sent to the other for concurrence on either of the three last days of the session, and that no bill or resolution that shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation on the last day of the session.

A bill establishing many post routes in the States and Territories. Passed.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill to deposit the surplus revenue, reserving $2,000,000, with the States, to be refunded when the public exigencies require it. The bill was passed by a vote of 119 against 79.

The House passed the bill authorizing the Secretary of War to contract for the removal of obstructions in the Mississippi river, from Balize to the Des Moines rapids, at the rate of two hundred thousand dollars per annum for five years.

The report of the Committee of Conference on the Tariff bill was then taken up and adopted.

The Senate bill, granting lands to the Minnesota railroads, was taken up and amended, giving lands to Alabama for a similar purpose. Adjourned.

SENATE. March 3.

The Senate passed the Fortification bill; the bill for the construction of a penitentiary in Nebraska and one in Kansas, and the Navy Appropriation bill.

Mr. Weller of Cal. presented a communication from the Vice President elect, accepting the office, and promising to try and fulfil its duties.

The Civil Appropriation bill was debated and passed. One of the amendments to it appropriates $75,000 for the collection of agricultural statistics and the distribution of seeds from the Patent Office; and $3500 to enable the Commissioner to collect information respecting the consumption of cotton in all the countries of the world. Amendments were adopted granting $1,000,000 for the continuation of the Washington Aqueduct, and $500,000 for the construction of a new dome on the Capitol.

Night Session.—Mr. Stuart of Mich. from the Committee on Conference on the Deficiency bill, made a report recommending the Senate to recede from some of their amendments. The appropriation of $187,000 for books for distribution among the members was reduced to $183,000. The report was disagreed by 3 against 38, and another Committee on Conference asked.

Frequent violent and most convulsive attempts were made to obtain the floor. Fifty members or more were on their feet at one time crying out, "Mr. Speaker," and flourishing the particular bills or manuscripts they wished to have considered. Numerous motions to suspend the rules to consider specific bills were made, but few were successful.

Mr. Fish of New York, presented the credentials of Preston King as Senator from New York, for six years from the fourth of March.

The Ocean Mail Steamer Appropriation bill was then taken up, and after debate it was passed without amendment.

The Senate passed forty private bills, and then went into Executive session at four o'clock, A. M.

Upon coming out of executive session the Senate resumed public business. Through the agency of the third Committee of Conference were disposed of the remaining general appropriation bills, viz:—the Civil and Deficiency—the book feature of the latter being so amended as to allow certain books to new members, to be deposited in the public libraries of their respective districts.

Bills providing for the construction of military roads in Washington and Nebraska Territories.

WEDNESDAY, March 4, 11½ A. M.

The galleries were densely crowded with ladies waiting to see the preliminaries to the inauguration ceremonies.

Mr. Hale, of N. H.—Mr. President, is there any question before the Senate? Several Senators have suggested the propriety of a short executive session. (Great laughter.) Mr. Hale sat down without urging an answer to his inquiry.

The committee to wait on the President of the United States, reported that he had nothing further to communicate.

The President pro tem. declared, after a brief valedictory, the Senate adjourned.

EXTRA SESSION.

The oath was administered to Mr. Mason, by Mr. Pearce, and the former was chosen President pro tem.

Messrs. Bayard, Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Hamlin, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Polk, Rusk, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, and Wade were qualified.

The Vice-President elect soon after came in and the oath was administered to him, when he made a few appropriate remarks.

At one o'clock, ex-President Pierce, and the President elect entered and proceeded with the Senate, the Supreme Court, the foreign Ministers and others, to the east front of the Capitol, where the inauguration ceremonies were conducted.

The Senate afterwards returned to their chamber and adjourned till one o'clock tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House concurred in the Senate's amendment to the bill providing for a monthly, semi-monthly, weekly, or semi-weekly letter mail from Mississippi to San Francisco.

Mr. Florence, of Pa., from the Joint Committee appointed to wait on Messrs. Buchanan and Breckenridge, reported that they had performed their duty. The former said:—

You will please communicate to your respective houses of Congress, my acceptance of the trust confided to me; and while expressing this increased sense of obligation in regard to this manifestation of confidence on the part of my countrymen, my earnest endeavor shall be to show that their confidence has not been misplaced.

Mr. Breckenridge said—I accept with pleasure the office of Vice-President, of my election to which you have officially informed me. It shall be my most earnest endeavor to discharge its duties in such a manner as to meet the confidence which my countrymen have reposed in me.

A report from the Judiciary Committee, that the pay of members of the House, elected to fill vacancies, shall commence from the time that their predecessors ceased to be members, was adopted.

The House passed the Senate bill confirming to the several States the swamp and overflowed lands selected under the acts of 1849 and '50, and the bill more effectually to punish crimes on the high seas.

The Committee of Conference not yet being able to agree, the Senate returned the Miscellaneous bill to the House, with one hundred and three amendments.

At four o'clock, the House, by a majority, receded from its disagreement of the Senate's amendment to the Legislative, Judicial and Executive bill, appropriating the pay for the next Kansas Legislature. This ended all the dispute in relation to the matter.

CONCLUSION OF TUESDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

March 4.

The House passed the Senate joint resolution directing appropriate medals to be presented to the late Dr. Kane and his Arctic companions as a testimony of the high estimation in which Congress holds their merit and services.

Mr. Aiken, of S. C. offered a resolution that the thanks of the House are hereby tendered to Mr. Banks, for the able, impartial and dignified manner in which he has discharged his duties during the present session of Congress.

Here commenced great confusion, many objecting to the course of the Speaker, others approbating his course. At last the resolution was accepted, by yeas 119, nays 35.

The House then, amid deafening confusion, passed several compensation bills and resolutions.

Other business was attempted by fifty or more members, but the disorder was so great nothing was done.

The Speaker at near——o'clock resumed the chair, and at that hour delivered a brief but eloquent address in acknowledgement of the honor bestowed upon him, wishing all the members a safe return to their homes and firesides. The address was loudly applauded. Adjourned sine die.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, lè monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses! Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu!

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systêmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

IT IS BETTER TO REPRESENT OURSELVES, THAN TO BE REPRESENTED BY OTHERS.

VOL. III.--NO. 4. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1857. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

Poetry.

"The Last Time."

SELECTED.

Another year? another year!
Who dare depend on other years?
The judgment of this world is near,
And all its children faint for fears:
Famine, pestilence, and war,
Mixt with praises, prayers, and tears,
Civil strife and social jar,
Spurr'd by pen, and stirr'd by sword,
Herald Him who comes from far,
In Elijah's fiery car,
Our own returning Lord!

Look around—the nations quail!
All the elements of ill
Crowd like locusts on the gale,
And the dark horizon fill:
Woe to earth and all her seed!
Woe, they run to ruin still:—
He that runneth well may read
Texts of truth the times afford,
How, in earth's extremest need
Cometh, cometh soon, indeed,
Our own redeeming Lord!

Lo! the marvels passing strange
Every teeming hour brings,
Daily turns with sudden change
The kaleidoscope of things;
But the Ruler, just and wise,
Orders all, as King of kings,—
Hark! His thunders shake the skies,
Lo! His vials are outpour'd!
Earth in bitter travail lies,
And creation groans and cries
For our expected Lord!

N. B. Vice President John Tyler was 51, and Millard Fillmore 50 years of age at the period of succeeding to the Presidency by the death of the Presidents, Harrison and Taylor.

There have been twenty Presidential elections, of which five were re-elections of the President, and fifteen persons have held the office of President, including Hon. James Buchanan. Fourteen persons have been elected Vice-President, of whom three—Clinton, Gerry and King—died in office. Three of the persons who have been elected Vice-President have been elevated (by election) to the Presidency, viz.: John Adams, Jefferson and Van Buren.

WASHINGTON—1789.

The inauguration of George Washington, as the first President of the United States, took place in New York, in the City Hall, then called Federal Hall, situated where the Custom House now stands, on Thursday, the 30th of April, 1789. The votes were counted by Congress on the 6th of April, and the official announcement was made to Washington, at Mount Vernon, on the 14th of April, by Charles Thompson, the special messenger despatched for the purpose. The President arrived in New York on the 23d of April, and was received with acclamations and military honors. One week afterwards, the arrangements for the purpose being completed, the inauguration took place. To gratify the public curiosity, an open gallery adjoining the Senate chamber had been selected by Congress as the place in which the ceremony should take place. The oath was administered by Chancellor Livingston; after which the President returned to the Senate chamber, and delivered his inaugural address, which was at the same time his opening speech to both houses of Congress.

JOHN ADAMS—1797.

The inauguration of John Adams, as the second President of the United States, took place in Independence, or Congress Hall, Philadelphia, on the 4th of March, 1797, in the presence of a large concourse of people, among whom were the ex-President, Washington, Mr. Jefferson, the Vice-President elect, the heads of departments, many members of Congress, foreign ministers, and other distinguished persons. Mr. Adams, who was then in his sixty-second year, was dressed in a full suit of pearl-colored broadcloth, and wore his hair powdered, as was then the fashion. Before the oath of office was administered to the new President by the Chief Justice, he delivered his inaugural address. It was different from that of his predecessor, which had been addressed to Congress while in session, while this of Mr. Adams was a declaration of his sentiments, without being addressed in the form afterwards adopted by Jefferson: "Friends and fellow-citizens." The sentiments and style of Mr. Adams' inaugural produced a favorable impression upon the people.

JEFFERSON—1801.

The inaugural address of Mr. Jefferson was delivered on the 4th of March, 1801, in the new Capitol, at Washington, in the presence of the Vice-President, (Burr,) the Senators, many members of the House of Representatives, the foreign ministers, and a large concourse of citizens. The site of Washington City was then a comparitive wilderness, and difficult of approach, from the imperfect state of the roads. The oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Marshall, after the address was delivered. The Vice-President, Colonel Burr, took his seat in the Senate the same day. It was a day of gloom to the defeated federalists, and of course of joy to the successful republicans.

MADISON—1809.

The inauguration of James Madison took place in the Capitol, at Washington, on the 4th of March, 1809. The oath of office was administered to the President by Chief Justice Marshall, in the presence of ex-President Jefferson—who sat at the right hand of Madison—the members of the late cabinet, many members of Congress, foreign ministers, and a large concourse of citizens. The President was dressed in a plain suit of black, and delivered the address in a modest and dignified manner.

MONROE—1817.

The inauguration of James Monroe, on the 4th of March, 1817, was preceded by a procession from the residence of the President elect to Congress Hall, in Washington City, where the usual ceremonies were performed. The President and Vice-President elect were attended by a great number of citizens as an escort, and all entered the chamber of the Senate, which body was then in session; the Vice-President, Tompkins, took the chair, and the oath of office being administered to him, he delivered a short address. Ex-President Madison and the Judges of the Supreme Court were present. After the ceremony, the Senate adjourned, and the President with his attendants proceeded to an elevated portico temporarily erected for the occasion, where, in the presence of a large concourse of citizens and strangers, he delivered his inaugural address, after which the oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Marshall. The number of persons present was estimated at over five thousand. The day was mild and pleasant.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS—1825.

The inaugural address of Mr. Adams was delivered in the Capitol, on the 4th of March, 1825. The President elect, in a plain suit of black, ascended the steps of the Speaker's chair in the House of Representatives, and took his seat. He was attended by the ex-President, Monroe, by the Judges of the Supreme Court, the Vice-President, Calhoun, the Senators, and a number of members of the House. After silence was proclaimed, Mr. Adams rose and delivered his address, which was listened to with great attention and interest. After the address the President descended from the chair, and placing himself at the Judge's table, the oath of office was administered to him by Chief Justice Marshall, in the presence of the immense audience of citizens and strangers who had assembled in the Capitol.

JACKSON—1829.

On the 4th of March, 1829, the President elect was escorted from Gadsby's Hotel to the Capitol. There was a large assemblage of people at Washington to witness the ceremonies of the occasion. The President elect and other dignitaries first entered the Senate chamber, and remained until the Senate adjourned, about noon, when a procession was formed to the eastern portico of the Capitol, where, in the presence of the large assembly of spectators, General Jackson delivered his inaugural address. Having concluded it, the oath to support the Constitution was administered to him by Chief Justice Marshall. The day was serene and mild, and every way favorable to the wishes of those who had come from a distance to witness the inauguration. General Jackson did not call upon President Adams, and the latter was not present at the ceremony of the 4th at the Capitol.

VAN BUREN—1837.

There was nothing peculiarly remarkable in the inauguration of Mr. Van Buren on the 4th of March, 1837. General Jackson accompanied the President elect in a carriage to the Capitol, a procession having been formed, and the address was delivered from the eastern portico of the Capitol. The oath of office was administered, at the close, by Chief Justice Taney. The weather was remarkably pleasant, and, as usual, there was a large concourse of people present.

HARRISON—1841.

Washington City was more thronged with people at the inauguration of Harrison on the 4th of March, 1841, than on any former occasion. The procession was large, and General Harrison was mounted on a white charger. As on former occasions, the inaugural address was delivered from a platform on the east portico of the Capitol. Previous to delivering the closing sentences, the oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Taney, after which the President pronounced the concluding passages of the address.

POLK—1845.

The ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1845, at the inauguration of Mr. Polk, were performed in the midst of a heavy rain, which marred the enjoyments and defeated the expectations of many, and prevented much of the intended exhibition and display. The procession moved from the head quarters of the President elect, at Coleman's Hotel, to the Capitol. The Senate being in session, the oath was administered to Mr. Dallas, Vice-President elect, who delivered a brief address. The President elect, attended by ex-President Tyler and Senator Woodbury, entered the Senate chamber, when a procession was formed to a platform on the east front of the Capitol, from which President Polk delivered his inaugural address. Chief Justice Taney then administered the oath of office, after which the President, quitting the Capitol, drove rapidly, by an indirect route, to the President's house, where he received, during the afternoon, the congratulations of his fellow-citizens.

TAYLOR—1849.

On Monday, March 5, 1849, the inauguration of General Taylor, as President of the United States, took place at the Capitol. The multitude of people assembled on the occasion is supposed to have been much larger than was ever before collected in Washington. The weather, although the sky was clouded, was as pleasant as usual at this season of the year. The procession moved from Willard's Hotel to the Capitol, the President elect being accompanied in the carriage by the ex-President, Mr. Speaker Winthrop, and Mr. Seaton, the Mayor of Washington. The Senate being in session, Mr. Fillmore, the Vice-President, after the oath was administered to him by the President pro tem—Mr. Atchison—delivered an address and took his seat as President of the Senate. The President elect and attendants having entered the Senate chamber, the usual procession was formed to the east portico of the Capitol, where an extensive platform had been erected. At about one o'clock, General Taylor, in full view of at least twenty thousand people, from all parts of the Union, delivered his inaugural address. It was read in a remarkably distinct voice, and was enthusiastically responded to by the cheers of the people. As soon as the applause had subsided, the oath of office was administered to the President by Chief Justice Taney. The President then received congratulations from numerous persons present—Chief Justice Taney and ex-President Polk taking the lead. The President and the procession then retired down Pennsylvania avenue from the Capitol to the President's house, where General Taylor received with his accustomed courtesy, the congratulations of thousands of his fellow-citizens.

PIERCE—1853.

The crowd in Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of Franklin Pierce, fourteenth President of the United States, was very large. The day was cold, raw and unpleasant, and the President pronounced his address under a driving snow storm. The President, attended by the ex-President (Mr. Fillmore) left Willard's Hotel at noon, and drove down to the Capitol in the carriage presented to him by the citizens of Boston. He entered the Senate chamber at one o'clock; and at a quarter past one proceeded to the portico of the eastern front of the Capitol, where, in presence of several thousand people, the oath was administered to him by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court (Taney;) after which the President pronounced his inaugural. The address was declaimed instead of being read, as usual, and the President affirmed to the oath, raising his right hand after the New England fashion. After the address the President drove to the executive mansion.

It is probable that of the thirteen States where elections are yet to be held—Alabama, Georgia, Louisania, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia—will elect democratic members; that the Kentucky and Maryland delegations will be largely democratic, while Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Connecticut are likely to elect opposition members. With these facts and probabilities in view, the next House of Representatives will stand as follows:

Buchanan	129
Opposition	105
Probable Buchanan majority	26

With a democratic majority of twelve in the Senate and of twenty-six in the House, Buchanan will have a fair start in Congress.

The list of the new Cabinet given last week was imperfect. The following is Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet, as confirmed by the Senate on Friday:

THE NEW CABINET.

Secretary of State	Lewis Cass	Michigan.
Secretary of Treasury	Howell Cobb	Georgia.
Secretary of War	John Buchanan Floyd	Virginia.
Secretary of Navy	Isaac Toucey	Connecticut.
Secretary of Interior	Jacob Thompson	Mississippi.
Attorney General	Judge Black	Pennsylvania.
Postmaster General	Aaron Venable Brown	Tennessee.

Marine Losses for the year 1856.

We copy from the Buffalo Republic the report of Capt. D. B. Dobbins, to the Board of Underwriters, showing the disasters on the lakes during the past year.

The total loss on steam and sail vessels,

1856	$3,038,874
Do. in 1855	2,797,839
Increase	$241,035
Losses in 1854	$2,187,815
Do. in 1853	854,350
Do. in 1852	694,015
Do. in 1851	730,515
Do. in 1850	544,410

The Republic says:

This shows a steady and progressive increase in the number of disasters and amount of losses from year to year, notwithstanding the improvements in navigation and saving apparatus, which is frightful to contemplate.

The total loss by steam during the past season on hulls and cargoes, was

	$1,378,100
Do. by sail	1,660,774
	$3,038,874

Of this number 29 steam vessels and 77 sail vessels are put down as total losses, and have probably gone out of existence.

The loss of life in 1856 was	407
Do. in 1855	118
Increase	289

Capt. Dobbins informs us that the increased facilities for saving wrecked property, has lessened the actual amount on loss on property in distress at least twenty-five per cent., during the past severe season; as the proportion of total losses to the whole number of disasters will show when compared with 1855.

The loss of life has increased from 119 in 1854, and 118 in 1855, to 407 in 1856, and calls loudly for some more efficient means of saving life than the one now in use.

Capt. Dobbins also furnishes us from his marine register, an account of the tonage now in commission on the lakes. The total number of sail and steam vessels is 1256; tonnage, 339,-736, valued at $12,944,360.

Tribute to Dr. Kane.

Dr. Osgood's Remarks Before the Historical Society.

At the March meeting of the New York Historical Society, Rev. Samuel Osgood, D. D., in presenting his resolutions on the death of Dr. Elisha Kent Kane, which we have heretofore published, spoke substantially thus:

"I closed my report this evening, Mr. President, with a reference to Dr. Kane's decease, and left to some other gentleman the office of framing appropriate resolutions. But as this office has just been assigned to me from a quarter from which a courteous request has the force of a command, I have tried to perform the duty, and have hastily drawn up the resolves that have just been read.

"In saying a brief word upon Dr. Kane's worth, let me declare my conviction that the most precious characteristic of his services is in the noble manhood which seemed to animate them from beginning to end. He has done some things that are called great by the usual standard of heroic achievement. But the man himself was greater than anything that he did. No book of narrative of late years has been read with a popular interest at all approaching that which has attached to Kane's Arctic Journal, which has fitly been called the Ice-Epic of our literature. But the fascination of the volume is far less in the polar horrors recounted than in the calm, persevering and commanding mind that led and sustained the expedition. The leader was in himself the host, and if he had one moment wavered, not one of his crew would have kept up hope and strength enough to continue the advance and at least secure the retreat. I must confess that his peculiar constancy of purpose under such disheartening circumstances is one of the most significant facts in the annals of human character, and might be called a psychological wonder, were it not worthy of being set down among the reasonable fruits of a manly will, steadied and exalted by a Christian fidelity. He is one of the many proofs that the spiritual man, instead of being the opposite of the practical man, is rather his complete interpretation, and that nothing is so practical as a spirit fixed upon a true purpose of genuine faith, and determined to pursue it to the end for man's welfare and in God's grace. The true prayer speeds, instead of clogging the brave work, and the navigator's Ice-Epic is all the braver as well as purer for the devout trust that pervades it from beginning to end, and makes it at once like a psalm of thanksgiving and an ode of more than martial daring. In spite of all the dangers of his passage and his blockade among crashing icebergs, or shut in by ice fields as dreary in their repose, as fearful in their motion; among wild beasts as ravenous as the biting teeth of the wind, and among savages more wily, yet not always more kindly; among companions, the noblest of whom, by their sufferings, tried his feelings more painfully than did the weakest of them by their repinings day after day; and not only this, but when day ceases to follow day, and the unbroken night of an Arctic winter spread over the ice-bound vessel its chill and its gloom, the noble leader kept his faith and humanity, and proved it in his daily work and daily prayer.

"Mr. President, our friend, Mr. Winthrop, in behalf of our Art Committee, has just read a report, presenting our thanks to the generous donor of a colossal bust of Columbus for our future gallery of art. Is not that great discoverer's name in keeping with this commemoration? Is not Kane our Arctic Columbus, if not in his discovery of a new world, of waters at the Arctic Pole? Surely, in the indomitable instinct that moved him to the adventurous voyage, and in the constancy that nerved him to the end. May we not say, without exaggeration, that he was, in a manner, our Arctic Columbus and Xenophon—our Columbus in the daring of his advance—our Xenophon in the wisdom and strength of his retreat—our Xenophon, too, in the clear and modest narrative in which he has perpetuated the perils and the achievements of the way, the perils from nature and from men, and the fortitude by which they were overcome.

"Thus, Mr. President, I pay my poor tribute to a brave man's memory, and am grateful that history will take into her solemn keeping the name of this good exemplar of our best American manhood. His remains are now on the ocean, on their way to their last resting place. Fitting was it, that in a strange land his coffin was draped with the flag of our country, whose stars shone more brightly in the eyes of the foreign throng who followed the bier to the ship, because of the lustre of the life that lately animated that mouldering dust. Let us have some memorial of him for our walls, that shall speak to future generations, and let the marble over his grave become a place of pilgrimage to the lovers of manly heroism, consecrated by divine faith. Why not carve upon this memorial the laurel intertwined with the olive branch, alike as a remembrance of him who has gone, and as a sign of the good time coming, when the courage that has been given to march to the battle-field shall be given to benign humanity, and the true hero shall not shame the Kingdom of the Prince of Peace."

A "Cruel Indiscretion" in Canada.

The Toronto Weekly Message says that the Rev. T. Creen, Rector of St. Mark's, in Niagara, C. W., was some weeks since suspended for life, for adultery with one of his parishioners. The sentence of his Bishop, Strachan, of Toronto, was that he should be suspended, but should keep his title of Rector till January following, and then retire from the Episcopacy on a life pension of $400 a year! The Rector's assistant, Rev. Mr. Reynolds, refused to be present at Mr. Creen's service of the communion, and gave as a reason for it, the adulterous and drunken life of the Rector. The scandal thus became public. Bishop Strachan had to take notice of it—a trial was ordered—Creen was ungowned, yet pensioned, while poor Reynolds was adjudged guilty of a "cruel indiscretion," as the Bishop phrases it, and has been indefinitely suspended from clerical duty!—[New York Times.

[A short time ago we noticed a Canadian editor bragging about the purity of the pulpit up north! Was the above and such-like the kind of purity he meant?—Ed.]

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1857.

An Editor Too Fast.

A considerable portion of the press is ever jubilant when anything unpleasent or disastrous occurs to the Mormons. We doubt much if many editors forgot to tell their readers of crickets, grasshoppers and famine in Utah, and we doubt as much if ever one expression of sympathy for the Utonians was ever written by these same regulators of the public mind—if ever any did so we never saw it. Not a few rejoiced hugely over the prospect of seeing the Utonians scattered to the four winds and Mormondom known no more among the nations; but, unfortunately for the vain predictions of these Scribes and Pharisees, Mormonism is as healthy and strong as ever, and seems to have enlarged and strengthened considerably over the fasting of its disciples. Scarcely calm from their exertions to kill the Mormons right off with their fearful predictions, about entire consummation by grasshoppers and crickets, some of our editorial friends have got another sweet morcel to roll under their tongue—the disastery that befell the late portion of last year's emigration to Utah. Following in the wake of that huge slanderer—N. Y. Tribune—the small fry were amazingly pleased and good humoured in the exercise of their prophetic powers—the poor emigrants were all to perish, nothing short of all perishing on the plains could satisfy their tobacco, rum and brandy inspiration; the November mail carrier had seen the Salt Lake assistance turning back before the storm, and perish must inevitably the Mormon emigration—men, women, children, cows, hand-carts, and wagons were all to be buried deep in the impassable mountain snows. So we have read and from the joyful feeling that seemed to glow in every phrase it was very clear that the "wish was father to the thought." Wish it—of course they did! What! editors to wish that men, women and helpless children should perish because they hate their religion! of course they did. When these same gentlemen have before often expressed a wish to see the Mormons extirpated root and branch, nothing could please them better than see the desirable work accomplished by either snow, frost, grasshoppers or crickets. In fact they could desire nothing better. Plagues or the fierce elements might extirpate and neither cost dollars nor cause risk of their pious lives, besides it would be very convenient to say it was the visitation of the Most High, and an unanswerable argument against the pretentions and claims of Mormonism to Divinity!! Had the hand-cart emigrants all perished on the plains what a glorious argument it would have been for some folks against the Mormons gathering from the nations! How some of our pious, self-righteous, psalm-singing long faced gentry would have changed from lamentations over Mormon progress to rejoicing over Mormon annihilation; but once more they are doomed to eat their leek in silence.

We have heard all sorts of things against the Mormons—and called arguments to—, but let them pass for the present as we only took up our pen, though we have written a lengthy preface, to urge a cotemporary to be less sparing with the truth, not to be so niggardly with it, lest a bad habit be too early and too firmly contracted—we address now the Weekly Democratic Press of Chicago. In that paper of the 7th instant there is the announcement that "the last hand-cart train had arrived at the Valley of the Great Salt Lake" —annexed to which are two extracts from letters published in THE MORMON on the subject, without any accompanying editorial. We were a little surprised to see that simple approach at fairness, and remarked: "well, that is honorable; after all the rejoicing over the certain total loss of the Mormon emigrants, here is an editor who publishes their arrival." Being considered to have a very poor opinion of the press in general, and quietly and soberly it is just so, we resolved to note this circumstance and give our Chicago cotemporary credit for one straight-forward, honorable act, which, while it would, we thought, be doing him justice, it would at the same time show that, now and again, an honorable editor might be met with, and that, insignificant as might be the subject on which his honor shown, we would hasten to record it. But after all this cogitation and our heart warming with the feeling that all was not dark and dreary in the world of Gentilism our eyes, unfortunately for our good feeling, caught a glimpse of the following in another column of the same paper:

"The Utah correspondence of the New York Tribune of the 24th, under date, Dec. 4, contains the following intelligence regarding the Hand-cart trains. It will be seen that the intelligence that they had arrived "all right"—published in the N. Y. Mormon—is contradicted:"

"Evil communications corrupt good manners." What a pity the Chicago editor was a reader of the Slanderer. His dark pictures of Utah and the unfortunate emigrants made him forget what he had himself read in The Mormon. Our readers know well that we never once said that the late hand-cart companies had arrived "all right," neither did we say anything approaching it. The whole of our article referred to bears evidence that we were profoundly impressed with a contrary feeling; but, at the same time we did rejoice that, in consideration of the unusual and general severity of the weather out West, our emigrants had arrived as well as they were. The very extracts published by the Chicago Democratic Press, from THE MORMON, spoke not only of their arrival but of their sufferings on the way, and the well timed assistance sent out from Great Salt Lake City.

Editors who indulge their vicious passions in slandering and mis-representing others, should have retentive memories, but unfortunately for them that is precisely with what they seem less endowed than other mortals. Were we to philosophize on this editorial peculiarity we probably might arrive at the conclusion that with them as with drunkards and other abandoned profligates the long indulgence in loose habits had destroyed the original powers and qualities of their nature. In conclusion, we would invite the editor out West to be a little more careful in future before making such an unfounded charge and if he wants to thoroughly reform, avoid the society of the Slanderer.

The New Western Settlements.

WE sometime ago called the attention of the Saints to the new settlements that were about to be established, this season, on the route of our emigration. As the season is fast approaching, we feel again to lay it before the brethren. We haye just received the following communication from President Erastus Snow on this subject:

"We are making a strong move in this region for establishing settlements in Nebraska, the ensuing season, along the line of our emigrant travel.

"We appeal for help to the hardy and enterprising Saints in the East to join us in this desirable undertaking, which is urged upon me again in my last letter from President Young.

"Those who wish to share in the honors and blessings of this enterprise are requested to be here by the middle of April, so as to ascend the Missouri, and be ready with teams, tools and seeds, to leave Florence by the first day of May.

"Any persons who wish teams and outfits provided for them at Florence, should, without delay, send me, by mail, drafts or certificates of deposit, for the cash necessary for that purpose, and the Presiding Elders of Conferences and Branches should encourage and assist, by their counsel and experience, in forwarding this movement."

We wish all presiding officers in the New York and Philadelphia Conferences, as well as in Boston and the scattered Branches throughout the East, to pay attention to this matter, and use their influence in forwarding this enterprise. It is a matter in which we are all interested. By establishing these outposts on the route we shall very much facilitate the travel to the mountains, by shortening the distance of a dreary desert across the plains. We shall furnish stopping places for the Saints; we shall materially assist the transmission of the mails, and make travel both for merchants and missionaries much more pleasant; and whilst we furnish resting places for the weary and food for the hungry, we shall not only be obeying counsel and doing good to our brethren, but we shall, at the same time, be doing good for ourselves and families. Let all, then, who can, go, and help to make "the wilderness and the solitary place glad, and the desert to blossom as the rose."

The address of Bro. Snow is: Erastus Snow, box 333, Post Office, St. Louis, Mo.

Emigration.

WE stated some time ago that there would be no Perpetual Fund Emigration this year. We have had a number of applications for teams and outfit for persons desirous to cross the plains with wagons this year. All the Saints in this region of country, who wish to emigrate this season, should immediately confer with us on the subject, as it is necessary that preparations should be made forthwith for the purchase of cattle, which will probably have to be driven 300 miles or upwards to the place of outfit. And it is the positive instructions of President Young that no train must be allowed to start after the first of July, and this will assuredly be carried out; so we advise all who purpose going, to "hurry up the cakes."

Judge Appleby.

THE Judge left here this morning (Thursday) to visit the Saints on Long Island. He expects to return and visit Washington next week on business connected with the Government, if his health permit. For some two or three weeks past his health has been quite impaired by reason of much speaking and a succession of colds settled upon his lungs. His health is, we are proud to say, improving at present.

Social Party.

THE Monday evening following the New York Conference there will be a social party in the Broome Street Hall. Doors open at 4 o'clock, P. M.; Chair to be taken at 5 o'clock precisely. Tickets of admission 25 cents each, children under 12 years half price, to be had of Elder Silver at the hall, the Presidents of districts at their district meetings, and Elder Dulin, at the office of THE MORMON.

Departure of Elders Little and Young.

WE have had a short but very pleasant visit from Elders James A. Little and Wm. G. Young. They left on Tuesday morning for Iowa City. Elder Little has been for some time counsellor to President Orson Pratt in England, and is now sent out by him to make the necessary arrangements for the English emigration crossing the plains. Elder Young has been pastor of several conferences in Britain, and has been sent out as Elder Little's assistant. Through the appointment of such good, dilligent and efficient business men we have great confidence, that, with the blessing of the Most High and the free and full co-operation of their brethren, they will be able to get an early start for that emigration over which they have charge. We wish them every success in the discharge of their duties, and expect brethren on whom they may call to render them every assistance and co-operation.

Arrival.

TRUMAN O. ANGELL, Esq., Architect of the Public Works in Great Salt Lake City, arrived here on Wednesday morning from Boston. Bro. Angell passed through here from Utah last summer, on his way to Europe, whither he went on a mission in rather poor health. We are happy to be able to say that he returns in buoyant spirits, and strong and healthy in body. He left the same afternoon for St. Louis, and hopes to be able to start for Utah by the April mail.

Conference at Philadelphia.

THE Saints composing the Philadelphia Conference, will meet in the capacity of a Conference, the last Sunday in March, at Washington Hall, corner of Eighth and Spring Garden streets, Philadelphia.

The representatives of the branches of that Conference will meet with President Angus M. Cannon the evening preceding the Conference.

Presidents Pratt, Smith and Snow.

BY recent correspondence from St. Louis, Mo., we learn that Presidents P. P. Pratt, Geo. A. Smith, and Erastus Snow, are presently in that city, in excellent health and spirits. President Smith has lately visited a branch of the church in Virginia, established many years ago by President J. M. Grant. We trust that our honorable colleague's visit was alike profitable to him and them.

The Inauguration.

GOING to press early in the week prevented us from giving in our last issue a regular and detailed account of the doings at Washington last Wednesday; we, however, got the most important item—Mr. Buchanan's address, which, by the by, has ruffled the temper and stirred up the nigger-phobia in Uncle Tom's professed friends, while it has been received by folks in general as worthy of the man, the the occasion and the constitution he has sworn to protect and obey. Sensible folks believe in encouraging men in authority by according to them their best confidence in the outstart of their career that they may strive to deserve its continuance; but our city Slanderer takes another course and is in full blast against the new president and members of his cabinet. He would burst if he could'nt grumble—but he and his clique should for the present be excused, they feel well whipped.

From Mr. Buchanan's departure at Wheatland till his arrival at Washington he was well received where ever the stoppage of the cars permitted the people to pay their respects to him; except at Baltimore, where, according to the Tribune rowdyism was rampant. A public dinner was tendered to him, but on account of the violence of the rowdies who had gone as far as to even stone his carriage and the friends around him, several of whom were considerably injured, the president elect was advised to remain in private and depart the same. Save this outrageous affair his journey was a perfect ovation, and a demonstration of the best of feeling to the new chief magistrate.

The following account of the procession that accompanied the President and Vice President elect from their hotel to the senate we copy from the Herald.

THE INAUGURATORY CEREMONIES.

During the morning the streets were crowded and musical with military bands, as the various military bodies and societies moved forward to take their place in the line of the procession, which moved from the parade ground down the avenue to the President's Hotel, the National, at about twelve o'clock. As the head reached the hotel, the column halted—the line faced inward—the military presented arms—the drums rolled out a grand salute, and soon after the President and Vice President elect emerged from the hotel, and took seats in their carriage, amid the cheers of a crowd which filled the broad avenue as far as the eye could reach on either side.

The procession then at noon moved to the Capitol in the following order:

Aids. Wm. Selden, Chief Marshal. Aids.

Governors and ex-Governors of States and Territories, and Members of the Legislatures of same.
Officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Militia.
Officers and Soldiers of the Revolution, of the War of 1812, and of subsequent periods.
The Corporate Authorities of Washington and Georgetown.
Other Political and Military Associations from the District and other parts.
All organized Civil Societies.
Professors, Schoolmasters and Students within the District of Columbia.
Citizens of the District and of States and Territories.

The procession had been planned with admirable taste, and was conducted in perfect order. The great attraction, next to the President himself, was the Liberty Car, surmounted by a high pedestal upon which stood the Goddess of Liberty, magnificently attired, and supported by a liberty pole, fifty feet high, and drawn by six horses.

A full-rigged ship, made by the mechanics at the Washington Navy Yard, drawn by horses, was an object of curious admiration. As the pageant moved along the sailors were engaged in the rigging and on deck, in their various duties, as if at sea.

Howard Engine Company No. 34, of New York, with engine and ninety men, appeared in the procession, and attracted universal admiration.

The Marshals rode to and fro, sporting their gay sashes, each one, doubtless, believing himself certain of an executive appointment.

Arrived at the entrance to the Capitol, the column halted—the military faced inward, presenting arms to the President as the carriage passed through the lines, the President standing and acknowledging the salute and the cheers of the multitude. Here the President elect was received by Senators Pearce, Bigler and Foot—the committee appointed for the purpose—and conducted to the Senate chamber, where he arrived at about 1 o'clock, P. M.

On reaching the front of the portico, the President elect took the seat provided for him on the front of the platform.

The ex-President and the Committee of Arrangements occupied a position in the rear of the President elect.

Next in the rear of these, the Chief Justice and the associate Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Vice President, Secretary and members of the Senate were seated.

The Diplomatic Corps occupied the seats next in the rear of the Supreme Court; heads of Departments, Governors and ex Governor of States and Territories, and ex-members of the Senate, ex-members and members elect of the House of Representatives, in the rear of the members of the Senate.

The scene upon the portico was a most brilliant one, and the Capitol grounds were crowded with spectators. Although the crowd was twenty-five if not fifty per cent greater than on any similar occasion, everything passed off without any marked incidents. The diplomatic corps were out in full court costume, although few of them could understand or appreciate the sublimity of the scene they witnessed.

At this stage of the proceedings the President proceeded to deliver his inaugural address which we have already published.

At the conclusion of the delivery of the inaugural address, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court (Taney) administered the oath of office to the President, as follows:—

I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.

It was rumored that several members of the new Cabinet object to some of the sentiments of the Inaugural, but the report could not be traced to a reliable source. Gen. Cass was with Mr. Buchanan till a late hour on Tuesday night, and he had heard of no dissatisfaction.

After the ceremonies at the Capitol had been concluded the procession was again formed, and the President was conducted to the Executive Mansion, accompanied by the ex-President. The latter left Mr. Buchanan at the door, which he entered, taking full possession of the White House.

The Temple.

ELDER ANGELL brought with him from England a number of engravings of the Temple now in course of erection in Great Salt Lake City, and which are now for sale at this office at $1. We shall not attempt to describe this magnificent building as in our next issue we shall publish an article from the pen of Elder Angell, who enters into detail; we cannot, however, withhold our expression of admiration. The building represented to our eyes by the pencil of the architect, and the cunning of the engraver will be second to no religious edifice on this continent, and while it shall be as the apple of the eye for sacredness in the hearts of God's people, it will be a monument that will reflect the highest credit upon its designer, its achitect and the sinewy arms that have made it the wonder of the world.

General Summary.

WE have but little space for a summary this week and must be brief. The principal attraction in England is the debates in the Houses of Parliament. The opposition to Palmerston's government clamor for information about Persia and China. It is said that the government has received a dispatch announcing the destruction of Canton. Russia has resumed the war against the Circassians and is believed to have treated with Persia against the British. The Emperor Alexander of Russia purposes visiting his mother at Nice, Sardinia, and taking a trip to Paris before he returns to St. Petersburg. Ex-Queen Christina of Spain proposes to make Rome her permanent residence, and is purchasing palaces in that city for her sons. A capital place for the old vixen—the Spaniards can get along admirable without her. W. H. Russell, the London Times Crimean correspondent, has entered into an engagement with Mr. Beale, of London, to deliver three lectures a week, on the Crimea, till April, 1858, for a sum which rumor calls £10,000.

A dreadful explosion took place on the 19th ult., at the Land Hill Colliery, near Wombwell, on the South Yorkshire Railway. One hundred and sixty-six persons were in the pit at the time. Sixteen were drawn up alive, and the others remained for certain death, the interior of the pit having taken fire.

Lord Napier, the new British Ambassador to Washington, arrived here by the Persia last Friday. During his stay here, he seems to have made a favorable impression on his republican cousins who visited him at his hotel—he is, they say, a first-rate fellow—a real democratic lord—little starch about him, and buckrum scarce.

News from Utah and the Plains.

ST. LOUIS, March 10, 1857.

Advices from Independence, of the 3d inst., say that the Salt Lake mail had just arrived, having been three months on the way. The trip was the coldest and most perilous ever made across the Plains. Many Indians on the route were either frozen or starved to death, and others had eaten their own children.

FOR THE MORMON.

Sad Story of Presbyterianism.

The Mother and Children.

DURING my late missions to California, I became acquainted with the following train of lamentable and heart-rending circumstances, growing out of the spirit of intolerence, which alas! still characterizes some of the more popular sects of the age.

A certain family had emigrated from the South a few years since, and were then residing in San Francisco; consisting of a man, his wife and three children, and a young man who was a brother of the wife and a boarder in the family.

The whole were a branch of an old and somewhat noted Presbyterian stock, which still resided in the vicinity of New Orleans.

The lady was an accomplished and educated person, given to reading and intellectual pursuits; and was withal, a woman of sound judgment, and of an independent turn of mind.

As is generally the case with such minds, this lady had only to investigate Mormonism in order to become most firmly convinced of its truths.

She therefore wished to embrace them. On learning these facts, the husband and brother manifested a most violent and tyrannical opposition. They raged, foamed, cursed, railed, stormed and called hard names, &c., but all to no purpose. The lady was still of the same mind, and wished to obey the Gospel.

The husband finally purchased a large sword cane with which he entered the parlor one day; and, turning pale with rage, he unsheathed the same in the presence of his wife, and menacing her and brandishing the naked steel over her head, swore with an awful oath, that that weapon had been purchased expressly for her, and the minister who dare baptize her, and should penetrate both their vitals the day she should be baptized.

Her brother, in turn, brandished the same weapon over her in the same angry manner, with the same threats.

These, and many other threats, railings and abuses repeated from time to time, by both husband and brother, served to deter the lady's baptism for some two years—the Elders there making it a point not to baptize a woman without her husband's consent.

After many long, painful and prayerful struggles, she at length obtained the written consent of her husband and was baptized, and duly confirmed as a member of the Church of the Saints. She still remained a faithful and obedient wife and mother. She served her husband, looked after his interests, kept his house, continued to board her brother, and trained her children in the ways of obedience, morality and truth. She took great pains in their education, and taught them to believe in Jesus Christ, to read the Bible, and to sing and pray.

Her husband was still harsh and tyrannical in the highest degree, and her brother also. Her life was often threatened, and she was utterly forbidden to mention any point in her religion in presence of her husband, or to intrude any sentence on his notice from any of the books of the Church. She had not even the privilege of singing a single line of her hymn book in his hearing. Having lived in this unnatural bondage for a few years, and having borne with meekness and submission every railing, insult and abuse which a tyrant could heap upon her, she finally ventured, on one quiet Sunday evening, to sing in his presence two lines of one of her favorite hymns. [See Saints hymn book, page 201.]

"Behold the great Redeemer comes
To bring his ransomed people home!"

Her husband on hearing this, flew into a violent rage—snatched the book out of her hand, tore it up, and threw it in the fire. He then laid violent hands on her, and forced her into the street and locked the door on her. It was a dark evening, and in one of the back dark streets of San Francisco where an unprotected female would hardly be considered safe for a moment. She, however, entered a neighboring house, and immediately sent a message to Dr. ——, an old family physician, who was the mutual friend of both herself and husband. She threw herself upon his protection, and he conducted her to a respectable hotel, where she took lodgings and board at the husband's expense. Next day she called on the city recorder and made oath of the assault and battery and other outrages of her husband, demanding his arrest, and that she might be secured in her life and peace in the future. But through the influence of Dr. —— and other parties in high places, the matter was finally dropped, and the parties seemed reconciled so far, that she returned to her house, and again took charge of her children, and of her husband's housekeeping.

For a few weeks, all seemed to go on as usual. The husband and brother went to their daily business—returned at the proper hours, found their meals in order, and the usual economy, industry and taste which she had ever displayed in trying to render home agreeable.

On a certain day—breakfast being over and the husband and brother gone to business at an early hour, as usual, she assembled her children, as her manner was, for family devotion. These consisted of two boys, between eight and ten years of age, and a girl of seven. The mother and children mingled their glad voices in the morning hymn, and bowed the knee together in solemn prayer—when, rising from their knees, the children gave their dear mother the usual parting kiss, and cheerfully hasted away to the city school.

O! how little did that tender mother and those innocent babes then realize the awful trial which immediately awaited them; or, that two oceans and a continent would separate them ere they should meet again.

Talk not of Rome, of Nero, of the dark ages, or of the Spanish Inquisition. All these combined could scarce form a parallel worthy to compare with the heartless, unfeeling, inhuman, savage and worse than fiendish tyranny of the nineteenth century. And all this enacted by Protestants in a land of freedom! Nay rather by the nearest kindred, and on a helpless woman and children!

Evening came—the husband and brother returned from the business of the day—but no children came to gladden the heart of a fond mother! Where are our children? exclaimed the anxious mother in alarm.

The brutish husband and unfeeling brother answered, with a fiendish grin, or a taunt of triumph—They are on the bosom of the Pacific—you will never see them again—they will be brought up Presbyterians—not Mormons!

The only answer to this was a wild shriek and a sudden fall—the mother had fainted!

Her heart, as it were, had died within her. She remained through that dreadful night, in alternate spasms, fainting fits—occasionally awaking to a realizing sense of her desolation: "Rachel weeping for her children, and could not be comforted, because they were not."

She would sometimes so far awake from her swooning fits as to rave, and wander, and call loudly for her little ones by name, and then she would burst into tears—groan and lament, and finally, again drop away and become insensible.

The brutal husband and brother stood over her through the entire night, somewhat troubled and alarmed, but dare not call a physician or any assistance, lest their fiendish cruelty should be detected in all its horrors.

In the morning, being compelled to go to business at an early hour, they left her alone in the house, locking her in as a prisoner, in solitude and helplessness.

She, however, sufficiently recovered in the course of the morning, to open a window and raise the alarm. The neighbors soon learned the true circumstances and sympathized deeply in her bereavement.

Some of the merchants best acquainted with the family, offered to raise a subscription and send her to her children, it being soon ascertained that they had been sent to her parents in New Orleans.

Public odium soon wrought upon the obdurate husband and brother that change which human sympathy had failed to accomplish. They saw that the matter must be ameliorated, and hushed up as far as possible by compromise.

They had been plotting for weeks, and, by the assistance of other bigots of their sect, had prepared trunks of clothing for the children, and had procured through tickets for them on the transit route between the Pacific and Atlantic.

All things being in readiness, they had watched an opportunity to snatch them from school, and thurst them on board of a steamer, without so much as a farewell look or word from their mother, and had committed them to the care of strangers to pass two oceans and a continent, with no kindred or acquaintance to love or care for them.

This done, the inhuman bigots had resisted all the eloquent and heart-rending appeals of a mother, and nothing but the fear of disgrace, or the vengeance of an excited and indignant populace constrained them to compromise, and hush up any further excitement, by agreeing to send the mother to the children.

She was finally soothed and comforted with the hope of following them in two weeks, on the next steamer: she went quietly and diligently to work to prepare for the journey.

Her house was now desolate and lonely beyond endurance. She, therefore, by consent of her husband, spent the time with some friends in the country, till near the time of her embarkation.

But alas! her trials had but just begun. She had a prosperous passage to New Orleans, found her parents, and with them her two youngest children—but alas! the other she was never permitted to see. He is concealed from her in some distant part of the Country.

She found her bigoted and hard-hearted Presbyterian parents and brothers and sisters in the same plot. Her children were held by them in bondage, under a strict watch as prisoners. She must not associate with them, even in her own father's house, except in presence of others—she must not sleep in the same room, nor even to retire to a private room, to bow the knee with them at the hour of prayer, as she had always been in the habit of doing. In short, she was in bondage intolerable, and was daily abused, insulted, mocked, ridiculed and railed at in every possible manner. She endured these things for months, and finding herself sinking under the accumulated wrongs and oppressions of those who should have been her friends; as well as under the effects of the pestilential climate of the advancing summer of New Orleans; she, by the consent of her children, left them for a season for the north, promising to return to them in due time.

She, at length, after incredible hardships and toils, made her way to Great Salt Lake City, where she arrived in safety in the autumn of 1855. She had, by this long journey, somewhat recovered her health, and, true to the instincts of a mother, she immediately commenced, and constantly persevered in a most rigid course of economy and industry, in order to redeem her pledge to her children.

She taught school in that city almost constantly for one year. She then made her way over the dreary plains, for some fifteen hundred miles to the frontiers of the States, and thence down the rivers to the children.

The following account which appeared in the New Orleans Bulletin, some time near the close of the past year, may possibly refer to her.

If so, making due allowance for its numerous falsehoods and misrepresentations, it opens another chapter in her somewhat romantic and heroic life.

Had the lady in question had a kind and dutiful husband, instead of an unfeeling tyrant, religious differences would not have separated the family to this day; but, on the contrary, the father, mother and children might still have been living in San Francisco in peace.

It was not Mormonism, but Presbyterianism that broke up the family.

A FRIEND OF THE OPPRESSED.

Cincinnati, O., Feb. 20, 1857.

Here is the Bulletin's account:

From the New Orleans Bulletin.

Sad Story of Mormonism.—The Mother and Children.

WE became acquainted a few days since with a short history of certain transactions, partly in this city, and partly out of it, which afford a very fair illustration of the practical effect of that beautiful system of imposture which is shedding its lights and shadows upon the tops of the western mountains. Possibly our readers may be interested in it—especially if they should ever in the mutations of the future, be thrown within the valley where the Upas sheds its poison and reveals the ghastly carcasses which strew the ground, they may perhaps be enabled to turn it to a practical use. With this object in view, we will briefly state the circumstances to to which we allude, suppressing names for the reason that some of those affected, and most grievously affected, by those circumstances, are of our own citizens, and to whom we would tender our profoundest sympathies.

A few years since, a gentleman, his wife, and two infant children, like thousands of others, left this city for the golden shores of the Pacific, the husband and wife, dreaming doubtless that in the land of the shining ore they should soon realize a fortune for themselves and their children. The lady, we may premise, possessed more than an ordinary share of intellect, which had been cultivated to a highly respectable degree, by the care of fond and doating parents, who little thought of the use to which that intellect would in after years be devoted, or how their devotion would be repaid. Alas! they can feel "how sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child," or one that brings them only sorrow instead of joy.

The family settled in San Francisco. Some time afterward, the gentleman and his wife, in connection with a brother of the latter, chanced to step in on a Sunday to hear a Mormon missionary from Utah, who was holding forth in San Francisco. They were prevented by the bad weather and walking from attending their usual place of worship, and as the house from where the Mormon was speaking happened to be in their way, they concluded, after leaving home, and from mere curiosity, to go in and hear him. Fatal curiosity! Inauspicious day! What the particular subject of discourse was which they heard, we are not advised. After coming out, the husband and brother expressed themselves very freely upon the merits of what they had heard, and pronounced some of it little, if any, short of blasphemy. To the utter astonishment of both, however, the wife and sister expressed herself highly pleased with it!

As a probable solution of such a mystery we may say, before proceeding further, that it subsequently turned out that she had heard a Mormon missionary while a young lady residing in one of the river towns in Mississippi. Polygamy was at that time carefully concealed from the outside Gentiles by the Apostles of Joe Smith, and stoutly denied. Probably the young lady was fascinated by the romance which the Mormon may have skilfully woven into his discourse, and the seeds of blasting ruin thus lodged in her mind to spring up, fructify and bear apples of Sodom to turn out ashes in the tasting many days afterwards. Be this as it may, the lady soon became strongly attached to the Mormon faith and went frequently, if not constantly to hear its Apostles. In a short time he had acquired sufficient influence over her to cause her to resolve to quit her husband—if he would not accompany her—and repair to the grand redezvous of the Latter Day Saints, as they style themselves, at Salt Lake City.

The determination once taken, nothing could dissuade her from her purpose. But the children, what was to become of them? The mother was devotedly, passionately attached to them and she determined to take them with her. The father and brother of course became alarmed. To prevent her from going they knew well would be impossible, but they resolved to save the children from the yawning gulf which was about opening to receive them; and in pursuance of this resolution, they determined to send them to their grand parents in this city. They were therefore taken when the mother was absent, placed on board a steamer, and safely reaching New Orleans, were soon under the loving care and hospitable roof of their grandparents.

Who, however, can baffle or circumvent a determined woman, fanatic tho' she be, when her feelings, her pride and her affections all combine to spur her on to the accomplishment of her object? The very next steamer that sailed brought that mother to this city, chafing like an enraged tigress, whose young had been taken from her. Her parents who had been made aware of the circumstances, now determined that she should not take her children from them, and that if she was bent upon dooming herself to destruction, she should not drag her innocent babes down into the foul abyss with her. We pass over the struggles, the watchings that ensued a little more than one year ago, on the part of the grandparents of these beautiful children of some four or five summers, to keep the mother from taking them to Utah, and of her efforts to obtain possession of them for that purpose. Suffice it to say, for the time being, she failed. How completely her whole soul had become wrapped in the gross and disgusting deception which had seized upon her like a giant, the reader can judge when we inform him that rather than relinquish joining the vile horde which contaminate the air of Great Salt Lake by their abominations, she actually tore herself from the children of her heart, and went without them.

She did not, however, abandon her purpose. Finding herself baffled for the time being, she determined to change her tactics, the more certain to secure at a future day, what she could not then effect. She went to Salt Lake City via St. Louis, and her parents had the melancholy satisfaction to know that if she was lost, that her children were at least safe. These, brother and sister, under the bountiful and fostering care which they received, budded, like the opening rose beneath the sweet and genial influences of the Southern spring.

They heard nothing more of her till one day last week, when they were struck almost dumb with amazement by her entrance into the family mansion. We pass over what followed, as the reader can much better immagine than we can describe it. She had been to Utah and had been a teacher there, had boarded at Gov. Brigham Young's, only boarded, had seen much suffering there from famine, and had seen also the error of her ways! Said she had been mad, had now left the Mormons and had come to live with her parents and children, and to do what she could to make them happy. She asked them to restore her once more to their confidence. Of course, the delight of her parents was boundless. She did not profess, however to have renounced Mormonism, but wished not to return to Utah, and still insisted that the Mormons were good people, and Brigham and his associates in office true Prophets. If these drawbacks upon the value of her repentance created a regret or a lingering suspicion in the minds of her parents, they did not express it, grateful and happy that she had done so much as she had, and made even a quasi confession as to the impropriety of her past conduct; and hoping, doubtless, that time would accomplish what was lacking in her complete recovery from her horrible delusion.

On last Saturday morning, she requested permission to take her children into town (her parents live in the suburbs) to go shopping, and promising to return by five, or at most six o'clock in the evening. The permission was readily granted, and they have seen neither her nor the children since. She has accomplished her purpose; and she is, of course, on her way back to Utah with her children, to be thrust into the opening throat of the grim visaged and horrible monster, who sits midway upon the Rocky Mountains, lapping his repulsive jaws, and eager to devour new victims as they become entangled in his foul, his leprous coils.

Her dissimulation was profound—was perfect. So much for Mormonism!

THE MORMON.

FOR THE MORMON.

Superstition.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

ALTHOUGH man is endowed with noble faculties, it is evident from the memorials of the past, and from daily observations, that these gifts, through a variety of causes, have not been, and are not always sufficiently developed and used, so as to look upon the phenomenal and abstract world through the medium of enlightened reason, and elicit from a knowledge and combination of, and reasoning from positive data, unknown facts and data, so that new principles may be brought to light, explained and understood.

Man is naturally inclined to believe in the workings of mysterious, invisible agents; he likes to grasp after the marvellous, miraculous, or supernatural; to have his mind filled with imaginary terrors seems to be a peculiar charm for him, and the greater they are, the more he appears to enjoy himself; and when thus entirely absorbed in superstitious notions, he is, although terrified, fascinated by the phantoms of an excited imagination. As an illustration of the foregoing, I remind the reader of the days of childhood, when the youthful mind has a great longing after the most wonderful, extravagant and absurd stories about witches, faries etc., when many a weary evening-hour is beguiled by listening to, or reading the account of some dreadful adventure and hair-breadth escape from the villainous tricks of mischievous so-called supernatural beings, who, acting in the venerable capacity of ghosts or goblins, are engaged in haunting old houses and frightening people out of their wits. Only observe those boys and girls whose attention is entirely taken up with the recital of some dreadful narrations, and you see what horror and delight are alternately depicted in their countenances, betraying thus the workings of their feelings and emotions.

Superstition, the offspring of ignorance and mental darkness, may consist in a belief in omens, astrology, fortune-telling; in believing in the existence of fairies, imps, etc., in looking upon general, physical phenomena as prognostics or forerunners of impending disasters, or of approaching death; and last, but not least, superstition may consist in absurd, incorrect religious ideas.

The belief in omens, which word is derived from the Latin, signifying a token of good or bad luck, an augury, has prevailed to a great extent among the ancient nations, especially among the Egyptians, from whose country almost every kind of superstition seems to have sprung, till, in the course of time, it is found, more or less, in all parts of the world, and even in this enlightened age, it keeps many, but especially the ignorant and illiterate, in mental vassalage. There are apparently few countries, where ignorance and superstition have got such a supremacy over the public mind, and are throwing their gloomy, hideous, phantastic shades on every thing, as in Russia, Italy, Spain and Portugal, where the people are influenced by the most absurd notions either in relation to their religion or the common occurrences of every day life; where physical phenomena assume, to the vivid and excited fancy, the alarming characters of horrible phantoms or apparitions. One of the most common suqerstitious notions, is the belief in an evil eye, which consists in praising or admiring a person too much, therefore mothers and nurses do not like to have their children looked upon with an admiring gaze, for fear of receiving an ill omen. In order to avoid this danger, visitors are often desired, previous to their being permitted to see children, to turn their back to them and spit three times on the ground, for the purpose of ejecting the evil spirit; but, if you, by chance, should see them without taking this precaution, the parents will turn aside, and perform the ceremony for you. As well as the Romans had their dies nefasti, unlucky days; so the inhabitants of the above mentioned countries have their lucky and unlucky days, on which few people will engage in any business, or travel, for fear of meeting with an ill omen. The priests often take advantage of the general superstition, and contrive schemes for the accomplishment of certain objects, as for instance, the working of miracles through the instrumentality of some wooden or stony saint, so as to give celebrity and wealth to a poor church. It is astonishing to see, what deference is paid to omens, for instance, if a hare or cat crosses your path, or a pigeon flies across your window, it signifies bad luck. The belief in omens is however not confined to those countries, but is also, to a certain extent, found among more enlightened nations, as for instance, among the Germans, English, Scotch, by whom the breaking of a looking-glass, the howling of a dog at night-time, the meeting of a funeral procession, etc. are considered bad omens.

One of the most widely spread superstitious notions, which has followers among all nations, is the absurdity of believing in astrology. It appears from history, that comets, meteors and other phenomena of the starry heavens, have been considered by the ancients as prognostics or forerunners of coming evil, direful calamities, as for instance, plagues, famine, wars; and even men of literary eminence of those epochs, as Aristotle, the celebrated Greek philosopher and disciple of Plato, who flourished about the year 332 before Christ, and others, had quite erroneous ideas concerning those heavenly bodies. The comet of 1454, seen at Constantinople, the present capital of Turkey, is said to have represented the aspect of a flaming sword, so that the Turks were seized with the greatest terror, believing the Giaurs (Giaurs is the Arabic term for infidels or disbelievers in the holy mission of Mohamet,) would invade their country and exterminate them. Among the inhabitants of Africa and the East Indies, a solar eclipse is, up to the present day, gazed at with amazement, and the people, on such occasions, turn out, and strike with the greatest force, their tam tams, gongs and other brazen vessels; fire off volleys of small arms, or scream, in order to scare away the monster or dragon, which they suppose is devouring the sun. To these absurd and foolish notions, arising from a want of judgement and a total ignorance of the nature of things, we may trace the source of astrology, which term is derived from the Greek, signifying a knowledge of reading stars. The machinery or mechanism of celestial scenery is invariably guided by certain generalizing powers; hence, the position, junction and aspect of heavenly bodies is controlled by laws and principles peculiar to themselves, and have nothing to do with the moral condition of worlds, that is to say, they do not and cannot influence the destiny and character of individuals or nations. In fact, if we consider the amazing distances that intervene between our earth and the sun, moon and stars, it is evident to every intelligent, reflective mind, that our physical and mental operations are beyond their reach, and that the morality of nations does not and cannot depend upon those distant luminaries. Supposing we were really subject to the influence of stars, then we would no longer be self-agents, but their willingless, soulless playthings; our strivings and endeavors to improve in intelligence, wisdom, and every noble and exalting principle, would amount to nothing, because being under the control of a certain star, our moral improvement or retrogression would be subject to its influence. Consequently, if we thus were deprived of our self-agency, we could no longer be responsible for our actions, and moral condition; hence a thief or murderer might say; well, I am sorry for what I have done, but, being forced to it by a superior power, I could not help myself. It may be true, that the moon, sun and certain stars influence and affect, to some extent physically our globe, as in relation to the tide, which phenomenon is said to arise from the attractive power of the moon; likewise the growth of certain plants and herbs, as for instance, poppy, are supposed to be influenced by some distant luminary; but these are all mere hypotheses and not positive facts. We will take however, for a moment, the absurdity for granted, that the moral world is really influenced by celestial bodies; what rules, principles, or data have we to start with, from which to deduce certain conclusions, so as to have a foundation for our computations or calculations concerning the probable destiny of individuals and nations! But, as much as we can learn from history, these are merely absurd, foolish suppositions, assestions and assumptions, by which astrologers pretend to foretell the destiny of man.

Among the Romans, the astrologers were called mathematicians, because they made figures and signs, representing the position and aspect of certain stars. The gross ignorance of the multitude received willingly those impositions, till the astrologers were expelled by a formal decree of the Senate and emperors; but being protected by the credulous populace, they remained in Rome. With the Arabians, Egyptians, Chaldeans, Assyrians and Greeks, astrology assumed such an important and respectable character, that the sages and the learned received it as a science worthy of the greatest attention. Astrology occupies a very prominent part in the history of the Brahmins in the East Indies; so that words spoken by these pagan priests in relation to the destiny of man, as learned from the position of stars, are considered oracles of infallible truth; from which impositions the priests receive great temporal benefits. In fact, the superstitious notions on astrology seem to govern the people in India more or less in the transactions of life, as for instance in marriage matters, in which the opinion of the astrologer is of the greatest importance, in determining the time for the ceremonies, when to make a voyage or journey, etc. But even in Europe astrology found its followers among princes and peasants, in fact all classes of society seemed to pay the greatest attention to that so-called science. Zeno, the soothsayer and astrologer of Wallenstein, of the Austrian army, is well known for his influence on that eminent and famous general of the thirty years war. Even Cardinal Richelieu, who lived in the seventeenth century, followed frequently the directions of his astrologer Morin. Henry III and Henry IV of France, had astrologers at their courts, and paid the greatest deference to their absurd notions.

Extract of a Letter from Eld. M. J. Snedaker.

MOUNT EXILE, near Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 23, 1857.

PRES. TAYLOR,—Dear Bro.: I sit down to write you a few lines which ought to have been done long ago. Since my last letter to you from Grimes Co., Texas, I have returned from that mission. On my route to Ellis Co., where we have a small branch of the Church that was organized in 1856, I was invited to preach; according to appointment, I got to the meeting house at dusk and found a crowd contending about my preaching there. As I approached the door to enter two men sitting on the door steps, surrounded by a number of associates, inquired if I was the preacher, on being answered in the affirmative, they roughly and threateningly told me I could not preach there that night. I replied that if wanted to preach I should do so; but if not wanted I could be silent. The gentleman who invited me to preach there explained to me the cause of the contention, and spoke to the people about my preaching at a pleasant Bowery close at hand, to which those who wished to here might repair and the discontented would thereby be excused from attending. On my consenting to address the people at the Bowery, the persons who sat on the door steps and their associates got furious and attacked me with all their force. They struck me unmercifully and I endeavored to escape; but was pursued and overtaken and again maltreated. I got away and in the darkness elluded their pursuit and returned to the house where I had supped previous to going to the meeting house. A crowd came there, and for the safety of the family that had befriended me, I was about to leave by the back door and plunge into the woods. I was suffering severely from the blows I had received and my clothes were all torn. Thinking of my condition and how little I deserved such treatment, my spirit got sullen, and I could not restrain my feelings of indignation, and I resolved to face my enemies, and if they wanted it, it should be war to the hilt. I turned to the front door and faced the crowd, but on their explaining why they appeared there, they turned out to be persons that had come to my rescue. Learning that I had still strength to speak and was willing to address them, I accompanied them to a house about a mile distant and preached to a good congregation. They were orderly and listened with much interest during the services. I learned next morning that among those who took an active part in mangling my body were the Methodist minister, Mr. Hambright, and Mr. Frost, a Justice of the Peace, of the Baptist sect. "May God reward them according to their works."

The foregoing is the account of one of many outrages to which thousands of Elders have been exposed while traveling to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and from which many have suffered severely, and from their effects not a few have filled a premature grave. As a general thing, in fact almost without exception, ministers and professors of religion have been the instigators of the brutality, and frequently been the most vicious in their murderous work. Do the Mormons treat ministers of other religions in that style? No! Our halls and public places of meeting have ever been at their disposition—and instead of repelling them from our midst, we have ever given them a kindly welcome, and done our best to get the largest congregations to hear them. Bogus preachers, like bogus money, pass best in the dark; but they who know the truth, and do right, come to the light that their works may be manifest. What would the press say if a sectarian minister got such a handling in Utah? We opine they would cry out for extermination.

Brother Snedaker is a strong man, and could have left his mark upon some of them if he had once begun to act in self-defence. It is no doubt well that he had such a command of himself to refrain; but had he given them something like the same measure they meted to him, they would only have got what they richly merited.

Bro. Snedaker would like to hear from Elder Wm. Allbrand at the address heading this letter.

SIMPLE ADDITION,

Is the method of collecting several numbers of the same denomination into one sum.

RULE—1. Place the numbers under each other, so that units may stand under units, tens under tens, &c., and draw a line below them.

2. Add up the figures in the column of units, and find how many tens are contained in their sum.

3. Set down what remains above the tens, or, if nothing remains, a cypher, and carry as many units, or ones, to the next column, as there were tens in the first one.

4. Add up the second column, together with the number carried, in the same manner as the first, and proceed thus till the whole is finished.

PROOF.—Draw a line below the uppermost row, and add all the rest, together, setting their sum under the number to be proved.

Then add this last found number and the uppermost line together; and if the sum be the same as that found by the first addition, the work is right.

Thirty-fifth Congress.—Extra Session.

EXTRA SESSION OF THE SENATE.

WASHINGTON, March 5, 1857.

Mr. Foot, Senator from Vermont, took the oath of office.

On motion of Mr. Allen a Committee of Two was appointed to wait on the President and inform him that the Senate was assembled and ready to receive any communication he may de pleased to make.

Subsequently Mr. Allen of the Committee reported that they had performed the duty intrusted to them, and that the President had said that he would send a communication to the Senate to-morrow.

The following resolutions were offered and laid over;

By Mr. Pugh, that the Senate adjourn without day on Monday next.

By Mr. Mason, that the committee, clerks and pages of the last be continued during the present session.

By Mr. Bright, that the chaplain of the last session be retained during the present one.

Mr. Biggs offered an amendment, inviting ministers residing in Washington to officiate alternately.

On motion of Mr. Benjamin the Senate considered the resolution to remodel the Standing Committees.

An amendment offered by Mr. Pugh to have a Committee on Privileges and Elections was rejected.

The resolution was amended and adopted. It reduces the number of committees, and assigns seven members to the most important of them, and five on the others.

Mr. Butler asked to be—but was not—excluded from service on all the committees.

Adjourned.

SENATE March 6

Mr. Seward presented the petition of certain British subjects, setting forth that as Lord Palmerston's act, in surrendering the maritime rights of that Government, is an act of high treason, those rights will revert to the British Crown and nation as soon as the guilty party shall be impeached for that crime. That the petitioners have heard that the President of the United States is about proposing the terms on which the Declaration of Paris will be agreed to by the United States. That such an act would be one of connivance with Lord Palmerston in his attempt to possess himself of an arbitrary power foreign to the British Constitution and to the Constitution of the United States; and pray Congress to refuse their sanction to any Convention with Great Britain founded on the illegal, treasonable and invalid Declaration of Paris.

On motion of Mr. Seward, the petition was laid on the table.

Mr. Bigler presented the protest of forty-four members of the House of Representatives and the protest of fifteen members of the Senate of Pennsylvania against the proceedings under which Mr. Simon Cameron claims to represent that State in the Senate.

Mr. Yulee presented the credentials of Mr. Mallory, elected Senator from Florida for six years from the 4th of March.

Mr. Mason was appointed to fill the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The Senate then went into Executive Session, and afterward adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. March 9.

Mr. Wade presented the resolutions of the Legislature of Ohio in favor of the recognition of the Independence of Liberia.

Mr. Seward offered a list of the Standing Committees and moved its adoption. He said that the majority of Senators had, after consultation, decided on the number of persons they would claim on the Committees, and the order in which they should be placed. The majority included the entire number of members of the Senate, except those who belong to the "Republican" party of which he was a member.

After some grumbling on the part of the "Republicans," the Committees were adopted, and are as follows:

Foreign Relations—Messrs. Mason, Douglas, Slidell, Polk, Crittenden, Seward and Foot.

Finance—Messrs. Hunter, Pearce, Gwin, Bright, Briggs, Fessenden and Cameron.

Commerce—Messrs. Clay, Benjamin, Bigler, Toombs, Reid, Bright and Hamlin.

Printing—Messrs. Johnson, Fitzpatrick and Bell, of New Hampshire.

Engrossed Bills—Messrs. Wright, Bigler and Harlan.

Enrolled Bills—Messrs. Jones, Brown and Doolittle.

Library—Messrs. Lane, Bayard and Butler.

Mr. Trumbull moved that all papers in the Indiana contested election cases be referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

Mr. Butler had no doubt that this would be a controversy full of interest, and asked that the Committee on Judiciary should meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow to decide what should be done.

The papers were referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. Bigler, the protest of the Democratic members of the Pennsylvania Legislature against Mr. Cameron's right to a seat was referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

Mr. Crittenden offered the following of which he will ask consideration at a future day.

Resolved, That in the judgment of the Senate, the complete exemption of all vessels of commerce and their cargoes from seizure or capture in time of war would be a signal blessing to mankind, and that to the accomplishment of an end so desirable the Senate will always be ready to give their hearty aid and co-operation; that the mere abolition of privateering would not accomplish that end, but would in its operation be unequal and unjust, depriving the United States of a most effectual means of hostility and retaliation against a superior naval power, which by means of its greater number of public ships, might almost with impunity cripple or destroy our commerce; and therefore such abolition alone would be inconsistent with the policy and interest of the United States.

Resolved, That this policy of the United States, coinciding with the general interest of mankind, is well explained and vindicated in the statesman-like letter of the American Secretary of State, Mr. Marcy, to the Count de Sartiges, of July 28, 1856.

Resolved, Therefore, that the course pursued by President Pierce as stated in his last annual Message in reference to certain rules or principles of Maritime law in time of war agreed upon and declared by Plenipotentiaries of Russia, France, Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, Sardinia and Turkey, and submitted to him for adoption by this government, meets the cordial approbation and concurrence of the Senate.

After a brief executive session the Senate adjourned.

SENATE. March 10.

Mr. Pugh, of Ohio, offered a resolution that the Senate adjourn on Saturday next.

Mr. Mason moved to lay the resolution on the table. Disagreed to by 20 to 23.

On motion of Mr. Crittenden, of Ky., his resolutions offered yesterday relative to privateering were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Senate then went into executive session.

The Senate adjourned till one o'clock to-morrow.

SENATE. March 11.

Fatal Affray in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28, 1857.

During the immense pressure at the President's levee last evening, Col. Lee a member of our City Council, and a clerk in the Pension Office, seized a gentleman by the collar, and charged him with picking his pocket. The gentleman charged was Mr. David Hume of Alexandria, a highly respectable merchant. This morning Mr. Hume, accompanied by Col. James C. Walker, reading clerk in the House of Representatives, proceeded to the Pension Office to explain and satisfy Colonel Lee that he was mistaken in supposing him a pickpocket. Lee, however, was fixed in his opinion that Hume attempted to steal his pocket book, whereupon Hume struck him with a stick, and in return was shot dead by Lee. The whole affair transpired in a moment, and before any one had supposed there would be a serious difficulty.

Dr. Kane's Remains in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, March 10, 1857.

The remains of Dr. Kane arrived in this city this morning.

The funeral procession was a most imposing affair. There was an immense turn out of citizens, and the escort was composed of several military companies, including the United States Artillery from Fort McHenry, the officers and members of the Maryland Institute, the Free Masons, the Fire Department, the German Societies, the committee from Philadelphia and Wheeling, a detachment of United States seaman from the steamer Allegany, many officers of the Army and Navy, the officers of the Maryland Volunteers, the Mayor and Common Council. The medical profession and other civic bodies followed the funeral car. The coffin was enveloped in the national flag. The stores in the streets through which the procession passed were closed and many of them draped in mourning. The bells of the city were tolled and minute guns fired from Federal Hill. The body was taken to the immense hall of the Maryland Institute, which was handsomely draped with black catafalque. The body is placed in the centre of the hall, which is guarded with soldiers. Thousands of citizens are visiting it to night.

The remains will leave here to-morrow, at 11 A. M., for Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, March 11, 1857.

The remains of Dr. Kane arrived at the Baltimore depot this afternoon, having been escorted over the route by the first troop of cavalry of the Washington Grays, acting as a guard of honor. The body was placed in Independence Hall, the interior of which and all the entrances to it being draped in mourning. The coffin has been tastefully decorated with camelias, the voluntary offering of Peter Mackenzie, Esq., an intimate friend of the deceased. The flags throughout the city are hanging at half mast, draped in mourning. Large crowds gathered at all points to view he escort and the remains of the lamented deceased.

The Supreme Court and the Massachusetts Legislature.

BOSTON, March 10, 1857.

In the House to-day an order was adopted instructing the Committee on Federal Relations to consider the expediency of instructing our Senators, and requesting our Representatives in Congress to propose an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, electing Judges of the Supreme and inferior Courts by the people for a term of years. The House also appointed a Committee to consider and report what measures should be taken in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case.

A Brief History of China.

CHINA is the most populous and ancient empire in the world; it is 1,390 miles long, and 1,030 wide. Population, from 300,000,000 to 360,000,000. The capital is Pekin, with 1,000,000 inhabitants; next Nankin, 1,000,000; and Canton 1,000,000. China produces tea, 50,000,000 lbs. of which are annually exported from Canton, the only place which foreigners are allowed to visit. Silk, cotton, rice, gold, silver, and all the necessaries of life, are found in China. The arts and manufactures in many branches are in high perfection, but stationary, as improvements are now prohibited. The Government is a despotic monarchy. Revenue, 200,000,000 dollars; army, 800,000 men. The religion is similar to Bhudism, the chief God being Foh. The Chinese inculcate the morality of Confucius, their great philosopher, who was born 550 B. C. The great wall and canal of China are among the mightiest works ever achieved by man. The foreign commerce of China amounts to 35,000,000 dollars or 40,000,000 dollars annually, the whole of which is transacted with appointed agents, called "Hong merchants." Foreigners are allowed to live at certain stations, or "factories," below Canton. The chief trade is with England. The revenue derived from foreign commerce by the Emperor varies from 4,000,000 dollars to 6,000,000 dollars. According to Mr. Dunn, the opium smuggled into China, to the injury of the people, amounted to 20,000,000 dollars annually for several years past, much of which was paid in specie, which found its way to London. The Chinese language has nearly 40,000 characters or letters.

Idols.

IN the museum of Berlin, in the hall devoted to northern antiquities, they have the representation of the idols from which the names of the days of our week are derived. From the idol of the sun comes Sunday. This idol is represented with his face like the sun, holding a burning wheel, with both his hands on his breast, signifying his course round the world.

The idol of the moon, from which comes Monday, is habited in a short coat, like a man, but holding the moon in his hand.

Tuisco, from which cometh Tuesday, was one of the most ancient and popular gods of the Germans, and is represented by his garment of skin, according to their peculiar way of clothing.

The third day of the week was dedicated to his worship Woden, from whence comes Wednesday, who was a valiant prince among the Saxons. His image was prayed to for victory.

Thor, from whence Thursday, is seated on a bed, with twelve stars overhead, holding a hammer in the right hand.

Friga, from whence we have Friday, represented with a drawn sword in his right hand, and a bow in his left. He was the giver of peace and plenty.

Seater, from whom is Saturday, has the appearance of perfect wretchedness. He is thin visaged, long haired, with a long beard. He carries a pail of water in his right hand, wherein are fruits and flowers.

Fattening Turkeys.

THE alimentary properties of charcoal are very great; indeed, it has been asserted that domestic fowls may be fattened on it without any other food, and that, too, in a shorter time than on the most nutritious grains. In an experiment made to test the value of the article, four turkeys were taken and confined in a pen, and fed on meal, boiled potatoes, and oats. Four others of the same brood were also confined at the same time, in another pen, and fed daily on the same articles, but with one pint of the finest pulverized charcoal mixed with their meal and potatoes; they had also a plentiful supply of broken charcoal in their pen. The eight were killed on the same day, and there was a difference of one and a half pounds each in favor of the fowls which had been supplied with the charcoal, they being much the fatter, and the meat greatly superior in point of tenderness and flavour. This would appear to establish, beyond a doubt, the benefit of charcoal for fattening purposes.

CAMPHOR A REMEDY FOR MICE.—Any one desirous to keep seeds from the depredations of mice, can do so by mixing pieces of camphor gum in with the seeds. Camphor placed in drawers or trunks will prevent mice from doing them injury. The little animal objects to the odor, and keeps a good distance from it. He will seek food elsewhere.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Pére et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaitre que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Fourteenth General Epistle

Of the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to the Saints in the Valleys of the Mountains, and Those Scattered Abroad Throughout the Earth—

Greeting:

Beloved Brethren: Feeling impelled by the Spirit of our God to write unto you concerning the things of the Kingdom, and having greater boldness therein by reason of the faith and testimony of the Lord Jesus and the Holy Ghost, of which we have received and bear record unto the whole world, we proceed to manifest unto you such intimations of the Spirit pertaining unto the Church and Kingdom of God as are or may be presented unto us, trusting that they may prove instructive and beneficial unto the Saints.

To those who read our publications, we need not minutely recapitulate the operations and success attending the labors of our missionaries, as all such information is promptly and fully laid before the people through those channels. Suffice it to say, uniform success has attended the efforts of our Elders, and thousands are now rejoicing in the light of truth, having renounced their traditioned errors, obeyed the ordinances of the House of the Lord, and received with gladness, praise and thanksgiving, the pure principles of the Gospel of Christ. They are now anxiously looking for deliverance to unite and cast their lot with us in these peaceful vales.

The missionaries who have been absent in Europe two years and more, have mostly returned this season, having been relieved by others appointed at our last April Conference. Notwithstanding thousands from Europe annually find their homes in Utah, still the numbers are increasing abroad.

The interest excited in favor of, and to learn the truth and the hatred of its opposers, were never greater than at the present time. The power of Almighty God is made manifest in the administrations of His servants, and is plainly discernible in His hand dealings with the nations of the earth, as well as with His people, making the assurance doubly sure, that His word will not return unto Him void, nor His promises be made in vain. He will sustain the righteous, the ungodly will He cut off.

In California, the Western Standard is faithfully warning the people, under the able care and guidance of Bro. George Q. Cannon, who has also published the Book of Mormon in the Hawaiian language. The publication of that paper has proved very useful and beneficent in correcting public opinion, and in exercising a salutary influence over the few to be found in that land who are seekers after truth. Gold is the shrine at which they bow, and the truth emanating from High Heaven's King, has but few admirers. The Standard, however, will be able to sustain itself, mostly through the aid of the Saints, and will continue to be issued so long as it shall be considered beneficial in aiding the cause of truth in that region.

The Sandwich Islands and Australian missions are in a healthy and prosperous condition. We learn by late advices from Silas Smith, who is at present presiding over the Sandwich Island's mission, that the crops on Lanai are much better this season than usual, which will greatly facilitate the gathering of the native Saints upon that island, the appointed place. The repeated failure and destruction of their crops has involved the mission somewhat in debt, and partially frustrated the design in gathering the Saints to that place, where they could be measurably protected from the hireling missionary operations and other contaminating influences of licentious civilization. But through the present prosperity, the aid of the faithful Elders, and continual blessings of the Almighty, who is ever mindful of His faithful Saints, we hope and expect that the mission will soon rise above its present embarassments. There was represented at a Conference held on Lanai, on the 24th of July, 1855, 90 organized branches, 4,220 members, 723 of whom had been baptized within that year, 25 American and 118 native elders then laboring on the islands, besides native priests, teachers and deacons.

From the Society Islands, we have no very satisfactory accounts. Owing to difficulties with the French Government, the Elders were compelled, some two years ago, to leave those islands. Bros. Addison Pratt and Ambrose Alexander were appointed to that mission from San Bernardino, at their last April Conference, and sailed for those islands on the 24th day of the same month, but were soon obliged to leave, and have since returned.

Elder Farnham, from the Australian mission, arrived in this city on the 21st of Nov., leaving a ship load of Saints at San Bernardino, the most of whom, it is expected, will come on during the ensuing season.

Bros. John S. Eldredge and James Graham, with 28 Saints from Australia, on board the ship Julia Ann, were wrecked near the Society Isles, on the 4th day of Oct., 1855. We regret to add that five persons, two women and three children, were lost; the remainder barely escaped with their lives upon a barren and uninhabited island where they remained, subsisting upon turtle, for six weeks. They were finally relieved from their perilous situation by the captain of the Julia Ann, who had sailed over three hundred miles in an open boat to an inhabited island and procured another vessel, but were left upon that group and the Sandwich Islands, with no means to further prosecute their journey; though they have since arrived on the western coast, on their way to Zion.

Without reflecting upon the officers of the Julia Ann, all of whom are well spoken of by our brethren, or even upon the strength and sea-worthiness of the vessel, which we understand was good and new, still we wish to caution our Elders, not only those in Australia, but all in foreign countries, not to permit an over anxiety to emigrate and gather with the Saints to make them careless or indifferent to the kind and condition of the vessel in which they embark, nor to the character of the officers and crew on board. This is the second instance of vessels sailing from that mission with Saints on board, not reaching their destination. In the other case, no lives were lost, though the vessel had to put into port where she was condemned, and the Saints, after having paid their passage to the western coast, were left on the Sandwich Islands. It is a matter worthy of record, and a source of great joy and satisfaction to us, that in all our foreign emigration, those are the only losses by sea, of that character, that have occurred.

From the Cape of Good Hope, South Africa, there is a company of Saints en route for this place, the first fruits of the labors of Bros. Jesse Haven, William Walker and Leonard I. Smith, who have been manifestly blest of the Lord in planting the work in that distant part of the Lord's vineyard. At a Conference held at Port Elizabeth, in the month of Aug., 1855, three Conferences, and six Branches, comprising 126 members, were represented. The brethren of the mission having organized the various Branches, and ordained faithful Elders to prosecute the work, are, together with a small company, on their way home, except Bro. Leonard I. Smith, who arrived in this city on the 31st of last May.

The East India missionaries have now all returned, having effected but little in the redemption of that benighted people. How truly have they become "joined to their idols" and left of the Lord, even like unto the Aborigines of America, a law unto themselves, until the Lord shall again visit them with salvation in great power and glory.

From the report of the Conference held at Copenhagen, we learn through Bro. John Vah Cott, that over two thousand Saints have emigrated from that mission; and there still remained over twenty-four hundred anxiously looking for deliverance. Although the Elders in the Scandinavian mission, and in various places in Germany, Italy, Switzerland and France, owing to the suspicions and intolerance of those Governments, have been often thrown into prison, and banished from place to place, still, the work of the Lord has gained a foothold in those countries which cannot now be eradicated. When our Elders are banished from one Kingdom, they go to another, still teaching the people the way of life and salvation. Thus, the enemies of the truth, by their over anxiety to suppress, have unwittingly been the means of spreading the Gospel, and causing the bread of life to be cast upon the waters, which will be gathered after many days.

From the British Isles, we have the most cheering accounts of the progress of the work. We learn by Bros. F. D. Richards, Daniel Spencer, Cyrus H. Wheelock and others lately returned, having been succeeded in the Presidency of that mission, by Bros. Orson Pratt, Ezra T. Benson and James A. Little, that, notwithstanding the great annual emigration from Britain's shores, it does not keep pace with the annual increase and onward progress of the work in those lands.

In the United States and the British Provinces, we also hear of an increased interest springing up in behalf of the truth, and of the work of God now fully established upon the earth.

It is the testimony of all the Elders, that while signal success attends their labors in all of those lands, being attended by the Spirit and power of the Lord in all of their ministrations, the opposition also increases in equal proportion. In truth, it is stated that the deep-rooted hatred of the wicked towards the work of God, was never so great as now, and appears to steadily increase with the increase of the work. But their opposition cannot hinder this work, for it is from heaven; and if the Saints of the Most High God will be faithful, diligent and united, they will always be able to wield an influence and power, which none shall be able to gainsay or withstand.

In consequence of the temporary absence of Bro. Erastus Snow, and the subsequent death of our beloved brother, Orson Spencer, who was left in charge, the Luminary, published in St. Louis, was discontinued; and, although Bro. Snow has since returned to the field of his labors, it has been as yet deemed wisdom not to resume that publication.

It is considered that the Mormon, having the increased patronage which the aid and influence of the patrons of the Luminary would give it, might become as useful to the Saints, as the publication of both papers, and be much better sustained.

In the death of Bro. Spencer, we sustained a loss which, though lamentable to us, our faith compels us to admit, is to his superior gain and happiness. He fell asleep in the faith of Jesus, on the 15th day of Oct., 1855, in the City of St. Louis, being absent from home in the performance of the mission, which had been appointed him at the April Conference of 1854. Our beloved brother has gone to try the realities of the Spirit world, in the full faith of our holy religion and confidence of the people; and though our words of commendation may not extend to cheer and encourage him in his onward and progressive labors, yet we cannot refrain from bearing our testimony to his unwavering fidelity and integrity, his useful but arduous labors, always evincing great firmness of character, and to his unyielding and uncompromising integrity to Joseph and his brethren.

We deplore his loss for our own, and his friends' sake, and who was not his friend that knew him? but rejoice that another faithful and able champion of the truth has gone to assist in the labors of Jesus and Joseph behind the veil.

It has also become our painful duty to record the death of our beloved brother, Jedediah M. Grant, whose obituary and funeral proceedings are published in this day's paper. In this afflicting dispensation of Providence, we feel that the Lord has touched us "in a tender spot;" but we realize that in His unbounded goodness, He is able and willing to make good our loss, yea, more abundantly as we draw nigh unto Him, and live our holy religion.

Although he is gone to another and more extended field of labor, having ripened in the knowledge of God, and efficiently and faithfully performed his work upon the earth, still his frequent admonitions, his burning eloquence, his zeal and anxiety which he manifested for the salvation of Israel, are too indelibly impressed upon our minds to be easily forgotten. Let us, therefore, exhibit our respect to the memory of our departed but beloved friend and brother, by remembering and practising his precepts and emulating, so far as in our power, his virtues.

Owing to the illiberality, bigotry and intolerance of so many of this priest-ridden generation, every obstacle and hindrance that can be is thrown in the way, with a view to obstruct the progress of the work, and hedge up the way of those whose most earnest desire is to leave their parting testimony with old neighbors and associates in life, and come home to Zion. The Gospel of salvation, now, as anciently, finds more ready access to the poor, than the rich, forcibly illustrating and confirming the truthfulness of the remark of our Saviour, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God." The poor, down-trodden, oppressed of ages, whom the aristocratic lordlings have, for centuries, continually crushed with the iron heel of despotism, feel, when the light of truth and salvation penetrates their minds, a new impulse to try again to redeem themselves and their posterity from the thraldom of ignorance, wickedness, error, superstition and tyranny, which so long enchained them and their fathers. They are inspired by an all-absorbing desire to rise above, and throw off the filth and abominations, mystery, corruption and worse than Egyptian darkness of wicked Babylon, and bask in the sunlight of pure principles, emanating from Heaven's King; to rejoice with the Saints in Zion, and become co-workers in that cause, which having redeemed them, may enable them to contribute a share in the redemption of others, who are still in the bonds of iniquity and gall of bitterness.

This ever-rising, ever-increasing desire for the gathering of the remnants of Israel, pertains unto all the Saints of God, who live their religion and enjoy the rich blessings of the Holy Ghost. It is in the heart of every faithful Saint, their constant prayer to the Almighty Father to enable them, not only to promulgate the Gospel of Christ to those who sit in darkness, but to gather out the honest in heart, even the Israel of God, from their long dispersion, and to aid them in returning to a knowledge of the Lord God of their Fathers, that they may participate in the society of the Saints, and a peaceful inheritance in these sequestered vales. To this end, and the further accomplishment of this object, are continually directed the efforts of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company, for the emigration of the honest and worthy poor, those who desire to serve God and keep His commandments, being full of virtue and integrity towards God and their brethren. These are those we wish to deliver from the oppression of wicked Babylon, whose vital energies the proud and powerful are crushing out, upon whom the despotism, bigotry, ignorance and superstition of the world, hang like an incubus, and to bring them to a land where manhood, though found in poverty, is respected, and where the God of Heaven can receive the homage due from man to his Maker; where freedom and liberty of conscience can enjoy protection, honest and faithful labor meet a just equivalent, and where the light of revelation, and power of the Holy and Eternal Priesthood hold the adversary of truth in abeyance, and roll back the curtains of error and darkness, sin and death which have so long enveloped the earth.

This season's operations have demonstrated that the Saints, being filled with faith and the Holy Ghost, can walk across the plains, drawing their provisions and clothing on hand-carts. The experience of this season will, of course, help us to improve in future operations; but the plan has been fairly tested, and proved entirely successful. The entire trip from Iowa City, a distance of over thirteen hundred miles, to this city, has been thus accomplished in less traveling days, than it has ever been by an ox train of wagons, and with far greater ease to the travelers. These companies, with the exception of the two last, which started too late in the season, have made the trip from the Missouri River in little over two months, and could have made it in less time, had they not been hindered by the few ox teams which accompanied them. Herein have our expectations been realized, and the usual vast expense and trouble attending this branch of business been in a good degree avoided.

The accounts of this year's operations not yet being completed, we are at present unable to state the precise amount of expenditure incurred per passenger; but we know that it must be far less than heretofore, and may still be lessened in future.

The Saints who have come in this way have been healthier, more contented and happier, and have encountered less trouble and vexation, than those with teams; and have, moreover, manifested to the world their faith, perseverence and good works.

They have showed a willingness to have others as well as themselves assisted, by using as little as possible of the Company's means for their own emigration. They have manifested a disposition to accede to any terms, so that their emigration might be accomplished without impeding that of anxious thousands looking to the same source for relief.

Although, in the first instance, drawing laden hand-carts so long a distance, appeared to some, difficult to be accomplished by the brethren, and especially by the sisters, yet the result has proved that it is full as easy, and indeed, easier than the method hitherto practised; and the women endured the trip quite as well, in comparison, as the men.

We have taken pains to collect facts upon this subject, as it was an experiment this season. The enterprise, having proved so eminently successful, will, in future, enter largely into all our emigrating operations.

Let the Saints take courage and avail themselves of the privilege of gathering to this place while the way is open before them, for the time will come, when whoso would gather to Zion, must needs flee with his budget upon his shoulder, or under his arm. Verily, they will come like flocks of doves to the windows, comparatively bare and naked, without food or clothing, escaping, as it were, by the skin of their teeth, from the righteous indignation of an offended Deity, poured out upon, and passing over a wicked and adulterous generation.

While we, therefore, feel to congratulate ourselves, and our brethren and sisters upon the happy issue of this experiment, we wish to direct our agents and others concerned, to a few suggestions, drawn from this season's experience, by way of improvement.

In the first place, our emigration MUST start earlier in the season, and the necessary arrangements MUST be made and completed by the time they arrive on the western frontier, and no company must be permitted to leave the Missouri River, later than the 1st day of July.

They must be provided with stronger hand-carts, and endeavor so to arrange, as to have the burden upon each cart vary as little as possible during the journey. Than starting with such heavy loads and lightening them up so soon, it would be better to start with lighter loads and gradually increase them, as the brethren become more accustomed to the labor. This might be accomplished, by sending out a few teams with provisions, a few days in advance of the companies, to be taken on the hand-carts as they come up, when the teams could return.

All emigrants should provide themselves with an extra supply of good shoes.

The hub or nave of the cart wheels should be 8 inches long, and 7 inches through in the centre. The boxes at the shoulder should be 2¼ inches, and the point boxes 1½ inches in diameter.

It it should be considered best to have cast iron arms, they should be 1¼ inches thick at the shoulder, ¾ inch at the point. The wooden axles should have iron or steel skeins, and the wheels should be bound with band iron, ¼ or ⅜ of an inch in thickness, with a dish of 2 inches, and track 4 feet apart. The timber must be of the best quality for toughness, and be well seasoned. In other respects, they may be constructed as heretofore.

The very aged and infirm, should be brought in wagons, in a separate train.

On account of their greater experience, let good, faithful Elders from this Territory have charge of the companies. By observing these suggestions, it is believed that, with one four or six-mule team to each two hundred persons, the emigration will be much facilitated at a still lessened expense.

We had the pleasure, at our October Conference, of meeting with our brethren, Franklin D. Richards, Daniel Spencer, John Van Cott, George D. Grant and others of the returned missionaries who had been long absent, from whom we learned the condition and situation of our immigrating companies still upon the plains.

We immediately took effective measures for sending them such aid and assistance as, owing to the lateness of the season, they should require to enable them to reach these valleys, before the snow of winter should block their way, and render their progress impossible. This was the first business which engrossed the attention of the Conference, and has since absorbed almost the entire attention of many of our citizens. But little has been done except to forward teams and assistance to their relief, and yet they have not all arrived, though the remainder are expected in a few days.

To companies immigrating to this place, we wish to say a word, by way of counsel. Move every day, even if it is but a few miles; that is far better than tarrying in one camping place. On the Sabbath after meeting and resting during a portion of the day, it will generally be better to make a short march. Move on every day, if you wish to accomplish your journey in due season.

Absolute necessity may justify stopping a few days in a place, but that will but rarely occur, and should be avoided so far as possible. It is far better, for both the teams and people, to keep traveling, until the journey is fully accomplished.

The through emigration will be conducted by our traveling agents under the general direction of the agents presiding in Liverpool, from which place it starts, but will receive the aid and co-operation of our agents presiding in New York and St. Louis. All other emigration will be received and disposed of by our agents in the United States.

It is desirable to make a few locations along the line of travel, and our agents at Florence and St. Louis have been instructed in relation thereto.

We trust, therefore, that the brethren and sisters will be sufficiently mindful of the general interests of the cause of Zion to readily respond to our wishes and the requirments of our agents, who are entrusted with these matters. Any material departure from the spirit of these instructions will be considered cause for disfellowship from the Church, or suspension from office.

Elder Orson Hyde is still presiding at Carson county, Utah, and Elders Amasa Lyman and Chas. C. Rich, at San Bernardino, Cal.

Elders Orson Pratt and Ezra T. Benson, are presiding over the European mission, and publishing the Millennial Star in Liverpool, Eng.

Elder John Taylor is presiding in the United States, and publishing the Mormon in N. York City. That publication commends itself to the favorable consideration and patronage of the Saints, being ably conducted and exercising a very salutary influence in correcting public opinion, and defending our people and the principles of our holy religion from the calumny, abuse and misrepresentations of the world.

Elder Erastus Snow is also in the United States, presiding at St. Louis, assisting in the emigration, &c.

Elder George A. Smith, being one of the delegates elected by the Convention and people to present our Constitution and application for admission as a State into the Union, has gone to Washington City to perform that mission.

Elder Parley P. Pratt is also in the United States on a temporary visit, intending to return in the spring.

Elder Wilford Woodruff is in this city, engaged in the Historian's Office.

Elder Lorenzo Snow is presiding at Box Elder, in this Territory; and Elder Franklin D. Richards, is at his home in this city, having recently returned from his mission to Europe.

Owing to the almost total loss of crops last season, loss of stock during the past winter, and heavy indebtedness occasioned by last year's immigration, we were compelled to suspend operations upon the Public Works, until we could pay our debts and somewhat replenish our means. Since harvest, we have partially resumed, but will not commence laying stone upon the Temple until next spring, when we hope to prosecute that work with much vigor. We are collecting and preparing materials, and it is our wish and intention, in the meantime, to finish the canal for boating the rock for the Temple.

The wheat crop of this season was good, but corn was rather light, and potatoes were almost an entire failure, though, by a very prudent course, we trust there will be sufficient provisions to last until another harvest.

In pursuance of an act passed at the last session of the Legislative Assembly, a Convention of Delegates met in this city on the 17th day of last March, and closed their labors on the 27th of the same month; having, in a session of ten days, formed a Constitution, elected delegates, and adopted a memorial to Congress, making application for admission into the Union as a sovereign State. Their proceedings, subsequently submitted to the people, were unanimously sustained.

We learn, by recent advices from our Delegates to Washington, that in consequence of the exceeding great opposition and prejudice against us as a people, they have not deemed it wisdom to present our application, although no fault has been found either with our Constitution, or our ability to sustain and administer a State Government. The opposition seems to be arrayed against us rather on account of our religious faith and Church ordinances, as though they were a legitimate subject for Congress to canvass. What course may be taken is to us unknown, for our memorial has not yet been presented. When the excitements of the presidential election are past, it is hoped more favorable indications, fore shadowing a candid and honest action upon its merits, may warrant its presentaion. If this can be accomplished, and the claims of our application for admission into the Union as a State be fairly and honorably canvassed upon every point legitimate to the issue, we have not a doubt as to its successful termination.

We are more indifferent in regard to this subject in a religious, than in a political sense, for, whether we are organized in a Territorial or State capacity, Government is bound to protect us in our rights of conscience, or over-ride plain Constitutional guarantees. And no intelligent person holds in a very high estimation, that union which is hourly endangered by the frenzied zeal of rampant, misguided and fanatical demagogues, who trample that heaven-inspired instrument, the Constitution, into the dust, and regard neither their fathers' legacy, nor their children's inheritance.

It is not our purpose in this Epistle to discuss political questions, but we cannot refrain from honestly and sincerely invoking the power of Him who sits enthroned in the heavens, to behold those who are distracting the councils of our nation, and hastening the destruction of this great confederacy of sovereign States, and to thwart their wicked and nefarious purposes, to restrain their iniquity, and cause others to arise in their places who will rule in righteousness and save our distracted but beloved country from its impending ruin.

At the April Conference, some three hundred and fifty Elders were called to go on missions, all of whom promptly responded and departed to their various fields of labor. The Conference was blessed with rich, seasonable and interesting instructions, and a general good spirit seemed to pervade every bosom. It was numerously attended, and the brethren rejoiced in the unity of the most holy faith, in praise, thanksgiving and worship unto our Father and our God.

Before harvest, much destitution was experienced by the masses of the people through the want of provisions, but the commendable liberality exercised by those who were fortunate enough to possess a supply, and the energy of the Bishops in enforcing a rigid economy, and distribution to the destitute, prevented any great amount of suffering. We trust that the same generous disposition will always be manifested, in sharing even scanty supplies with the really destitute, so generally practised among this people during the past season. Still, we prefer that all should practice that diligence, economy and obedience so often urged upon them, that the blessings of Heaven be not withheld, and that the elements and the labors of the husbandman may be blessed of the Lord, and the earth bring forth in its strength, the grain and the rich fruits thereof for the sustenance of man.

Notwithstanding these, and many other good qualities which characterize this people, still, we find too prevalent a disposition to murmur, find fault and complain at the dispensations of an All-wise Providence; a disposition of careless indifference to His counsels, and a dull lethargy which lulls the people into a false security; all of which gives Satan the advantage, darkens counsel, and leads many into a spirit of apostacy. We must remember that we live in a world of sin, wickedness and sorrow, and that the enemy of all righteousness is ever on the alert to destroy the Saints, and lead them into temptation, darkness, sin and transgression.

Brethren, we exhort you to awake from this lethargy, to put on the armor of righteousness, of the Gospel of Jesus, and rebuke the adversary and the power of Satan and drive them far from you; to hold frequent converse and communion with your God, that the power of the Highest may rest down upon you, burn in your bosoms, in your families, in your neighborhoods, cities, counties and wherever there are Saints of the Most High God; that fearfulness may seize the hypocrite in Zion and the fire of the Almighty consume the wicked and ungodly from the whole earth. Thus, while the indignation of the Lord is passing over the nations, and we also receive a portion of the chastisement, let us be wise and properly receive the correction, as coming from the hand of a kind Father who seeks the best interests of his children. Let us, hereafter, more fully appreciate our blessings and now, when a plentiful harvest has again crowned our labors, be wise and practice economy in using and preserving our grain, that no waste nor unwise disposal thereof shall characterize our acts.

We are happy in being able to say that the Indians are peaceful in all our settlements. We have abundantly proven that a friendly interest for their welfare, and a pacific policy, are much the most successful in preserving their good feelings, in promoting and preserving peace, and are gradually leading them to an understanding of the benefits derived from a civilized existence. To reflect their angry words and acts, and kill them for every trivial offense, as is the usual course pursued towards them by the whites, is condescending to their savage and barbarious customs, thus reciprocating their evil deeds. Such a course will never cause them to appreciate the blessings of civilized society, nor influence them to seek its benefits, but will, as all past experience proves, drive them to the opposite extreme, and, in addition to their own, cause them to imbibe the vices, without the virtues of civilization. Therefore, let us, in all our intercourse with them, exhibit a superior understanding, a larger comprehension of right, forbearance and honor. Be just, brethren, in your dealings with them; no matter what course they may pursue towards you, never retaliate a wrong, but always exhibit a firm determination to do right, and seek to palliate their conduct and conciliate their feelings.

This course steadily pursued must, in due time, induce them to yield their savage barbarity, wild customs and vicious course of life, to the dictates of superior wisdom and raise them to a higher degree in the scale of human existence. It has already had an effect in this direction, sufficient to encourage us in our efforts to bring them to a civilized, not to say a christianized, life. They must be civilized; must learn to plow, sow, plant, harvest, build houses and make fences; must learn mechanism as well as agriculture; their minds will then become sufficiently expanded to receive gospel light and the principles pertaining to their salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of our God.

Remember, brethren, that they are the remnants of Israel and, although they may apparently continue for a time to waste away and sink deeper and deeper into the depths of sin, misery and woe, that unto them pertain the promises made to faithful Abraham, and they will be fulfilled. Be diligent, therefore, to do them good, and seek in all your intercourse with them to bring them back to a knowledge of the Lord God of their fathers. Preserve yourselves from their savage ferocity; never condescend to their level, but always seek to elevate them to a higher, purer and, consequently, a more useful and intelligent existence.

In our intercourse with the world we find that we have more to do with the poor and those of low estate, and we might say of low wordly esteem, than those of any other class. This only affords another of those strong testimonies of the Lord Jesus in behalf of this being his people, his Church, his kingdom. Truly, 'the poor ye have always with you,' and it behoveth us to learn them how to live, how to combine the elements, that they also by their own exertions may draw support from nature's great store house, which is ample for all. Yes, learn them to live and place them, by your intelligence and charity, in a position to earn or in some laudable manner obtain a living by their own exertions. Calculate and contrive for them, and encourage them by leading on and exhibiting objects ahead.

We direct the attention of the Bishops and their assistants more particularly to this subject, as it devolves upon them to minister in temporal things. In Israel as in the world there are many rulers, but few with the feeling of fathers to the people. Be fathers to the people, ye Bishops, and lead them on, step by step, until they shall wax strong in the knowledge of things, both temporal and spiritual, pertaining to the kingdom of our God.

This is a peculiar people; they have already become very great, with all the elements for prosperity and rapid advancement. We have before us the examples of the nations of the world; we witness their prosperity, their pride and arrogance; are made sensible of their power and their oppression, and know their foul corruption, profane pretensions and hypocrisy; are acquainted with their systems of poor-houses, poor-farms, prisons, houses of correction, asylums and hospitals, and with their misery and degradation.

In the heterogenous mass of a population hastily thrown together from every nation, kindred, tongue and people, let us pursue that course which comprises the elements of a nation's prosperity, greatness and glory, and spurn the course which engenders the above disastrous results. Avoiding the track which grinds the face of the poor to elevate the rich. Let us bestow our charity not so much to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, as to cause them to feed and clothe themselves, and lead the people to practise virtue, to walk in the paths of honesty and truth, not so much by the fear of punishment, prisons and penalties, as by implanting in their bosoms an abiding and ever-increasing love for those pure principles which induce to honor, prosperity, salvation and exaltation in this life, and which will clothe them with the riches of eternity in the life to come.

Build school houses instead of jails, and make our religion effective in dispensing with the use of courts and jurors, prisoners and prisons; have no lawyers, because there is no litigation; no doctors, because there are no sick; no hospitals or asylums, because there are no invalids. The Saints of the Most High God should sustain themselves by their industry, economy and sobriety; their health by their virtue, prudence, cleanliness, faith and observances of the holy ordinances; and their morals by the love they bear to their God and their holy religion. They should be united that they may be powerful, and enjoy the blessings of peace and quietness at home and abroad.

Notwithstanding the efforts that have been made to manufacture iron and to make sugar from the beet, as yet no available results have been realized; yet we expect to continue our efforts until these objects are fully accomplished. It is believed that every obstacle in the way of making iron will be removed, when steam can be brought to supply the place of the water power which frequently fails in time of need. We have an engine here now that is of sufficient size to furnish the requisite power; if the Company make use of this, through its aid we hope to be fully supplied with that useful and indispensable article, iron.

We have been delayed in making sugar mainly through the failure of the beet crop for the two last seasons, the grasshoppers destroying the seed last year to such a degree that sufficient seed could not be raised for this year's sowing. We trust, through the blessing of the Lord, that no failure of the kind will again thwart our wishes, and that we shall soon be able to furnish, from the beet, sugar sufficient for home consumption; we are sanguine that this can be done, and it is our purpose to continue our labors in this enterprise until it is fully accomplished.

Considerable quantities of leather are now manufactured in this Territory, though not quite sufficient to supply the wants of the people; the same may be said in relation to the manufacture of many other articles, such as hats, jeans, linsey, flannel, blankets, shawls, &c.; but we are mainly deficient in supplying ourselves with cotton and linen goods, and are quite negligent in raising cotton and flax.

The Territory furnishes localities suitable for raising both those commodities in great abundance, and it is our earnest desire that those acquainted with their culture should make it their business, until our markets are fully supplied therewith. Also raise indigo, hemp, make ropes, cord and thread, and extract oil from the seed of the flax and cotton, and from the castor oil bean. And let our brethren who have the means, bring on cotton and woollen machinery, that we may be enabled to manufacture our own goods, as fast as we shall be able to supply ourselves with the raw material; also bring the best selections of horses, cattle and sheep.

Cultivate the thorn, osage orange and meskete for hedges, the cottonwood and locust for ornament, and, in suitable locations, for wood and timber which they make rapidly, and the mulberry for silk. Both forward and cultivate all kinds of fruit and other seeds and grafts; plant trees, shrubbery, vines, &c., for ornament and use; cultivate the best varieties, including grapes, currants, gooseberries, strawberries, the various kinds of grasses, indigo, madder, and everything calculatad to cheer and please the heart, delight the eye, and make glad and agreeable the homes of the Saints.

In the vicinity of Los Vegas a very extensive and rich vein of lead ore has been discovered, and is now being successfully worked by our enterprising citizens. Judging from the description, it is the most extensive vein of galena ever discovered, and specimens of the portion being mined for smelting yield a large per cent. of lead. From this prolific source we shall soon be abundantly supplied with lead, and we wish our manufacturers of lead pipe, sheeting, white and red lead and other useful articles made from that metal, to prepare themselves, as soon as practicable, to supply all such articles from our own resources.

Let those report themselves to us in person, or by letter, who are acquainted with working in lead, iron, coal, or boring therefor; who are acquainted with raising or manufacturing cotton, flax and hemp, and with making oil, nails, steel, glass, &c., that we may classify our labor and bring forth from the native elements those things which contribute to the benefit of man.

We say unto our mechanics, press onward in your labors; be not disheartened, but continue to supply the community with your wares and fabrics, with leather, boots, shoes, hats, caps, muffs, robes, soap, candles, glue, shoe pegs, saleratus, alum, saltpetre, pitch, tar, turpentine, oil, furniture, and labor saving machinery. Let the farmers encourage the mechanics, with their best patronage, and let each promote their own by seeking their brother's interest.

Fathers, learn your children to practice industry, teach your sons agriculture or some useful mechanical trade.

Mothers in Israel, you also are called upon to bring up your daughters to pursue some useful avocation for a sustenance, that when they shall become the wives of the Elders of Israel, who are frequently called upon missions or to devote their time and attention to the things of the kingdom, they may be able to sustain themselves and their offspring. Learn them to sew, spin and weave; to cultivate vegetables, as well as flowers; to make soap, as well as cakes and preserves; to spin, color, weave and knit, as well as work embroidery; to milk, make butter and cheese, and work in the kitchen, as well as in the parlor.—Thus will you and your daughters show yourselves approved, and prove helpmeets in very deed, not only in the domestic relations but in building up the kingdom.

Very creditable was the exhibition of some productions at the Annual State Fair, which came off on the 1st, 2nd and 3d, of October, but we trust it will be far exceeded another year. It encourages a commendable rivalry, and excites an emulation for the general good.

Owing to the irregularities of the eastern mail, our agents and correspondents will duplicate their letters by way of San Pedro, California, each winter. And we caution one and all that, unless they personally attend to the mailing of their letters and documents, the duplicates, as was the case last season, though plainly directed, will not be forwarded as ordered. We gave our eastern agents the same instructions last year and they complied therewith, so far as mailing duplicates with the proper direction, but originals and duplicates came in the same mail sacks in the spring, evidencing that some postmasters are as indifferent in regard to the performance of their duties, as some mail contractors are of theirs.

We cannot close this Epistle, without congratulating ourselves, the Saints and the inhabitants of this wide spread Territory, with the general health of the people, the prosperity which attends our efforts, the quietness and peace everywhere predominant. No record of crime enlivens the court yards and jails; no convictions and sentences of courts send, to desolate homes, anguish and despair; nor yet do unblushing offenders walk our streets unpunished, requiring the aid of a Vigilance Committee to rid our Territory of their unwelcome presence.

Fortune or rather Providence has indeed favored us by spreading before the eager gaze of the world's cupidity the talisman of wealth, the hope of earthly riches, at a distance from these sequestered vales and placed mighty barriers between—though we inherit the most uninviting portion of the earth we feel happy that the temptations of gold and this world's power beckon their votaries and seekers to another bourne, from whence no such traveler finds inducements to return, leaving us to enjoy in these peaceful retreats that quiet and freedom from the wicked and ungodly, which we have so earnestly sought.

When such characters find themselves in our midst, the barren prospects for any considerable degree of success and the glitter of gold a little farther on soon relieve us, our courts and criminal calender, of their hated and unwelcome presence. Never before were the Saints so faverably situated to cleanse the flock from the half-hearted and apostate spirits and the imps of satan, who follow after us only to destroy. One or two seasons, and they begin to feel their way out, rightly judging that this is no place for them. Their corrupt desires, intentions and acts are soon made manifest, and the inducements to remain with a righteous people are too few.

Therefore, while we gather, like the net which was cast into the sea, from every nation, kindred, tongue and people of every kind, we also sift them out like the winnowing of wheat upon the summer's threshing floor. We have sought peace and freedom from the power of wicked and designing men, and measurably have found it. We have put forth our hand to gather out the honest in heart from among the nations, and are rapidly accomplishing our object. We are attempting to build up cities, towns and villages unto the most High God, pure and holy in His sight, and surely expect, through His aid and blessing, to be successful.

When we look upon the advancing hosts of Israel and consider their rapid improvement in faith, knowledge, good works, influence, power and constantly accumulating numbers, we feel to thank the Lord for His goodness, even Him who hath brought forth salvation and caused light to spring up upon the earth. We feel grateful that we have been permitted to live in this day and generation, in which the Great Jehovah has seen proper to re-establish His authority upon the earth, and to re-confer the holy and eternal priesthood upon the children of men.

We feel grateful that we have the privilege of witnessing the stately steppings of the Almighty among the nations, the goings forth of His word with power, the fulfilment of the words given by inspiration in ancient times and the fulfilment of the words given by the living Oracles in our midst; that He has spoken from the heavens; that messengers, angels and legates from His throne have broken the silence that has intervened since the mission and dispensation of the only begotten Son of God, Jesus of Nazareth, and re-opened a communication with his children upon this His earth, organized again His Church and Kingdom and endowed it with all the authorities, ordinances, gifts, sacraments, blessings, privileges, power and glory pertaining thereunto.

We rejoice that the words which have gone forth from the ancient Prophets, and from Jesus, Joseph and the Apostles, do not return void, neither are like sounding brass or tinkling cymbals; for behold, the Lord of hosts, through the faithfulness, energy and perseverance of His servants, has faithfully warned and is warning the people. In the spirit of meekness and humility have they declared the gospel unto them, wherefore are their skirts clear of their blood, and they are left without excuse before the Lord, to reap the reward of their inquity, to experience the calamities which are abroad in the earth, to feel the wrath, the withering, bitter anguish which the justice of a justly incensed and offended Creator will pour out upon them. They have set at naught the words of His servants, scoffed at and held them in derision; have trodden upon the young and tender plant which the Lord Almighty has planted, and done despite unto the words of life and salvation which He has caused to be proclaimed in their ears. They have ignominiously slain His Prophets and wasted away His people, His faithful Saints, whose blood cries unto Him from the ground for vengeance.

Their long, hypocritical prayers, lip-service, pretended piety and idolatrous worship have become an abomination before Him; wherefore will He proceed to bring upon them the judgments which have been foretold by His servants the Prophets, and great will be the desolation thereof. Their great and mighty nations, empires and kingdoms, with all the pride, pomp and power thereof, will be broken and crumbled in pieces and come to nought. Their cities will become a howling waste, a solitary place, wherein shall be found the wolf and the vulture, and no man shall be found an inhabitant therein. Yea, verily, He will empty the earth of the wicked and those who work abominations in His sight, so shall the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, so shall the Lord prepare the way for His coming and reign upon the earth.

Let the Church, therefore, prepare as a bride to receive her bridegroom; let the Saints have on their wedding garments and have their lamps well supplied with oil, trimmed and burning; let all things be made ready for the reception of our Saviour and Redeemer, even our Lord the Christ. Let all the Saints throughout the world live their religion, that they may be worthy to enjoy his presence and have converse with the angels of our God; let them gird up their loins and step forth in the power and might of Elijah's God to do battle in this great cause, and armed with High Heaven's panoply, even the armor of salvation and the helmet of righteousness, go forth conquering and to conquer, until the gospel shall be sounded to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, and the pure in heart, the meek of the earth, the Israel of our God, be gathered out from the wicked nations and brought to inherit and worship under their own vines and fig trees, and learn of Him whose glory will rest upon his Temple as a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night.

Signs of Prosperity.

The following lines are from the Chinese:

Where spades grow bright, and idle words grow dull;
Where goals are empty, and where barns are full;
Where church paths are with frequent feet outworn;
Law courtyards weedy, silent and forlorn;
Where doctors foot it, and where farmers ride;
Where age abounds, and youth is multiplied;
Where these signs are, they clearly indicate
A happy people and well governed State.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1857.

A Trip to Connecticut and a Ramble among the Manufactories.

BEING desirous to inhale a mouthful of fresh air, and to get rid of the smoke, bustle, din, commotion and hurrry, connected with the rustling, bustling, confused and confounding city of Gotham, we tore ourself away from the carts, drays, carriages, omnibuses, newsboys, street-crossing sweepers, ranters, roarers, bawlers, mist and mud of this great Babel, and getting aboard of the New York and New Haven cars, soon found ourself attached to the rollicking, snorting iron horse, which, after a little whistling, puffing and blowing, a renewed draught of the limpid stream, and gorging himself with living coals, applied his iron sinews to the task before him; rushed furiously on over his metal track, plunging through mountain and dell, and dashing like a firey meteor by copse, wood, town and village—traversing hills, plains and ravines, darting over streams and rivers, on, on, on—laughing at time and space, and leaving far far in the distance the city of a hundred spires.

We soon found ourselves approaching the land of steady habits, and there flitted before our imagination witches, hobgoblins and ghosts, Puritanic homilies, whipped beer barrels, clam soup, rye cakes, oyster stews, pumpkin pies, and wooden nutmegs. Passing these, we reflected upon the Pilgrim Fathers—those hardy pioneers, who defied alike the dreary desert, the whoop of the fierce red man, and the roar of the British lion; who, in the name of God and "Continental Congress," dared do or die. They now slumber—peace to their ashes, which now mix with those of the red man of the forest, and their shades mingle with those of King Philip and his brave compeers—if not in their pleasant hunting grounds, at least in the spirit world, probably talking over their chivalric deeds and recounting ancient feuds, their fierce struggles, the rise and fall of empires and the decadence of the red man. But what of the old Simon-pure "Deaun-easter?" It is true he sleeps, but he has left behind him a name and posterity which for tact, energy, and enterprise, has won a world-wide celebrity; and whose matter-of-fact good common sense, inventive genius, mechanical and manufacturing skill, are known to the ends of the earth. And what of their Barnums, their guessers and calculators, their knick-knacks, wooden clocks, Yankee notions and other fixins? These are merely so much seasoning thrown in. And while Barnum exhibits, or the shrewd pedlar treats his customers to a Yankee trick, the crowd admires, the clocks move on, the cotton spindles perform their revolutions—the shirts, the paper, the cotton, the carriages, the hats, the locks, and other notions, are still manufactured—and the real simon-pure Jonathan, in Connecticut, thrusts his hands into the bottom of his breeches pockets and says, "By Gosh, I swow if I aint some on this ere airth," and he jogs on, whistling "Yankee Doodle."

We stayed at Norwalk, the place of our destination, and were kindly received by Bro. Bradley, who, with a genuine feeling of hospitality, seemed desirous to make our stay as comfortable as possible. We also had the pleasure of greeting many of our brethren and sisters, who hastened, on hearing of our arrival, to bid us welcome. We found the Saints all doing well, and appointed a meeting at Westport on the Sunday. Next morning, Bro. Bradley took us to see a lock factory, a very extensive concern, where beautiful locks of almost every kind and quality are manufactured, aided by machinery of the very best construction and most ingenious contrivance. They have a large foundry for the castings, which are really elegantly executed. The keys, which are mostly of brass, the springs, and all the fittings and mountings, with very few exceptions, are all manufactured there. The knobs used for door locks are made principally of clay, in a pottery close by; these, after being formed and stamped, are coated with a species of varnish, and have, when baked in a kiln, very much the appearance of curled mahogany, French polished; besides these, however, they have others of porcelain. The whole works, which are very large, are in excellent order—and, from the casting, through all the various and complicated filings, fittings and furnishing, even to the packing up, are admirably arranged and systematized; and from the number made, one would suppose there were enough to keep all the rogues honest, not only in New York, but in all Connecticut. The Company is known as the "Norwalk Lock Company," and the works are owned by a chartered company. The establishment is certainly a credit, not only to its enterprising proprietors, but also to the beautiful town of Norwalk.

Bro. Young, cotton manufacturer at Westport, met us, by appointment, at twelve o'clock, and after eating an excellent oyster stew and other "fixins," we started with him, in his carriage, to view some other manufacturing establishments in the neighborhood. Our first call was at a shirt manufactory. We had always been in the habit of looking at these establishments as something belonging exclusively to the female gender, and that we were indebted to the softer sex alone for our neatly cut, square, rounded, straight-out, or turned-over collars and wristbands, our stiff, starched, glazed and shining ditto, our tastefully worked bosoms, and the magnificent tout ensemble of this very useful and almost essential article, the chemise. And this to a great extent is the fact. Almost all the details of the varied manipulations of this extensive works are performed by women—black eyed, blue eyed, hazel eyed, real Yankee ladies, genuine Downeasters—of whom there are about three thousand employed—a few in the works, but the majority in the country for many miles around. But the presiding genius in this establishment is man; and we could not but think, that if the ladies had made encroachments in the way of pantaloon, vest and coat making, that the gentlemen here had made a sad innovation upon woman's province, woman's rights and labor; and the question suggested itself to our mind, Where is Mrs. Lucy Stone Blackwell? Not that we had any fault to find in the arrangement, for it is excellent, ingenious, and complete in all its parts, and we think suggested one lesson at least, "That the man is not perfect without the woman, nor the woman without the man;" that when they unite their labors and intelligence, there is a beautiful, harmonious whole, that neither can attain singly.

The building of this establishment is not only large and elegant outside, but admirably adapted and arranged inside for the various manipulations in the manufacturing process. There is the store-room for the reception of the cotton and linen goods, appropriate places for the placing of different qualities of fabrics, the cutters' room, the room for the sewing machines, the starching room, the washing room, the ironing room, the room for the giving out, and the room for the receiving of shirts or parts of shirts when made; each one peculiarly adapted to the use for which it is appropriated.

Mr. Hoyt, the very gentlemanly manager as well as partner in the concern, showed us very much civility, and took a great deal of pains in showing us through his extensive establishment. He informed us that they imported all their linens direct from Ireland, and had the contractor bound under a penalty of $5000 that it should all be pure linen. Some of their linen was printed; this was done in Germany, where it was sent from Ireland. The cotton goods are manufactured in the States, and those used are generally of a very good quality. Mr. Hoyt is a strong advocate for home manufactures, and informed us that he could obtain cotton fabrics of as good a quality, if not better, in this country than in England. He showed us a piece of cotton cloth, cut off from a piece they had manufactured for their own use, which he informed us the premium was obtained for, both at the World's Fair in London and in New York.

Men were employed in cutting out the shirts; they used cast iron patterns, and cut out one dozen at a time. A great many sewing machines were in active operation. The washing and starching were each in busy process. They used steam for boiling their water, and an engine for propelling a centrifugal machine for drying them, in some of their primary moves. They had cylindrical stoves fashioned on purpose to receive and heat a great number of flat irons for the use of a numerous bevy of beautiful laundresses, and then a peculiar kind of iron, with leverage applied, for the purpose of pressing and giving an elegant finish and shape to shirt collars. There was a most perfect system everywhere developed, and an exquisite neatness displayed in all the arrangements.

The stitching and common sewing is done by machines, the button-holes worked, the buttons put on, and many other et ceteras performed by the afore-mentioned three thousand ladies. There is one feature in the establishment that certainly does credit to the managers as well as to the State. They do not make an inferior article. Their goods are not made to sell alone, they are made for bona fide use. They use a very large capital, buy at the best markets, do not "sell less than cost," nor profess to, but maintain their price. We could not but notice a strange contrast between our Yankee neighbors and a large print works we visited in this State a few weeks ago. In the latter, where millions of yards of calico were yearly, perhaps monthly, struck off, imitation patterns were got up; and for the paltry saving of from one to two cents per yard, dye stuffs of an inferior quality were used. A dishonorable advantage, through their means, is frequently taken of ignorant purchasers, an odium cast upon American manufactures, and purchasers driven to a foreign market. We were therefore very much pleased with the high-toned, honorable course pursued by this Connecticut establishment. Furthermore, the workwomen would not at all answer the miserable description given in the very notable and pathetic song of "The Shirt." They were generally hale, healthy, lively, neat and well-dressed, good-looking women, with a total absence of care and anxiety in their manner, or pallid languor or want depicted in their countenances. Many of them in this establishment obtained from four to eight, and some as high as ten and twelve dollars per week; and thrifty farmers' and mechanics' wives and daughters throughout the country find it to their advantage, at their own firesides, to assist in contributing their moiety of labor to this mammoth shirt establishment. One fact we must notice. We were always of the opinion that we must necessarily be indebted to Europe for embroidery. Mr. Hoyt informed us that this is not the case; but that right here in Yankeedom they can do work of a superior quality cheaper than they can import it from Europe, and that one young lady at this particular branch of business drew annually for her services upwards of $500. They have a large wholesale store in New York.

We visited a hat manufactory; but as this was conducted on the old style, there was nothing worthy of remark. We were informed of a large factory that was propelled by steam, but did not go to it. Some attempts had been made to make hats out of felt cloth, by stamping it; but, although they could put it into form, it would not stay put, but in waywardness refused to remain a hat, and returned again to the original cloth; preferring altogether to be worn on the back, than on the head. We had read some rather hard stories in Barnums life about the Danbury hatters and storekeepers cheating each other: as Danbury is not far distant from Norwalk we inquired if his description was true, and whether the hatters in Norwalk were of that class. We were informed that they might have been in Barnums time, but that now they were all honest.

We next visited a felt cloth manufactory, which is also an extensive concern. It is owned by a company, and is known by the name of "The Union Manufacturing Company."

Mr. Bishop, who is the manager, was the first inventor of this process and has obtained a patent, has visited Europe and disposed of numerous rights to our trans-atlantic brethren. He seems to be the presiding genius, and as, we were informed, is reaping a rich reward for his inventive genius and manufacturing talent, which is likewise affording remunerative returns to his associates in business. Another establishment not far distant, we were informed pay two cents per yard, on all they manufacture, for the privilege of using their patent.

Mr. Bishop was very courteous and obliging, and took a great deal of pains in showing us everything in his factory; as part of the works were out of order, however, we had not the opportunity of seeing the practical operations of all the machinery.

In the manufacture of felt cloth the spinning and weaving are entirely dispensed with, the process of dying, fulling, carding, brushing, napping, cutting and finishing are, we were informed, just the same as in other cloth manufactories.

In composing the felt there are two large carding machines, placed in an angular position, so that the rolls which come out lengthway from each card cross one another at right angles; thus forming the warp and the weft; which by an ingenious mechanical contrivance is perfectly adjusted and regularly laid; thus crossing the fibers of the wool, almost similar to weaving. It is then taken and placed between two large iron plates, which move with a short quick motion; steam is also admitted, the fibre of the wool is thus knit, and cemented together by the friction, aided by the damp and heat produced by the steam. It is then pulled, dyed, stretched and brushed; and passes through all the various finishing processes that other cloth is subject to.

The cloth produced, which is of a coarse quality, has the appearance of being really very excellent, and is very much cheaper than cloth of the same quality produced in the ordinary way. We were shown many beautiful specimens, and were assured that it was equal, in every respect, for coat cloths, to that produced by the spinning and weaving process. Mr. Bishop related a laughable incident. One of the directors, who had rather old fogy notions, was inveighing unceremoniously against the cloth, and said, "No matter what others might think about it, he would not wear it." A gentleman present, believing the coat he had on was of their manufacture, unobserved to him took a knife, and scraping off the nap, discovered in reality that it was their own manufacture, and asked him why he, of all others, wore a coat of that kind.

"Me! I would not wear the stuff on any consideration."

"But the coat you have on is of that stuff!"

"My coat! Why this is a pilot cloth that I bought at Mr. ———, and gave five dollars a yard for."

"But, sir, Mr. —— bought your pilot here, and gave two dollars and sixty cents for it."

The machinery and works are valued at one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. They have a water-wheel of eighty horse-power and a steam engine of one hundred and twenty-five horse-power; they use 30 cwt. of wool per day, and manufacture sixty pieces of cloth. With some improvements, now making, they expect to use two tons of wool per day.

Our next visit was to a paper mill, about two miles out of Norwalk; this is also owned by a company. The superintendant and principal shareholder, however, is a Mr. Jonathan Camp, an elderly, humorous and jovial gentleman, a regular out-and-out democrat, who seems to appreciate highly the inaugural, the selection of the Cabinet, and general moves of Mr. Buchanan, and who is perfectly satisfied, not only from his own reasoning on the subject, but also from the testimony of Col. Benton, who has been lecturing in this neighborhood, and who informed him, that Col. Fremont had neither the experience nor stamina for President. Mr. Camp is a very respectable gentleman, and a man of some prominence in the Democratic ranks. He was lately nominated for High Sheriff, but, owing to some thimble-rigging, which sometimes takes place even among the pure, unterrified Democracy, some advantage was taken of some diffident remarks made by him in relation to his abilities, and his name was withdrawn.

The mill is propelled by a water wheel of about sixty horse power, and a powerful spring of excellent water furnishes them with the means of washing. A great many of the rags used are imported from Holland. The rags are sorted by women into several different qualities; they are then cut by a machine and dusted; afterwards they are placed in a large cylindrical boiler, and undergo a chemical process under a pressure of steam of about eighty pounds to the inch pressure. This removes the mordant; that body which gives fixety to the dyes, they are then placed in a machine to wash. They go from that to the engine, where they come in contact with a quick rotary motion of knives, which not only beats and cleanses but cuts them; after being reduced to what is called half pulp, they then undergo another chemical process, and are placed in watertight stone vats, the pulp then becomes white, and is again transferred to another engine, or engines, where it revolves continuously, and is beat, bruised and cut, by the knives in revolution, until it is considered ready for the use of paper. When the pulp is thus prepared it is conveyed to a cistern, from which it is pumped into a paper machine, an ingeniously contrived piece of mechanism, composed of sieves and a variety of rollers, some for carrying forward the pulp, others for squeezing and giving solidity and power to the paper; others for drying it; others for glazing or polishing. So perfect is this machine that the material goes in as a thin watery looking pulp, and comes out in a continuous webb of beautiful paper. It is then by the same machine cut into any required size, where it drops down, and is adjusted by a girl. It is certainly a strange transformation to have the dirty rags go in at one end of the manufactury and the clean white paper emerge from the other. Mr. Camp informed us that with one of these machines they could make as much paper in one day as they could in a month by the old process. He also stated that he manufactured for the Daily News, Frank Leslie's Illustrated News, and from what we could gather he had also supplied paper for THE MORMON. We left very much pleased with our visit.

We were told of a Straw Hat manufactory, at which there were three thousand hands employed, but as it was not in operation we did not visit it.

We made diligent inquiries for a manufactory of wooden nutmegs, pumpkin-seeds or hams, but we could obtain no satisfactory answer, all seemed perfectly oblivious to any such thing. One gentleman did indeed tell us that when out of the State, on saying, in a store, that he was from Yankee land; the store-keeper showed him a jar of wooden nutmegs, that he had purchased some years ago, from a Yankee pedlar; that they were a good counterfeit, and he at first mistook them for the genuine article.

Upon the whole our visit made a favorable impression upon our mind. What we saw was tangible, real, useful, and substantial; and of what we had heard there was no proof, and although we did not give as much credence to the Yankee stories as some profess to give to the stories about the Mormons, we found that if we had we should have been as much deceived as strangers are in visiting the Mormons and seeing for themselves. Sunday we met the brethren at Bro. Young's, near Westport, found the Saints doing well, and had a good time.

Utah.

WE are much pleased at being able to inform our readers of the arrival of the Utah mail. The letter of Colonel Smith shows the severity of the weather that the mail conductors had to contend with on the plains, and the many obstacles to overcome in such a late trip in an unusually severe winter. We are assured that the Saints will be pleased to peruse the Fourteenth General Epistle of the First Presidency of the Church; we trust they may drink into the Spirit of the prophets in Zion, more and more, and labor to be ready to engage in the great work of human redemption and exaltation as the Lord in His providence may afford them increased opportunities of usefulness.

We have considered it due to the memory of such a faithful minister of the Lord as President Jedediah M. Grant, to publish from the Deseret News his obituary entire with the order of his funeral, and the resolutions of respect voted by the inhabitants of Great Salt Lake City, in which we cordially join. His labors were extensive in the States as well as in Utah, and will remain an eternal testimony of his faithfulness and diligence in the work of Salvation.

There is no great news by the present mail. From private letters we learn of the onward progress of the reformation, and the consequent good spirit that prevails throughout the Territory.

The Bible Missionary had received a hearty welcome, and President Young had expressed from the public stand his cordial approval of the steps he had taken for the dissemination of "the printed Word," and encouraged the people possessed of means, who required copies of the Bible, to purchase for themselves, that the more needy might receive the gratuitous copies the missionary had for distribution.

Elder Phineas H Young.

ELDER YOUNG writes us from Boston on the 16th inst. Since his arrival there from Liverpool, two weeks ago, he has been preaching among the folks, and reports a good feeling and considerable interest in Mormonism. He speaks favorably of the labors of Elder Clary and the Saints under his charge. Bro. Young was to leave Boston on Wednesday, for Iowa City.

Obsequies of Dr. Kane.

THE mortal remains of this great man were interred at Laurel Hill Cemetry on the 12th instant. The highest respect for him has been manifested in every place through which his corpse was brought from Havana to Philadelphia. No greater demonstrations of admiration and affection could have been paid to man than was witnessed in the Quaker City on the day of his interment. The funeral car was surmounted with a canopy and dome having the flags of England, France, Spain and the United States at the corners. The procession, civic and military, was very lengthy, and composed of men of the highest standing in society. Peace to his ashes.

The Mirror and the Herald.

For some time back these two papers have been dabbling at each other's business. The Mirror seemed to get in a tight place last week through the publication in the Herald of a communication about a business transaction in which the morality and treasury of the Mirror did not shine to the best advantage for a high reputation. After threatening a public chastisement to the Herald's contributor, the Mirror succeeded in thinly whitewashing the affair. Without taking sides with either, we feel a little inclined to ask Col. Fuller if he does not think it would be better in times to come for him and some of his scribblers to cease dabbling in scandel about Utah and adopt—the Mormon Creed—"Mind your own business"—for certainly the Mirror may calculate we shall not soon forget the cheap advertisements. There is some prospect of a duel between the Colonel and the Herald's informant.—So things finish in Gotham.

Governorship of Utah.

MAJOR BEN MCCULLOCH, of Texas, has been tendered the Governorship of Utah, but declines.—[New York Herald, March 16.

[We have not the pleasure of Major Mc Culloch's acquaintence, nor do we know more of the offer alluded to than in the above; but we should think the Major is a very sensible gentleman—ED.

No action will be taken at present on the subject of the Governorship of Utah.—[New York Herald, March 19.

A New Officer for Utah.

MR. TURNEY NELSON, of Indiana, has been appointed Superintendant of Indian affairs for the Territory of Utah.

Judge Appleby.

ELDER APPLEBY returned from Long Island on Monday, and left on Wednesday evening for Washington, D. C.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

DURING President Buchanan's visit to Washington, a short time preceding the inauguration, he and a number of intimate friends got suddenly sick in the hotel where he was residing; it oozed out at the time, though little credited, that poison was the cause of the sickness. Every one had surmisings, and at last a statement of the facts has come out. The hotel being infested with rats, recourse was had to kill them off by strchnine. The rats took the dose and fled to the water tank, drank and left their bodies in the liquid. The then President elect had a small share of the troubled water; others less fortunate have suffered severely, and two or more have died. The Board of Health is now making a thorough investigation at the Hotel.

Gov. Geary, of Kansas, has resigned office, and is on his way to Washington. He vacates the gubernatorial chair because the late general government has not sustained him in militia and money as promised. During the short tenure of his office he has advanced out of his own pocket $12,000, of the return of which there is poor prospects. The Governor states in his farewell message what has all along been alleged—the troubles in Kansas have mainly sprung from ambitious schemers who had not a particle of interest in the welfare of the Territory.

Lord Napier, the British Ambassador, has presented his credentials to President Buchanan, and was very cordially received. His Lordship was exceedingly pleased at being selected by Her Majesty Victoria to express to the President of this great nation how much she was pleased at the amicable feeling that existed between the two governments, and how much she hoped the same might forever exist, and Mr. Buchanan was as happy to welcome the Ambassador, and again renew diplomatic relations with a resident minister at Washington. On both sides the utmost urbanity and respect was manifested.

There has been another shocking murder in New York. A St. Domingo negro, from motives unknown, cut the throat of a poor unfortunate girl of ill-fame. He is alleged to have been intoxicated, and in meeting her in the alley way close to where he resides, committed the murder. The week before, an inhuman monster of a husband murdered his wife, beating her to death. A few girls have committed suicide—disappointment in love. Some months ago we noticed that two emigrant girls, on their arrival in the City of Brooklyn from Liverpool, had been decoyed by land sharks, and outraged. One of the accused has had an eight-days' trial, and been found guilty of rape. His counsel having asked time to prepare a bill of exceptions—judgment has been differred.

Conference at Philadelphia.

THE Saints composing the Philadelphia Conference, will meet in the capacity of a Conference, the last Sunday in March, at Washington Hall, corner of Eighth and Spring Garden streets, Philadelphia.

The representatives of the branches of that Conference will meet with President Angus M. Cannon the evening preceding the Conference.

Reflections on the Departure of President Jedediah Morgan Grant.

BY E. B. SNOW.

He's gone, 'tis true, but yet, he is not dead:
Such men as Jedediah do not die.
Death came as a swift messenger from God,
And cut the thread that bound the mantle of Mortality around him, and he shook
It off, a senseless, lifeless mass of earth.
It fill'd its sphere in life—he honor'd it,
Keeping it pure from all defilement; and
He sanctified it as a temple for
The Holy Ghost, in which it truly dwelt.

He needs no eulogy to speak his worth—
His works—his faithfulness eclipse all praise.
His life personified integrity:
Few such men live—few such have ever liv'd.

The world, to cover up, and hide its own
Cold-hearted selfishness, oft will applaud
The merciful, but who applauds the just?
He had the moral courage to be just,
And he was just as well as merciful.

Some say that Jedediah's gone to rest.
They mean mortality, not him. To rest?
No: J. M. Grant could never rest, and leave
His fellow-lab'rers here to tug and toil—
Spend and be spent, to move the mighty ship
Of Zion on. No, no: that never was
His calling. He will never rest, until
Zion's redeem'd—Jerusalem built up—
Iniquity destroy'd, and satan bound.
He'll not relax in faith and diligence
Until his brethren shall with him partake
The promis'd blessings of a glorious rest.

He boldly fought the pow'rs of darkness here
And he'll oppose them there, with all his might;
Till satan and his hosts are overcome—
Till truth and righteousness on earth shall reign.

We know he's gone! We feel it deeply, too;
But wherefore should we mourn? He only liv'd
For Zion here—he lives for Zion still.
He lives, and lives where the gross, cumbrous clog
Of frail mortality cannot impede
The steady progress of his upward course.

He's gone with all the gospel armor on;
And where he'll fight the battles of the Lord,
With even greater pow'r and skill than he
Was wont to do while cloth'd with mortal flesh.

His earthly tenement lies folded in
The arms of death, to decompose, and soon,
As fire to fire—water to water, so
Each portion to its native element
Will be return'd. The pure, invisible,
Eternal part—that's destin'd to inhabit
His glorious, resurrected tenement;
Secure from all alloy—secure from all
Amalgamation with each grade and kind
Of earthly substances; will, in God's own
Repository, be preserv'd until
The resurrection morning, whose blest dawn
Already sheds on us a cheering beam.

Wake up, ye Saints, and be alive to God—
"Live your religion"—keep your armor bright—
Unsheath the sword and be in readiness.
Let all the pure, be purer still; and let
Th' impure, girded with sackcloth, now make haste
To purify themselves. Let all, as Saints,
Seek wisdom at the hand of God, and thro'
The counsel of his servants on the earth;
And thus obey the inspiration of
The Holy Ghost, thro' him, the absent one,
And thro' the mighty ones that now remain,
And be prepar'd for what is just at hand.

G. S. L. CITY, Dec. 4, 1856.

Obituary.

From the Deseret News, December 10.

PRESIDENT JEDEDIAH MORGAN GRANT, who died at his residence in Great Salt Lake City, at 20 minutes past 10 P. M. of December 1st, 1856, was the son of Joshua and Thalia Grant; and was born in Windsor, Broome county, New York, on the 21st day of February, 1816.

He was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder John F. Boyington, on the 21st of March, 1833.

In 1834 he went to Missouri with the company of Saints styled "Zion's Camp," and, in the fatigues, privations, trying scenes and arduous labors endured by that handful of valiant men, exhibited a goodly portion, for one so young, of that integrity, zeal and unwavering effort and constancy in behalf of the cause of truth, that have so invariably characterized his life.

On his return from that mission he was ordained an Elder, and on the 22d of May, 1835, went forth among the people preaching the gospel and baptizing, in company with Elder Harvey Stanly.

In the winter of 1835–6 he assisted in the labors upon the Temple in Kirtland, Ohio; and, after receiving his blessings, started, April 13th, 1836, on a mission to the States east of that place. During this mission, most of his time was spent in the State of New York, where he preached much in various places and baptized 23 persons in Fallsburg, one of whom was his brother Austin, and several in other localities; and returned to Kirtland on the 6th of March, 1837.

He again left Kirtland on the 6th of June, 1837, and passing through Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, and so on, preaching by the way, arrived in North Carolina, where he faithfully proclaimed the principles of eternal truth in court houses, chapels, and other places of assembly, and held discussions with the Methodists, in which he was signally successful in overpowering the reasonings and foul aspersions of error.

On the 9th of October, 1838, he once more started for Missouri, and arrived in Far West on the 12th of November. At this time he visited his brother George D. Grant, to whom he had on a former occasion, first introduced the gospel, and who was then in Richmond jail with the Prophet Joseph and others, imprisoned on account of their religious faith. December 25th of the above year, driven out by bigotry and intolerance, he left Far West with his father's family, whom he located in Knox county, Illinois, and remained preaching and baptizing in that vicinity during four months.

On the 12th of May, 1839, he went to Commerce, (afterwards Nauvoo,) stayed there three days and proceeded to Quincy, where a conference was held on the 1st of June, at which he was appointed a mission to Virginia and North Carolina. He labored extensively in those States upwards of three years, preaching day and night, baptizing many, and building up Branches; and, having fulfilled his mission with honor to himself, to the cause, and to his God, he left in the fall of 1842, "recommended by the Saints and hundreds of worthy citizens."—[Times and Seasons, Vol. 4, page 63.

In June, 1843, he was sent to preside over the Branch in Philadelphia, and returned to Nauvoo in March, 1844.

On the 9th of May he started from Nauvoo in company with Elders Wilford Woodruff and George A. Smith, whom he accompanied through Illinois, preaching as opportunity offered, and returned and was in Nauvoo at the period of the martyrdom of the Prophets Joseph and Hyrum.

He married Miss Caroline Vandyke in Nauvoo, July 2, 1844, Bishop Newel K. Whitney officiating.

He bore the tidings of the Prophets' massacre to the Twelve and brethren in the Eastern States, and resumed his station of presiding in Philadelphia, whither he took his wife, and where he wrote and published several truthful and cutting strictures upon the doctrines and course of Sidney Rigdon and his followers.

In May, 1845, he returned to Nauvoo, where, on the 12th of the following December, he received his endowment in the House of the Lord, and diligently assisted in conferring that great blessing upon many others.

In February, 1846, he shared with the Saints in their exodus from Nauvoo, and with them turned his back upon the tyrannical oppression of professedly civilized and Christianized Illinois, to seek a new and peaceful asylum amid the fastnesses and barren wastes of the mountains.

He started from Winter Quarters (Florence) during the winter of 1846–7, on a short mission to the Eastern States, where he bought the cloth for a mammoth flag, transacted other important business, and returned in the succeeding June and was appointed Captain of the 3d Hundred of the emigrating Saints, which he led to this valley, arriving in the forepart of the October following.

In October, 1848, with characteristic energy and promptness, he went beyond Fort Bridger, with several men and teams, met Prest. Willard Richards and company, and assisted them in.

He was elected Brigadier General of the 1st Brigade of Cavalry in the Nauvoo Legion, May 26, 1849.

In October, 1849, he was sent to the States on business, in company with several other missionaries who elected him their Captain, and whose lives he greatly aided, by his generalship, in saving, when furiously charged upon by a large war party of Indians in the Black Hills. He returned in 1850, with a train of merchandize.

Great Salt Lake City was incorporated on the 19th of January, 1851, and at the first election held under the charter, on the 1st Monday of the next April, Bro. Grant was elected Mayor, which office he magnified and held uninterruptedly and by unanimous voice, to the day of his death.

In 1851, he again went to the States, where he spent much of the time in Philadelphia and Washington, and wrote several letters to James G. Bennett, editor of the New York Herald, and also published them in pamphlet form under the title, "Truth for the Mormons." Those spicy and unanswerable letters had a timely and salutary effect in allaying the excitement, tried to be raised by certain foolish officials who ran from here yelping at their own shadows. He returned in 1852.

October 23, 1852, he was elected Major General of the 1st Division of the Nauvoo Legion, which office he still held; and always took an active and efficient interest and action in everything pertaining to the protection of the lives, property and rights of the red as well as the white man.

He was unanimously elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, in the Legislative Assembly, of the Territory of Utah, on the 13th of December, 1852, and at the three subsequent sessions; and filled that position, as he did all which he was called to occupy, with dignity and honor, and to the fullest satisfaction of all the members over whom he presided during so many successive terms.

In April, 1854, President Brigham Young selected Bro. Grant for his second counselor, and, on the 6th, that wise choice was enthusiastically sustained by the large concourse assembled at that Conference, and subsequently by all the Saints throughout the world, so fast as they received information thereof. To the Saints comment is unnecessary upon the manner in which he so ably and satisfactorily filled this station, one among the highest and most responsible to which a human being can be called; so also is a particularization of wherein he greatly relieved our beloved President Brigham Young in the great and onerous duties devolved upon him.

During the last six months of his sojourn with us, he labored most indefatigably and beyond his physical endurance, in starting and rolling forth that reformation which is sweeping through our settlements, and kindling a fire in Zion which will be joyfully felt by the remotest Saint and cause sinners to fear. These pre-eminently useful labors were followed by that brief though severe illness which freed his spirit from its earthly tenement, to join Joseph in a more enlarged sphere of action, and where he can bring to bear a greatly increased ability to aid in ushering in the reign of peace and righteousness upon the earth.

Bro. Grant needs no eulogy, and least of all such an one as our language could portray, for his whole life was one of noble and diligent action upon the side of truth, of high toned and correct example to all who desire to be saved in the kingdom of our God. As a citizen, as a friend, a son, a husband, a father, and above all as a Saint, and in every station and circumstance of life, whether military, civil, or religious, he everywhere and at all times shed forth the steady and brilliant light of lofty and correct example, and died, as he lived and counseled, with his "armor on and burnished." And though all Saints deeply feel his departure, yet they can fully realize that it redounds to his and our "infinite gain."

Tribute of Respect.

CITY HALL, G. S. L. City, Dec. 2, 1856.

At one o'clock P. M. the City Council of G. S. L. City, convened in special session to take into consideration and adopt measures relative to the funeral obsequies of the deceased Mayor of the city, who died at his residence at 20 minutes past 10 P. M., on the 1st inst.

Alderman William Snow was called to the chair, and on motion of S. W. Richards, a committee of three was appointed to draft a preamble and resolutions, expressive of the feelings of condolence entertained by the Council in the loss sustained by the municipal body.

The Hon. S. W. Richards, Alderman A. H. Raleigh and A. O. Smoot, said committee, presented the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted by the Council.

WHEREAS, It has seemed good, in the ordering of the dispensations of Almighty God, to take from us by death our beloved Mayor, Jedediah M. Grant, a man in Israel whose intrinsic worth was but in a very limited degree represented by the important stations he so ably filed as one of the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as Mayor of Great Salt Lake City since its incorportion, as Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, and, for a succession of years, as Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah; and one whose character and life, as a citizen, husband and father, endeared him to every honest and virtuous person favored with his familiar associations. Be it, therefore,

Resolved, That while we recognize the hand of God in all things, we most deeply lament the loss we have sustained as a Council in the removal of our President; and that we sincerely sympathize, in common with all the citizens, in the bereavement sustained by his family, relatives and friends.

Resolved, That we, in body, attend the funeral ceremonies to be held in the Tabernacle at 10 o'clock A. M. of the 4th inst., and that each member and officer of the Council wear a badge of crape on the left arm during thirty days, significant of our heart felt sympathy and respect for the departed.

Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be published in the Deseret News.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, City Recorder.

Important Decision of the Supreme Court,
Of the United States.

THE following are the points of the decision recently delivered by Chief Justice Taney in the famous "Dred Scott" case:

1. Negroes are not citizens of the United States under the Constitution of the United States.

2. The ordinance of 1787, which declared slavery non-existable in the territory northwest of the Ohio river, did not confer the qualities of citizenship under the Constitution on negroes resident in that territory.

3. The act of Congress commonly known as the Missouri Compromise has no effect to exclude slavery from the northern part of the territory purchased from France under the name of Louisiana, nor to confer citizenship on negroes resident in that territory. To that extent the act in question is null and void.

The foregoing states the main points of this important decision. There were other grave points decided incidentally, such as these:

1. The phrase "Territory and other property," which is used in one of the clauses of the Constitution, applies "in terms" only to territory belonging to the Union at the time the Constitution was adopted.

2. Congress has no power to enact laws affecting the personal property of the inhabitants of Territories. Therefore it can confer no such power on the Legislature of a Territory.

3. A slave going from a slave State to a free State, and temporarily sojourning in the latter, becomes again a slave if he returns to the slave State, provided the laws of the last named State so determine; that is, the mere fact that a slave has been sojourning in a free country does not operate to emancipate him, so that he can live free in a slave State.

4. The plaintiff in this case (Dred Scott) being shown by the evidence, under this ruling, not to be a citizen of Missouri, can maintain no action in a Court of the United States; his suit is therefore dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

The Temple.

Last week we announced that we had received from England by Elder Angell a number of fine steel plate engravings of the Temple now in course of erection in Great Salt Lake City; but from press of matter, were obliged to defer the publication of Elder Angell's description of this magnificent building. We are pleased at being able now to place it before our readers.—[ED.

By means of the engraving, and the written explanation, the Saints will be enabled to form a tolerably correct idea of that House in which all the faithful Saints have so much interest.

I have no doubt that many of the Saints would derive great pleasure in having these miniatures hung up in their houses in the Valleys of the Mountains. Moreover they will indicate to many who are not in the Church that we are, as a people, not insensible to the value and beauties of the fine arts, nor hostile to noble enterprise and progressive intelligence.

The following is a brief detail of the Temple taken from drawings in my office in Great Salt Lake City.

The temple block is 40 rods square, the lines running north and south, east and west, and contains ten acres. The centre of the Temple is 156 feet 6 inches due west from the centre of the east line of the Block. The length of said House, east and west, is 186½ feet, including towers, and the width 99 feet. On the east end there are three towers, as also on the west. Draw a line north and south 118½ feet through the centre of the towers, and you have the north and south extent of ground plan, including pedestal.

We depress into the earth, at the east end, to the depth of 16 feet, and enlarge all around beyond the lines of wall 3 feet for a footing.

The north and south walls are 8 feet thick, clear of pedestal; they stand upon a footing of 16 feet wall, on its bearing, which slopes 3 feet on each side to the height of 7½ feet. The footing of the towers rise to the same height as the side, and is one solid piece of masonry of rough ashlars, laid in good lime mortar.

The basement of the main building is divided into many rooms by walls, all having footings. The line of the basement floor is 6 inches above the top of the footing. From the towers on the east to the towers on the west, the face of the earth slopes 6 feet; four inches above the earth on the east line, begins a promenade walk, from 11 to 12 feet wide, around the entire building, and approached by stone steps as the earth slopes and requires them.

There are four towers on the four corners of the building, each starting from its footing, of 26 feet square, these continue 16½ feet high, and come to the line of the base string course, which is 8 feet above the promenade walk. At this point the towers are reduced to 25 feet square; they then continue to the height of 38 feet, or the height of the second string course. At this point they are reduced to 23 feet square; they then continue 38 feet high, to the third string course. The string courses continue all around the building, except when separated by buttresses. These string courses are massive mouldings from solid blocks of stone.

The two east towers then rise 25 feet to a string course or cornice. The two west towers rise 19 feet and come to their string course or cornice. The four towers then rise 9 feet to the top of battlements. These towers are cylindrical, having 17 feet diameter inside, within which stairs ascend around a solid column four feet in diameter, allowing landings at the various sections of the building. These towers have each 5 ornamental windows on two sides above the basement. The two centre towers occupy the centre of the east and west ends of the building, starting from their footings 31 feet square, and break off in sections in line with corner towers to the height of the third string course. The east centre tower then rises 40 feet to the top of battlements; the west centre tower rises 34 feet to the top of battlements. All these towers have spires. The The east centre tower rises two hundred feet, while the west centre tower rises one hundred and ninety feet.

All these towers, at their corners, have octagon turrets, terminated by octagon pinnacles, 5 feet diameter at base, 4 feet at first story, and 3 feet from there up. There are also on each side of these towers two buttresses, except when they come in contact with the body of the main building. The top of these buttresses show 48 in number and stand upon pedestals. The space between the buttresses and turrets is 2 feet at the first story. On the front of the two centre towers are two large windows, each 32 feet high, one above the other, neatly prepared for that place.

On the two west corner towers, and on the west end, a few feet below the top of the battlements, may be seen in alto relievo, or bold relief, the great dipper, or Ursa Major, with the pointers ranging nearly toward the north star. (Moral, the lost may find themselves by the Priesthood.)

I will now glance at the main body of the House. I have before stated that the basement was divided into many rooms. The centre one is arranged for a baptismal font, and is 57 feet long by 35 feet wide, separated from the main wall by four rooms, two on each side, 19 feet long by 12 wide. On the east and west sides of these rooms are 4 passages 12 feet wide; these lead to and from by outside doors, two on the north and two on the south. Further east and west from these passages are 4 more rooms, two at each end, 28 feet wide by 38½ long. These and their walls occupy the basement. All the walls start off their footings, and rise 16½ feet, and there stop with grain ceiling.

We are now up to the line of the base string course, 8 feet above the promenade, or steps rising to the Temple, which terminates at the cope of pedestal, and to the first floor of said House. This room is joined to the outer courts, these courts being the width between towers, 16 feet by 9 in the clear. We ascend to the floors of these courts (they being on a line with first floor of main house) by four flights of stone steps 9½ feet wide, arranged in the basement work; the first step ranging to the outer line of towers. From these courts doors admit to any part of the building.

The size of the first large room is 120 feet long by 80 feet wide; the height reaches nearly to the second string course. The room is arched over in the centre with an elliptical arch which drops at its flank 10 feet, and has 38 feet span. The side ceilings have 4 elliptical arches which start from the side walls of the main building, 16 feet high, and terminate at the capitals of the columns or foot of centre arch, at the height of 24 feet. The columns obtain their bearings direct from the footings of said house; these columns extend up to support the floor above.

The outside walls of this story are 7 feet thick. The space from the termination of the foot of the centre arch to the outer wall, is divided into 16 compartments, 8 on each side, making rooms 14 feet by 14, clear of partitions, and 10 feet high, leaving a passage 6 feet wide next to each flank of centre arch, which is approached from the ends. These rooms are each lighted by an elliptical or oval window, whose major axis is vertical.

The second large room is one foot wider than the room below; this is in consequence of the wall being but 6 feet thick, falling off six inches on the inner, and six on the outer side. The second string course provides for this on the outside. The rooms of this story are similar to those below. The side walls have 9 buttresses on a side, and have 8 tiers of windows, 5 in each tier.

The foot of the basement windows are 8 inches above the promenade, rise 3 feet perpendicular, and terminate with a semicircular head.

The first story windows have 12 feet length of sash, to top of semicircular head. The oval windows have 6½ feet length of sash. The windows of the second story are the same as those below. All these frames have 4½ feet width of sash.

The pedestals under all the buttresess project at their base 2 feet; above their base, which is 15 inches by 4½ feet wide, on each front, is a figure of a globe 3 feet 11 inches across, whose axis corresponds with the axis of the earth.

The base string course forms a cope for those pedestals. Above this cope the buttresses are 3½ feet, and continue to the height of 100 feet. Above the promenade, close under the second string course, on each of the buttresses, is the moon, represented in its different phases. Close under the third string course, or cornice, is the face of the sun. Immediately above is Saturn with her rings. The buttresses terminate with a projected cope.

The only difference between the tower buttresses, and the one just described, is, instead of Saturn being on them, we have clouds and rays of light descending.

All of these symbols are to be chiselled in bass relief on solid stone. The side walls continue above the string course, or cornice, 8½ feet, making the wall 96 feet high, and are formed in battlements, interspersed with stars.

The roof is quite flat, rising only 8 feet, and is to be covered with galvanized iron, or some other metal. The building is to be otherwise ornamented in many places. The whole structure is designed to symbolize some of the great architectural work above.

The basement windows recede in, from the face of outer wall to sash frame, 18 inches, and are relieved by a large caveto, while on the inside they are approached by stone steps.

Those windows above the base recede from face of wall to sash frame, 3 feet, and are surrounded by strong jambs formed in mouldings, and surmounted by labels over each, which terminate at their horizon, excepting the oval windows, whose labels terminate on columns which extend from an enriched string course, at the foot of each window, to the centre of major axis.

My chief object in the last paragraph is to show to the judgment of any who may be baffled, how those windows can be come at, &c.

All the windows in the towers are moulded, and have stone jambs; each being crowned with label mouldings.

The whole house covers an area of 21,850 feet.

For further particulars, wait till the house is done, then come and see it.

FOR THE MORMON.

Superstition.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONCLUDED.

MAN appears sometimes as a living paradox, not satisfied with enduring real evils, such as diseases, sickness and various other disasters and calamities arising from the vicissitudes of life, his morbid mind is constantly creating imaginary terrors and monsters, from which he frequently suffers more than from real evils, and for the existence of which there is not the least foundation. Hence we see people believing in the words of soothsayers, fortune-tellers, gipsies, necromancers or magicians; and often are the suggestions of a wise, skilful physician rejected, and those of a witch doctor received. From the above it is evident, that timid, ignorant persons of a morbid mind, and excited imagination, people every grove, every lake, every ruined castle, every lonely house, with imaginary spectres, goblins, genii, satyrs, fairies, etc., believing that their peace, happiness, in fact their destiny depend upon the good will of those phantastical beings.

We are generally prone to follow the current of public opinion, to believe in what the multitude believes, concluding that what is believed by millions of people must be true, although it does not follow, that a principle is correct because it is believed by the multitude,—and so strong is the power and influence of our preconceived notions arising from our peculiar associations, circumstances and positions, that we are more or less under the influence of domineering feelings, which are operated upon by agencies that are congenial to our morbid minds and excited imaginations, and thus our reasoning faculties are often governed by impressions received from absurd, incorrect doctrines. Hence a religious creed is often a religion of fancy, but not of the soul; a religion appealing to the heart, and not to reason; a system exciting the imagination and benumbing the intellect. But even if we are aware of our having embraced incorrect principles, the magnet of self-interest and worldly gain is so powerful, that our better self is lulled to sleep, and we have neither the honesty nor the moral courage to oppose the flood of popular, yet erroneous dogmas, by coming forward and acknowledging openly and boldly the truth, but we are, in relation to our religion, often the playthings of caprice, fashion, popularity and ambition. For that reason, we find an endless variety of religious systems, which have more or less deviated from the path prescribed by the Savior and his apostles, and which are only in accordance with the spirit, moral condition and state of civilization of the different ages and countries.

Superstition is very fatal in its results, in as much as it blinds our vision, benumbs our intellect, so that we cannot reach and comprehend correct principles; hence superstition becomes a mighty barrier between error and truth, debarring us thus from many noble, intellectual enjoyments, and often filling our minds with fear and terror. In fact, the gates of knowledge are closed for him, in whom superstitious notions prevail, and he will never get correct ideas in relation to the nature of the Supreme Intelligence and its sublime workings. A person full of superstition is a mere slave of his own excited imagination, and a willing tool of the imposition of others, and may soon, by means of false reasoning, be led to the perpetration of deeds of injustice, cruelty and even crimes, as is evident from the lamentable fact, that the history of nearly every nation is stained with the blood of innocent victims of ignorance and superstition.

In the middle ages up to the 17th century, old, blear-eyed women were generally suspected by the people in Germany to have bewitched a cow, fascinated a child; in fact, every villainous trick, every possible mischief was attributed to the poor victim, and the public excitement did not subside, till the hangman, by order of the authorities, seized the unhappy woman, and dragged her to a deep pond, where she was thrown in the water, in the presence of a large congregation; whereupon the assistants of the Executive, by means of long poles, tried to keep the supposed witch under the water; if she rose and survived, she was considered not guilty, and acquitted, but if she sunk and died, she was pronounced a finished witch, and her body was left floating on the water. This procedure or operation was called the witch ordeal. The hangman, after having handed in to the authorities an account of his proper and legal attendance to the ordeal, received generally a certain stipulated sum as a remuneration for his trouble; documents of that kind are still found in the archives of the Prussian courts of justice. In France, under the same accusation, more than thirty thousand women suffered the penalty of death, through the excruciating tortures of that horrible institution called the Inquisition.

If reason would hold the ascendency over us, and our thoughts, impressions and actions be guided by common sense and knowledge, we would find that every thing in nature has the undeniable impress of consistency and intelligence, and that so-called enchantments and other strange, supernatural performances are only the productions of weak and feverish brains of narrow-minded ignorant persons, and that such absurd ideas come within the domain of the dark ages, when witchcraft, with all its venerable and interesting retinue of imps, brownies, wizards and other phantastical beings were flourishing.

Certain operations or phenomena of nature may appear to us, weak, benighted mortals, as supernatural, because we are strangers to the principles and laws, through which they have had their existence, but, if we understood their philosophy, their nature, their mechanism, the phenomena would be simple, plain matters of fact. Hence, there are many operations and phenomena, which, although easily explained on scientific principles, will appear as supernatural or prodigious to the layman, ignorant and uncivilized. I remember, for instance, on the first establishment of railroads in Prussian Silesia, serious fears were entertained by the authorities for the safe and unhindered passage of the iron horse, as the country people, who are generally ignorant catholics, looked upon the new invention as a work of the devil, and threatened its destruction. The simple process of taking daguerrotype-likenesses would appear to a wild Indian according to his superstition, as the work of sorcery, on account of his being entirely ignorant of the principles of optics and chemistry.

Operations or phenomena which are contrary to reason, common sense and natural philosophy, are merely chimerical or imaginary. God, as the personification and fountain of the highest intelligence, as the seat of all truth, cannot himself deviate from those eternal principles, which He, in accordance with his supreme wisdom, has introduced for the regulation of the Universe, so that every thing may be kept in eternal order and harmony. Hence to believe in inconsistent, absurd and foolish notions, and disbelieve correct principles, is a sign of the mind being ignorant, morbid and not well balanced, as is always the case with superstitious people, who swallow with the greatest eagerness a tale of an old woman having transformed herself into a black cat, and disbelieve the intelligent workings of the economy of Nature; who take readily for a fact that a witch was seen riding on a broomstick in the air, and condemn men of a higher intelligence, as for instance, in relation to Doctor Bartolo, who, in the sixteenth century, was charged by the learned ecclesiastics with having dealings with the devil, and, by an order of the Inquisition of Rome, was imprisoned, because he had successfully attended a nobleman in a severe illness, so that the invalid unexpectedly recovered.

Let us then free ourselves from the bondage of absurd, superstitious notions, and unbiassed, at all times, act under the benign influence of the Spirit of God, that we may drink continually out of the well of eternal truth, and have the honesty and energy to persevere in its cause.

Correspondence of President Geo. A. Smith.

Severe Weather on the Plains.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 9, 1857.

EDITOR OF MORMON,—Dear Sir:—On Saturday last we had the pleasure of meeting in this city, our old friend, Ephraim R. Hanks, just arrived from Great Salt Lake City. He left that place in company with Feramorz Little, Esq., on the 10th December last, and after enduring the fatigue, toil and exposure of the journey, unprecedented for severity in the annals of Mountain or Plains traveling, arrived at Independence on the 28th Feb., and delivered the Salt Lake Mail at the Post Office there, since which it has not been heard of. They met the last ox trains on the Weber, and the hand-cart companies were all in before they left the city, and had all found homes. The road to Bridger was passable in consequence of the wagons having passed over it; but considerable snow. At Big Sandy they encountered much snow in drifts, and continued until they left the Rocky Ridges, from there considerable snow to Laramie, but no serious obstruction, still the weather was very cold, and extremely stormy. From Laramie to Kearney was one continued storm, and no possible means of travel, save on the ice down the Platte river, which was accomplished with much difficulty and danger—the ice breaking through many times each day. At Ash Hollow they found some men who had been teamsters in the employ of Messrs. Major & Russell, United States Freighters, who had left Laramie, on their return for this State, but could proceed no further in consequence of the severity of the weather. Major Drips' train was also at Ash Hollow, and his cattle, also the cattle belonging to another trader, were all dead, and the men compelled to remain, having secured the best shelter they could fix for the winter in consequence of the heavy snows and severity of the weather. Although Major & Russell's men had made several attempts to come on, and some of them were severely frosted, and each time compelled to give up, they concluded to try again in following Captain Hanks' track, who supplied them with buffalo meat with his gun, and conducted them safely into Fort Kearney. At this Fort Major Wharton remonstrated with Capt. Hanks against his proceeding further, stating that the Mail from Iowa Point had made several attempts, and was obliged to return to the Fort, and had remained there a month, and that several persons had perished immediately in the neighborhood of the Fort in the storm. Major Wharton manifested every kindness in his power to Messrs. Hanks & Little, and manifested feelings and kindness towards them, that would well become a father toward his children. Twenty-two miles from Fort Kearney, called the Hole in the Prairie, they encountered a storm which continued two days and three nights, and so severe that they could not see their mules which were tied to their wagons, and without the least cessation, and not get any fire, and the mules partially fed on ropes of straw from their collars, and the wonder was when the storm was over, how they had existed, they having no shelter, save buffalo robes and blankets, part of which they eat, and all the lines and straps within their reach. From this place to Patterson's Ranch, on Big Sandy, they encountered from two to twenty feet of snow, and had to make a temporary bridge to get on the ice, in crossing Big Blue, and afterwards reached Independence without much further difficulty. The secret of the success of this journey lies in Messrs. Hanks and Little's success in training their mules to eat buffalo meat, this was done in the first place by boiling the meat and dipping it in flour, and after the supply ceased, from having left the buffalo country, the mules then began to fall off. The mules suffered severely from being cut about their feet and legs with ice, and they had to provide against this by cutting buffalo calf-skins and tying around their feet and legs, without which, they could not get the mules to step over any icy ground, but with all these precautions, nothing but the overruling Providence of the Almighty, seconded by the skill and great powers of endurance of Messrs. Little and Hanks, could have brought them through such a journey, and they give God the glory for their deliverance. Captain Hanks looks the same hardy Mountain Tiger he did at home. They encountered Smoke's band of Oglialla Sioux Indians, near Upper Platte Bridge. Smoke entertained them in his Lodge, and gave a variety of dishes of buffalo meat, served up in a variety of ways, after the most approved style of Sioux cookery, and otherwise made them welcome. There were about sixty lodges of them. Smoke informed them that he was now friendly to all whites. At Ash Hollow they saw another band of Sioux Indians, about sixty lodges, who appeared friendly. About fifty miles above Kearney they encountered a large band of Pawnee Indians, who had been on a hunt on Cor River, but had failed finding any buffalos, about 1000 of their horses had perished for want of food, and the extreme cold; also their squaws and children had suffered severely, and many died for want of food, and many of the mothers had eaten their own children in the extremity of their suffering, also others that had frozen to death. The oldest Indians do not remember so much snow and severe weather. They met Messrs. Gerrish and Goodhill at the Devil's Gate, bound for Salt Lake, a small party of about twenty men with Capt. Jones, left to guard the goods left by emigrant trains, were in good health, and well provided for the winter at that place. Also they met the Nov. mail which left Independence for Salt Lake, at Willow Springs, about 354 miles from Salt Lake City. Bishop Heywood was along with the mail, and in good health and spirits.

There is a great improvement taking place here, in St. Louis, many of the Saints have renewed their covenants, and nearly all are preparing to do so, and the Spirit of God is manifest in the meetings, and a general reformation going on. Brother Snow is somewhat indisposed at present from severe cold, and great exertion to accomplish this reformation, but we hope he may soon be restored to sound health again. We send along with this the only number of Deseret News we have received, and refer you to its contents for Valley news, yet hoping you may have some per mail direct. I will now conclude. The Lord bless you. Your Brother in the Gospel,

GEO. A. SMITH.

Thirty-fifth Congress.—Extra Session.

WASHINGTON, March 12.

EXTRA SESSION OF THE SENATE.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Cameron expressed a desire that the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in his case be taken up, with a view to forthwith disposing of it.

Mr. Mason objected, on the ground that the public business required an Executive Session.

The Senate agreed with Mr. Mason, and went into Executive Session.

SENATE, March 13.

Mr. Benjamin, of La, called up the resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, to discharge them from the further consideration of the protest and papers in Mr. Cameron's case.

Mr. Bigler of Pa. asked for an adjournment of the case, as he expected important information bearing on the case, but ultimately the resolution of the Committee was adopted.

Mr. Benjamin, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a resolution proposing that all the parties to the Indiana contested election case be permitted to take testimony before the judicial tribunals of that State.

Mr. Trumbull, of Ga., said that there was no matter at issue at all material to the case; if so, the testimony ought not to be taken. The facts can only be proved by the record. He moved the adoption of the following as a substitute for the resolution:—

That it is the duty of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the question of the right to seats of the sitting members from Indiana at the present session, and to dispose of the same before its adjournment.

Some smart sharp talking passed between Mr. T. and Mr. Fitch. The case was not disposed of. The Senate went into Executive Session. After three hours, adjourned.

SENATE. March 14.

On motion of Mr. Thomson of New Jersey, a committee of two was appointed to wait on the President and inform him that if he had no further communication to make the Senate were ready to adjourn.

On motion of Mr. Stuart of Mich. the journal of the former day was corrected by striking out that portion which said that Mr. Bright's credentials were referred to the Committee of Judiciary.

Mr. Bright of Ind., said that his credentials were on file, and if the motion be made to refer them he wished to be heard. It was the case of his colleague, Mr Fitch that was under consideration, and not his.

Mr. Trumbull of Ill., ineffectually sought to have the Indiana election cases considered.

The Vice President retired from the chair, calling on Mr. Stuart to preside.

Mr. Fitzpatrick of Ala. said that it was necessary to have a President pro tem., according to usage, and moved that Mr. Rusk be chosen to that station, but on motion of Mr. Wilson the Senate proceeded to ballot, and elected Mr. Rusk, who received twenty-nine out of forty-seven votes.

Mr. Rusk having been conducted to the chair, returned thanks for the honor conferred on him, and promised to discharge as impartially as he could the duties devolving upon him.

Mr. Seward of N. Y. offered a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, tendering the thanks of the Senate to Mr. Breckinridge for the dignity and impartiality with which he discharged the duties of presiding officer.

Five thousand copies of the report of the army officers relative to their mission to the war in the Crimea, were ordered to be printed.

The Senate then, after an executive session, adjourned sine die.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in the resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Évangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

FOR THE MORMON.

Babylon's Moan.

BY SARAH MARIA MOUSLEY.

AIR "The Watcher"

From Babylons lofty towers,
Is heard a mournful cry,
Of Rulers, Priests,—and mighty men;
By ev'ry passer by.
On ev'ry passing breeze is borne,
A murmur from afar;
O, what is this, what meaneth this—
The nations all ajar?

Where once reign'd peace—prosperity,
Destruction hovers near,
And Rulers,—Lords—of ev'ry clime,
All hearts are quite in fear,
Of famine, war, and pestilence,
The rumors are so great,
O, what will save us, pray ye tell?
Destructions us await.

On Israel's peaceful mountains,
The ensign is unfurl'd,
A rainbow of redemption,
To a lost and ruin'd world,
Then hear the proclamation,
Haste, and obey the call,
"God's law from Zion, shall go forth,"
Earth's greatest kingdoms fall.

With wicked hands you've shed the blood
Of Prophets whom I've sent,
To call on all, both great and small,
And warn them to repent!
Obey the proclamation then;
And hearken while I say,
Ye gentile nations, cease your strife,
Prepare Messiah's way.

The time is near, the happy time,
Ye Saints of God rejoice;
Lift up your heads, redemption's near,
And hear your Saviour's voice.
'I come, I come! he meekly says,
All kingdoms are my own,
All earthly thrones and powers too,
Will soon be overthrown.

He comes, he comes, Messiah,
The Bridegroom promis'd long,
The heavenly Saints, and earthly too,
Will mingle soon in one;
And angels chaunt the joyful lay,
All praise to him belongs,
Shout Hallelujah! "Jesus reigns,
All voices join the song.

Centreville, Del., March, 1857.

Matrimonial Advertisement.

FROM PORTER'S "SPIRIT."

A LADY, who had no idea of looking for a husband, but with large proclivities for mischief and fun, put a matrimonial advertisement in the Herald, with direction for answers to be sent to a certain signature at the Broadway Post office. As the advertisement appealed to the practical appreciations, by assuming a neat little fortune, in addition to an agreeable person, the seed of such temptation could not well fall idly upon such a fertile bottom as is offered by the city of New York. On the first day that succeeded the advertisement, the lady received seventeen replies; on the second day, thirty-two, and on the third, seventy-two—an extent and ardor of appreciation, for her vaguely described personal attractions, which even she was not prepared to expect.

Bewildered by the warm volume of adoration and entreaty which issued from this hymenial magazine, the lady called to her aid five ladies as mischievous as herself. One pair of hands and one mind were, of course, quite unequal to the task of answering all, so the batch of billet doux was divided equally among them, and each was to make an appointment with the writers on the following Saturday afternoon, at four o'clock, on the lower side of the up-stairs saloon of a certain popular restaurant in Broadway. Each of the ladies, moreover, who took the task in charge, chose a different colored paper for replies. Finally it was agreed that the whole six should be present at the interview, and that each should wear the exact costume prescribed for the inamorata whom the sighing swains would be there to see. On the other hand, the gentlemen were directed to appear in all the varieties of attire and position, which female ingenuity and mischief could devise. One was requested to wear a blue coat and bright brass buttons; another to have his hair parted in the middle; one was to be eating a plate of pork and beans; which, said the ingenious writer who dictated it, "you can scarcely expect will be called for by any-body else." Others were to be partaking of various dishes, or to place themselves in such attitudes and postures as were directed by the writer.

At four o'clock on the prescribed Saturday afternoon, every chair at every table on the lower side of the up-stairs saloon was filled with slick-looking and highly perfumed Leanders, all gazing into each other's faces, and each secretly cursing the luck which wedged him so closely out of the killing positions and displays which he had been meditating ever since he got his note. And how the dishes smoked, and the wondering waiters flew! Even the perplexed landlord, amazed at this miraculous flow of business, was obliged to drop his own mutton chop, and call out the entire force of his establishment, to meet the clamorous, if not threatening demands of gentlemen, who feared they might not get their telegraphing plates of duck or mess of pork and beans in time.

At length, the clash of sheen and kick of stiff skirts was heard coming up the stairs one minute after four, and an inamorata appeared, dressed in dark green, with deep fur cape, and abundant drooping lace. She was wafered on the back of the head with an infinitesimal bonnet, and carried in her hand the magic drift of cambric, whose Shekespearian strawberries intimated that she was she. When she appeared, the sensation was universal; the gentleman with the buff vest threw open his coat to the extreme; the gentleman in the "blue" and the bright buttons, buttoned his coat entirely to the chin; the gentleman who was to lean backwards frequently, commenced tilting like a Chinese mandarin; the gentleman with the pork and beans became vociferous for more beans; while those who had duck, &c., were equally clamorous in complaining of the undue fulfillment of their orders.

Never was such a sudden clamor raised in that usually well regulated up-stairs saloon before—and, by the bye, never did it subside more suddenly than when a new brush of skirts was heard coming up the stairs. All the Lotharios were once more in position, when lo! another Cordelia, in all respects the reflex of the first, appeared, bearing the film of strawberries as a challenge in her hand, and sweeping with it like a Juno, to a seat near the location of the first. It is needless to say that the sensation was now extreme. Some of the gentlemen who were to part their hair in the middle, began, however, to look less furiously at other gentlemen who had their hair parted in the same way, as much as to say: "Well, there is one for each of us, anyhow!"

But most of the party seemed more troubled than before. A pause of some minutes succeeded before any new "appearance" took place, during which time, the Lotharios were engaged in displaying their points to the best advantage; and some, more ardent than the rest, pulled out the various colored notes they had received, and either pretended to read them or laid them conspicuous on the table.—"There's one of my fellows with the blue note!" said Mystery No. 1, over her spoonful of soup, to Mystery No. 2. "There's one of mine," said Cordelia the second: "he's got a pink note." What do you think of Augustus, there, with the pork and beans before him, who is so pensively leaning his cheek upon his hand?" said Myth the first—but before the answer could be given, Apparitions three and four appeared, and hard upon their heels came five and six. There was now perfect consternation on the lower side of the up-stairs saloon of the fashionable restaurant in Broadway. The man on the tilt fell backwards, and was shot under the table; there was a general feeling after hats and gathering up of loose handkerchiefs and canes.

All at once, after one of those short, sudden panics, which convey electric knowledge to the human mind, a general stampede took place, and the whole party, with more or less dignity—according to the nature and shapes they had been put—made for the stairs and descended out of sight. It was several minutes before they could hand in their checks and pay the score, and during this time, the mischievous bevy with strawberry marked handkerchiefs, took full pay for their trouble, in the hearty laugh which they indulged in at the ludicrous tableau and exodus they had just beheld, on the part of gentlemen who were so sharp after the "snug little fortune," and whose motives were entirely confined to the object of getting a "congenial partner with whom they could quietly settle down in life."

About the Sponge.

THE natural history of the sponge is very obscure. The contradictory assertions of naturalists forbid any degree of precision, even in its classification. Some regard it as a vegetable, others as an animal, others again as a union of both in the polypi. All agree in admitting that two substances are found in the sponge; one in the interior, consisting of a fibrous cornea, forming a tissue more or less compact, to the centre of which there adheres a marine body; the other, on the exterior, is of a soft, gelatinous consistency, and appears to be the seat of sensibility and life. But little is known as to the origin or duration of the life of sponge. It is conjectured that its growth must be very rapid, as two years suffice to repeople the rock despoiled by the gatherers or fishers. The sponge presents on its exterior variable forms, without any degree of regularity, though it bears a close analogy to the stony polypi. The fibrous tissue is the only part that can be studied with attention, but such examination reveals irregularities so numerous, and differences so great, that it is most difficult to assign a generic character to the interior. The fibrous net work, the fine elastic tissue, are solely the index by which the quality of the sponge may be ascertained, without furnishing data on which to establish whether these properties are natural or accidental.

The sponge is common to all seas; but differences exist as to its quality. The best sponges are incontestably those which are brought from the coast of Turkey, and among these the Syrian sponges are the most highly esteemed for toilet use. They are of a finer grain, a greater flexibility, and are more porous—that is to say, they have a greater capacity for absorption. In commerce they are divided into three classes—color, delicacy and elasticity of tissue, together with compactness of material. The white, delicately grained sponges are reckoned the best; there is a second class, stronger, and of a more yellowish tint; and a common class, known as Venice sponge, and only employed for the most ordinary purposes.

Sponge gathering, or as it is very commonly called the sponge fishery, commences in June and terminates in August; on the coast of Syria it is sometimes prolonged to September. At the beginning of the season the fishermen of Beyrout, Tripoli and Lattakich prepare for work, and either enter on the undertaking on their own account, or in the service of some enterprising speculator. Those who fish on their own account, or in the employment of others, form into parties of five or six, under the command of a reis. The boats employed are small, but admirably adapted for the purpose. The fishermen coasting for a considerable distance in their frail barks—the sea generally in such a state as to permit them to see the bottom—when they observe a pile of sponge rock, take in sail, cast anchor, and each man in his turn plunges into the water. The diver places his feet on a large stone attached to a cord which he holds in his hands. When he reaches the rock, he tears away the sponge, and places it in a bag before him. Having gathered as much as he possibly can, he re-ascends, and the second diver plunges in and carries on the work. The divers will sometimes descend thirty fathoms (180 feet) in search of the sponge.

The sponge is submitted to the necessary manipulation as soon as possible after it has been gathered. When they arrive on shore, the divers dig a hole in the sand and fill it with water. Into this the sponge is plunged, and the men tread it with their feet until the whole of the outer gelatinous coating is removed. When it has been thoroughly denuded of this membrane, and presents to the eye nothing but its own natural color, the process is complete. Sponge thus prepared contains a quantity, more or less, of the sand in which it is pressed, and as the divers are paid by weight, it does not answer their purpose to wash the sponge scrupulously clean. But sharp dealers require a couple of days to ascertain how much sand is mixed with the sponge, and to pay accordingly; and it is but the timid or inexperienced who are to be thus defrauded by the divers.

Beyrout and Tripoli are the chief sponge markets. Tripoli being in the immediate neighborhood of the fishery, is the most productive, and is the centre of the sponge trade. The quantity of sponge sold at this place has rendered it essential to establish a market especially devoted to this object. The middle of September is the busiest time at Tripoli, and a curious mixture of Europeans and Orientals—of French, Italian, English, Druses, Turcomans, Kurds, chaffer with the Greek merchants over the sponge. The scene is not easily forgotten.

Galvanizing Iron.

THE manufacture of galvanized sheet and corrugated iron and galvanized telegraphic wires is carried on quite extensively at the United States Galvanizing Iron Works in Philadelphia, the concern being owned by a private firm. Of the working of this establishment, the Philadelphia Ledger gives some interesting particulars:—"The rolling mill attached to the works is 100 by 200 feet, and capable of making 800 tons of sheet iron per annum. About sixty men are employed, and the machinery is kept in motion by an engine of 125 horse power. The pig iron is first puddled, and then rolled into bars and sheets, after which it is taken to the galvanizing works and the scales removed, and the sheets made perfectly clean, by passing them, one at a time, through a bath of sulphuric acid; they are washed clean with water, and taken to a kiln and dried perfectly. The sheets are coated by passing them through a bath of zinc—the zinc forming a coating upon the iron a little thicker than the tin upon tin plates. The sheets are rubbed with cloths, for the purpose of removing the dirt, after which they are passed through bright, smooth rollers, four feet long. The sheets to be corrugated are passed through rollers prepared for this purpose. The iron is then fit for use, and will stand salt water, or any kind of weather, without rust.

The United States Government are now using it for roofing custom houses and other public buildings, in place of copper. In these works twelve miles of telegraph wire can be galvanized in a day, at a cost of $10 per mile. The wire is passed through the bath as it comes from the reel, moved by steam power. The galvanized iron roofing works of Harris & Co. is an extensive establishment. The buildings and yards used for setting up the roofs occupy nearly half a square. The sheet iron is mainly galvanized, which has proved a perfect protection from rust, and the favorite form is corrugated, as adding greatly to its strength. A machine, which is the only one in existence, perfects the corrugation in large sheets, at the rate of one per minute. The upper iron plate is of the required form, and remains permanent, while beneath are six tongues, each of which form a single corrugation. On the application of the steam power, the two center tongues move upward by means of cams working beneath; these then remain permanent while they are succeeded in pairs by the tongues on either side, perfecting the sheet with great rapidity, all the tongues falling together and releasing the sheet, so as to be replaced by another.

The punching of the sheets is performed by hand, but there is a machine in which the sheets are placed that secure perfect security, and every rivet hole invariably matches with the adjoining sheet. There is also an ingenious machine for cutting the corrugated sheets in any form without destroying the corrugations. The machines for punching the iron girders, cutting them of any required length, cutting the screws on the ends of the bolts and stays supporting the roof, are all of the most perfect character. The machinery is driven by an engine of twenty horse power. In the yard a section of the iron corrugated roof for the new United States Custom House at Mobile, is set up, which is always done preparatory to shipment. This building is 82 feet by 141, and the roof required will measure 12,000 square feet. The firm have also ready for putting together the roof of corrugated copper intended for the new Bank of Pennsylvania on Chesnut street. This roof will measure 10,000 square feet, the copper alone costing about $6,000.

Are We Going to Ruin?

GEORGE D. PRENTICE, Esq., of the Louisville Journal, lectured in Hartford on Monday evening, on "The Political Aspects of the Country," of which he takes a very desponding view. The following outline of his remarks is given in the Hartford Free Press:

"It is time for us to return to first principles. There are symptoms of decay in our government. The education of the citizen is neglected. Disunion and monarchical sentiments are spreading. Our politicians are selfish and the general tendency is to anarchy. We have one entire State in open hostility to the Constitution, supported in it by three others, with the sympathies of half a dozen more. The Union never encountered such opposition as during the last campaign, when dissolution was openly threatened in a certain contingency. The present apparent peace is a mere temporary truce—faction still cries for war. The fundamental principles of the government are called in question. This is pregnant with terror; it is the snapping of the golden cord; the starting of the keystone of the arch; the click, if not the 'crack of doom.' We lose national pride; the Mississippian threatens to hang the citizen of New Hampshire; the impetous South Carolinian strikes down the scholar from Massachusetts, and their constituents take sides with them. The nation is bristling all over with repugnances.

"Who shall arrest those evils? The race of Statesmen, of giants, has departed, and no successors appear. We have public men in abundance, but no Statesmen. Three-fourths of them are reckless demagogues, who regard first themselves, and then—nothing. Across the polished brass of their souls, not the most distant thought of the good of the country ever flits. There is not enough of moral courage in a hundred politicians to stiffen one upper lip! They dare not stand up and say their souls are their own, or if they do, they append a 'subject to the Constitution' and 'the majority.' Backboneless, they stand up like empty bags, or basely prostrate themselves at the feet of faction, instead of being leaders of the multitude. They represent only the pot-house and the club-room. It is easy to flatter our national vanity, but the truth must be told. The North and South are piling up combustibles which the lightnings may fire! A few revolutionary patriots yet live, and they may survive the fruit of their labors, but if we are true to ourselves and to our country, we may yet avert the storm."

A Desperate Conflict between a Lion and an Antelope.

DR. LIVINGSTONE gives a very interesting description of a fight he witnessed in Africa between a lion and antelope. The Doctor and his guides had just emerged from a narrow defile between two rocky hills, when they heard an angry growl which they knew to be that of the "monarch of the forest." At the distance of not more than forty yards in advance of them, a gemsbok stood at bay, while a huge tawny lion was crouched on a rocky platform, above the level of the plain, evidently meditating an attack on the antelope; only a space of about twenty feet separated the two animals. The lion appeared to be animated with the greatest fury; the gemsbok was apparently calm and resolute, presenting his well fortified head to the enemy.

The lion cautiously changed his position, descended to the plain and made a circuit, obviously for the purpose of attacking the gemsbok in the rear, but the latter was on the alert, and still turned his head toward his antagonist. This manœuvring lasted for half an hour, when it appeared to the observers that the gemsbok used a strategem to induce the lion to make his assault. The flank of the antelope was for a moment presented to his fierce assailant. As quick as lightning, the lion made a spring, but while he was yet in the air, the gemsbok turned his head, bending his neck so as to present one of his spear-like horns at the lion's breast. A terrible laceration was the consequence; the lion fell back on his haunches and showed a ghastly wound in the lower part of his neck. He uttered a howl of rage and anguish, and backed off to a distance of fifty yards, seeming half disposed to give up the contest, but hunger, fury, or revenge once more impelled him forward.

His second assault was more furious and headlong: he rushed at the gemsbok, and attempted to leap over the formidable horns in order to alight on his back. The gemsbok, still standing on the defensive, elevated his head, speared the lion in his side, and inflicted what the spectators believed to be a mortal wound, as the horns penetrated to the depth of six or eight inches. Again the lion retreated, groaning and limping in a manner which showed that he had been severely hurt, but he soon collected all his energies for another attack. At the instant of collision, the gemsbok presented a horn so as to strike the lion immediately between his two fore legs, and so forceful was the stroke that the whole length of the horn was buried in the lion's body. For nearly a minute the two beasts stood motionless; then the gemsbok, slowly backing, withdrew his horn, and the lion tottered and fell on his side, his limbs quivering in the agonies of death. The victor made a triumphant flourish of his heels, and trotted off apparently without having received the least injury in the conflict.—[Dr. Livingstone's Travels in Africa.]

Search the Scriptures.

SOME forty or fifty years ago there was a telling sermon preached in the "Old Bay State," by a famous minister, in which occurred the following droll passages:

"My dear brethern, God works in a mysterious way and ain't above using the humblest means to bring his critters to their senses, when he sees them slothful in business, and a-going down to hell with their eyes shut; and here's a case in point, which it affords a solemn warning to all who neglect this great duty. Some time ago, I knew a man down at Marblehead Point—a fisherman—a desperate, wicked man, a profane swearer, a drunkard who never darkened the door of a meetin'-house, or took delight in holy things. He had a family—a wife, three sons and two daughters—all bad as himself; all a-going straight down to hell as fast as their legs could carry them. But at last they were brought to their senses in this wise, and from limbs of Satan transmogrified into the children of light. Once upon a time there was great trouble in the heads of the family. It was long since they had been mowed or raked, and so to speak, there was varmin in the grass. They all got desperate uneasy, and to come to the point at once, there was a loud cry for the fine-tooth comb. But, my friends, nobody knew where it was. It couldn't be found! It couldn't be found! And so it went from bad to worse. Scratchin' was of no use—'twas too bad for scratchin'. They hunted everywhere for the old fine tooth comb—from garret to cellar, and from cellar to garret. They ransacked every closet and every drawer, but it couldn't be found." Here the preacher paused and looked around, then went on in a low, solemn, and emphatic tone: 'At length it was found. Who found it? I don't know; but it was found, to the great joy and everlasting salvation of all that family. And, my friends, where do you think they found it?' A long pause—'They found it in the old family Bible, (sotto voce.) They found it in the old family Bible, (cresendo.) They found it in the old family Bible, (in a voice of thunder,) and the dust lay so thick on it that you might have written damnation on the kiver. Therefore, (in a tone of deep emotion,) my beloved brethren, search the Scriptures."

The Distinguished Dead of the Past Year.

THIS Republic has lost Mr. Berrien and Mr. Eaton—members of General Jackson's Cabinet—Senator Clayton, Governor Troup and Commodore Morris, with others who counselled for her interest in the Cabinet, and upheld her dignity amidst the contentions of factions and during the perils of war. England has to regret the deaths of Lord Hardinge, the hero of many bloody fights; Sir Henry Pottinger, a military diplomat; Sir John Ross, the Arctic navigator; Buckland, the geologist; and Westmacott, the sculptor. Russia mourns for Prince Paskiewitch, the brilliant representative of two Czars in Poland; Prince Woronzoff, a faithful and sagacious counsellor; General Rudiger, a valiant soldier; and Admiral Sucrow, whose name is immortalized for the planning and carrying into operation the bridge which led his comrades from the south to the north side of Sebastopol after the capture of the Malakoff. Sir William Temple, Lord Palmerston's brother, who for a long time held the post of English Minister at the Neapolitan Court, is also dead. Science, literature, and the fine arts, have been stricken in the persons of Sharp, the geologist; Percival, the American geologist; Sir William Hamilton, the metaphysician; Van Biela, the astronomer; Henri Heine, the German writer; Caroline Lee Hentz, Thierry, and Count de Tocqueville, and a host of others. The musical and theatrical circles have lost Madame Vestris, Adolphe Adam, John Braham, Bochsa, and Landpainter, who composed as well as he painted. M. Sina, of Vienna, who was worth four millions of pounds sterling, succumbed to death; whilst John Sadlier, worthily represented the gigantic swindlers of the age in the manner of his death, as he did during his entire career. These are not a tithe of the long list. Death has been busy, and thousands whom the Lord honored or feared have gone to their long home.

Terrible Accident on the Great Western Railroad.

The Hamilton Spectator (C. W.) of the 13th instant, gives the following account of a terrible railroad accident:—

"A national calamity may fairly be said to have befallen us. Men who have ever stood in the foremost rank—capitalists the most shrewd, speculators the most keen, merchants the most far sighted, clergymen the most earnest—have at one fell sweep been taken from among us. The brain wanders, and the pen almost refuses to do its accustomed duty, when attempting to describe the heart-rending scenes we have witnessed.

"The train from Toronto, due in this city at a quarter before 6 P. M. yesterday evening, had come from Toronto as was usual, and was proceeding at a moderate rate of speed to pass the swing bridge across the Desjardin's canal. Those residing at a distance may not know that a cutting has been made as an outlet to the canal through the Burlington Heights, and that the railway crosses it by a swinging bridge sixty feet at least above the level of the canal. At this time, of course, the water below is covered with ice, about two feet thick.

"Just before the train reached the bridge, the engine ran off the track, owing, it is supposed, to some defect in the axle. This, however, is a mere surmise, founded only on the observation of some marks on the road for some distance on the other side of the spot where the accident occurred. The immense weight of the engine, cutting through the timber of the bridge, produced the effect naturally to be expected. The whole structure gave way, and with one frightful crash, the engine, tender, baggage car and two first-class passenger cars broke through the severed framework, and leaped, headlong, into the yawning abyss below. The baggage car, striking the corner of the tender in the act of falling, was thrown to one side, and fell some ten yards from the engine. The first passenger car rushed after, and turning as it descended, fell on its roof, breaking partly through the ice and was crushed to atoms, while the last car fell endways on the ice, and, strange to say, remained in that position.

"The loss of life was of course frightful. There were ninety passengers in the train, and the list of those who have escaped only numbers about twenty. As far as we can yet learn, every one in the first car was killed; those who were not crushed being drowned by the water, which nearly filled the car. About thirty were in the last car, of whom ten were taken out dead, and most of the others were fearfully mutilated. The conductor, Mr. Barrett, and the deputy superintendent of the road, Mr. Muir, and Mr. Jessop, one of the auditors, who were on the hind platform, jumped off and escaped. The express messenger, Mr. Richardson, a conductor on the road, and the mail conductor, were with the baggageman. The latter jumped over the baggage he had piled up ready for delivery, and escaped with but slight injury, while the three others went down, but, miraculously enough, were not much hurt. The engineer and fireman went under the ice with the locomotive, and their bodies have not yet been recovered.

"The excitement in the city, directly the news spread, was intense. Hundreds swarmed towards the Great Western depot, and streamed along the line to the fatal spot. There the scene presented was such as to baffle description. Large locomotive lamps were speedily brought. Fires were kindled, and a lurid glare was thrown over the shattered remnants. Special trains were despatched to the bridge, to bring home the wounded. It was no easy task to descend the steep slope to the canal. Ropes were lowered, and ladders attached to them, on which the dead and wounded from the car which stood endways were first drawn up. Then the bottom of the car, which had partly sunk through the ice, was hewn away with axes, and the unfortunate passengers, some sadly mutilated and even cut in pieces, and all saturated with water, were taken out."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1857.

Utah Federal Offices.

THE election of the present Chief Magistrate of the United States of America was, as all the world knows, virtually decided on the 4th of November last, and at that period, to the great satisfaction of the quiet and peaceably disposed, the raging contest between the Republicanism of the Philadelphia convention, represented by Col. Fremont, and the Democracy of the Cincinnati convention, represented in the person of the Hon. James Buchanan, was hushed to slumber till wanted for the next campaign. The decision of the majority, of course, caused bitter disappointment to many in the defeated camp, who had built high and magnificent castles in the air, still with the exception of the manifestation of a little riled feeling among editors, the vanquished have been wisely silent. Correspondingly did high future hopes take deeper root in the minds of many in the army of the "unterrified," and the castles that their lively imaginations had built, before the contest was decided, have since, to their still more excited fancy, appeared furnished, carpeted, and seemingly all prepared, only awaiting their honorable presence to take possession and enjoy. But wishes and dreams are, unfortunately for the victors as they have turned out for the defeated, somewhat different from tangible facts, and whatever honors the scattered braves may have anticipated, it is every day becoming more apparent at Washington that the heroes are legion and the great Chief has not decorations enough for all who distinguished themselves in the campaign. The correspondence from Washington since, and even before, the inauguration of the Hon. James Buchanan, shows a vigorous scrambling for office—and a contest, though on a smaller scale than that which decided his election, equal to it in every other particular. Caucus after caucus has been held, and deputation after deputation has visited President Buchanan, and each has made known the particular favorite for the tangible, bona fide post of honor and profit.

Anticipating that changes might be effected by a new occupant of the White House in the Federal officers of Utah, there has lately been a perfect inundation of letters from loafers and hungry office-seekers who have by one means and another got stuck on to Utah Territory. The Tribune, alias the Slanderer, has for some time past been their organ, and has been teeming with every species of calumny and falsehood about the inhabitants of Utah, but more particularly about his Excellency Governor Young. Their warm professions of sympathy for the anti-slavery propagandists shows that the writers of these letters calculated that the Pathfinder would reach the chair of Washington, and not having yet learned of the election of the Democratic candidate, they have been assiduous in manufacturing mountains from mole-hills about niggers and Indian slaves; and every story that their fruitful imaginations could invent has been duly reflected in the city Slanderer. Another batch of letters has appeared this week, with more, if possible, of that scurrilous abuse for which the Slanderer's correspondence is proverbial. Judge Drummond has, among others, got again on the tapis, if we are to believe a cotemporary who publishes a part of his correspondence, with some official at Washington, he seems terribly afraid of the Mormons, and awfully anxious to get power. We think he has good grounds for keeping out of Great Salt Lake Valley till he gets it; but if he ever return he may calculate that the laws of Utah, against a crime little noticed elsewhere, will be put in force, authority or no authority. He may take our word for it that the sisters and brother of the real Mrs. Drummond are in earnest. No pettifogging will stop the course of justice in Utah—but that he knows well from his experience at Fillmore City, at the time he was apprehended on the charge of assault and battery, springing from the affairs of the other Mrs. Drummond. We think that at present this is enough to say to those whom it may concern, that they may know the cause of the Judge's fear to return to his duties and his anxiety to have somebody like himself in authority near in the hour of trouble. Such mean, contemptible scribblers deserve no further attention till they have purified themselves, if that ever can be, of the moral turpitude with which their names are righteously associated. So much, then, for the slanderers of Utah and their unbounded zeal at this particular moment.

The Federal offices of the Territory are at the disposal of the President, and whatever course he pursues with other Territories will do for Utah; but we do trust that a wise and prudent course will be pursued by the Chief Magistrate in his selections. We should not feel ourself justified in even expressing such a wish, as to some that much might imply distrust on our part, did we not know of the labors of our enemies in and out of Utah to prejudice the Administration at Washington against the Mormon officials in Utah.

A correspondent from Great Salt Lake City, writing us recently, alluding to the men who have been out there, says:

"We find that, with very few exceptions, non-resident appointees have always been of that character whose chief delight and business is and has been to stir up strife between us and the General Government by their foul and false statements. They have never manifested any interest in the growth and prosperity of the Territory, but on the contrary, have acted as though they were sent here to quarrel and create, if possible, difficulties between us and the government. Influenced only by their own selfish purposes, and pursuing a course calculated to bring upon themselves the suspicions and distrust of the community, who, through much bitter experience and persecution in times past, naturally view strangers with a jealous eye. We do know that our good feelings, confidence and respect have been most wretchedly abused by them, and that while we treated them with the greatest consideration and respect, they were trying to debauch and corrupt our people, and using their utmost influence with the various departments of the government, members of Congress, and influential men, to prejudice them against our people, and injure their standing, character and influence in the estimation of the government."

We endorse every word of the above. We have watched the course of these political demagogues, and know that they have acted as our correspondent has stated. What object any administration can have in sending out to Utah men of the stamp of Drummond, Brochus, Braudebury, Ferris and Harris, we are at a loss to determine, unless it be to bother, harrass and try to the utmost how much human nature can endure before it retaliates.

Power vested in the chief magistrate is expected to be conscientiously and righteously employed for the benefit of his fellow-citizens who have chosen him to preside over them and watch over their interests. For whose interest such men as we have named are appointed to any office of trust, is beyond our comprehension. What good have they ever done? Or what can they hope to do in Utah, but make mischief. They have, as a general thing, been loafers who have hung about Washington till their troublesome presence had become a nuisance to men in high places, and it became necessary to send them somewhere to get rid of their importunities. Poor Utah has had enough of the scum. Other Territories have asked for the appointment to Federal offices of tried men—men known to be interested in their prosperity—and their demands are not considered unreasonable. We saw in a city cotemporary last week allusion made to this demand of the Territories, and the only thing that could be urged against this course was that it seemed hard to keep very competent persons from Federal offices, simply because they were not among the oldest settlers. Our cotemporary thought, that inasmuch as persons with the capacity for high, important offices meant to settle down, that that was enough to entitle them to the same chance for office as others who had already settled there. While we do think that the men who have made the sacrifices that life on the virgin soil demands are entitled to every honor and favor that the parent government can accord to them, we see nothing so very much to complain about if those who are called to office, as our cotemporary says, intend to settle there. But that class of men are not those who receive the appointments to Utah. Not a single one of them ever intended to settle in Utah. They went there for their own advancement and for a share of the plunder that such characters believe is the right of all who are smart enough to rob Uncle Sam. Discharging their duties is the last thing they think of. Self, self, eternally self—and duties are only discharged when it is more convenient to do so than to leave it alone. By some it has been plunder, plunder, eternally plunder, and the inhabitants of Utah see it and are thoroughly disgusted. A cry is made against Governor Young and Mormons in Federal offices; but by whom is that cry made? By settlers? Verily no! By adventurers passing through or men temporarily located there—men whose villany and corruptions make them detested. And when they have cried, what does it amount to? Brigham Young and the Mormons are accused of being opposed to the government. This is an old story, but on what grounds is such an accusation made? Have they ever refused to accede to any demand the government ever made upon them? No! But their accusers cry out that they talk disrespectfully of the United States officers sent among them. What of it? Are the Mormons the only folks that talk disrespectfully of men who may perchance be called United States officers? Not by a long way. Whoever heard the Mormons of Utah speak one word against the government at Washington, or against respectable men connected with it who have got the length of Utah? Not a soul. That the Mormons have been thoroughly disgusted with some corrupt scoundrels and puppies who have been in the pay of Uncle Sam, is verily true. We don't deny it. We should think it a blemish on their character if they did not feel so. We have only wondered at the patience of the Utonians, and been surprised that they did not kick them out of the Territory. We don't pretend to say or even guess at the may-be of the future; but this we will say, that if batches of men be sent to Utah to fill the Federal offices, of the stamp of the majority of those who have been sent in past times, we expect to hear of their returning quicker than they went. To all things there are limits—to patience and long-suffering there are bounds—and we think, and think it loud enough that all may know who have any interest in the subject, that the inhabitants of Utah have had enough of insult, and we beg the Administration to try their powers of endurance no further. We say to the Government—test our patriotism and our devotion to the Constitution as much as you please; the more you ask, the more we will cheerfully accord. But test not how much further we shall submit to abuse, misrepresentation and calumny from men whose position leads many to believe that they are carrying out instructions from the Capital.

We should indeed be sorry to be compelled to believe that the men we have alluded to were at any time the faithful exponents of the feeling of the Government at Washington towards us. Their appointments we have always looked upon as being unjust; still, with charity, we attributed the act to human weakness—the President yielding to outside pressure. We do trust, however, that President James Buchanan and his Cabinet, inasmuch as they have no official sins to atone for, will, instead of yielding to the clamor of interested, vindictive persons, show to the wide world that justice is associated with authority at the Capital of the greatest Republic in the world.

The Twelve in the States.

IN our issue of the 14th instant, we stated that "President Geo. A. Smith had lately visited a branch of the Church in Virginia, established many years ago by President J. M. Grant," but we learn from Bro. Smith's last correspondence that we had mistaken North Western for South Western Virginia. He says; "I did not visit Elder Grant's old field of labor in South Western Virginia. I visited my own old field of labor in North Western Virginia in the county of Harrison. Presidents Smith and Snow are still at St. Louis in rather poor health. It is said that President P. P. Pratt is making for Massachussetts: if so we may have his visit soon—shall be happy to see him.

ELDER RIDEOUT.—Elder Rideout of Cincinnati, recently from Utah, has been appointed by one of the Twelve to visit South Western Virginia.

The Swiss Mission.

PRESIDENT GEO. A. SMITH has kindly forwarded us a lengthy correspondence recently received by him at St. Louis from his brother, Elder John L. Smith, the president of the Swiss and Italian missions. It affords us pleasure to read of the progress of the work of the Lord among the honest Swiss. President Smith speaks very favorably of the efforts of the Saints there to disseminate among the people the publications of the church. Mormonism is thereby creating quite an interest generally, and among many persons of rank and distinction, both of Italy and Switzerland. A goodly number of the Saints in Geneva had renewed their covenants, and were manifesting a greater determination to build up the Kingdom. He expects to accompany about forty Saints to Liverpool who will join the Spring emigration from there to Utah.

We are glad to learn of the labors of President John L. and to know that he enjoys richly the spirit of his mission, and sees his toil rewarded with success. We shall ever be pleased to receive from him a line for THE MORMON.

Council Bluffs Bugle.

BY the last number of the Bugle, we learn that Mr. Lysander W. Babbit of that city, has purchased an interest in that spirited paper, and entered hand and heart into the already robust corps of editors—Johnson and Carpenter. Success to progress.

From recent numbers of the Bugle and other papers in that region, it appears that the folks out there, have, among other blessings, a Christian editor—a scape-goat from denser cities and their institutions. Terrible fatality! Some Christian ministers seem to have hard work to keep the peace—their eternal jabbering and confusion over dogmas, deranges the little common sense they may have possessed before they entered the rostrum.

Crescent City Oracle.

THE above is the name of a new paper, called after a new city, and edited and published by L. O. Littlefield, who is, although an old hand at the quill, a new editor.

When we took up the paper, we involuntarily exclaimed—What next?

Not long since we had Florence, which was then a new city—now comes Crescent City, a young sprout, just merging into existence, while Florence assumes rather a matronly air and smiles an approving welcome to the young brood, who are just breaking the shell around her.

Crescent City that is, was, when we passed through that country two years ago, either a farm or waste; it is several miles east of Florence, and back from the Missouri River, in a crescent under the Bluffs and on the line of railroad leading to that city. Who the landed proprietors are we don't know, but suppose that our old friend, J. E. Johnson, Esq., of the Bluffs Bugle, is at least one of the principal. It now boasts of its Oracle.

The Oracle is a pretty little frontier sheet, and is well filled with spicy articles from the pen of the editor and others. We have been acquainted with Mr. Littlefield a great number of years. Some twelve or fourteen years ago he worked for us as a compositor on the Nauvoo Neighbor and Times and Seasons at Nauvoo. We heartily wish him success in his editorial career and in the building up of the new city.

We have put The Oracle on our exchange list.

Utah—Washington.

LAST Friday the N. Y. Herald published in its Washington correspondence charges against the Mormons in Utah from the pen of Judge Drummond. On Tuesday the same paper publishes the following:

"Dr. Bernhisel, delegate from Utah, denies the truth of the discreditable statements concerning that Territory. He says they emanate from enemies who have been striving to ferment difficulties between the Mormons and the General Government."

The N. Y. Tribune publishes in its Washington correspondence of to-day (Thursday) the following:

The Governorship of Utah has been indirectly placed at the disposal of the Hon. Fayette McMullen of Virginia, by intimations from five members of the Cabinet, inquiring if he would accept. No definite answer has yet been returned, and as the place is not inviting the honorable gentleman requires time for reflection.

Elsewhere we have expressed our views of appointments to the Federal Offices of Utah, we shall therefore only add that if President Buchanan thinks of his own election being the expression of the popular will, he will think of the popular will in Utah. His Excellency Gov. Young is the choice of that people; but should rotation be the order, and must be the order, there is no necessity to run to Virginia or elsewhere out of Utah to find the "right man for the right place." The Hon. F. McMullen does well to reflect—and so will all round. The wish of the citizens of Utah ought to be as much respected as that of any other Territory.

Conference at New York.

The Saints will meet in the capacity of a Conference at Brookes' Assembly Rooms, 361 Broome street, New York, on the first Sunday of April.

Representatives from all the branches composing the New York Conference are expected to meet at the house of President John Taylor, the evening preceding the Conference to give a report of the state of the branches. Scattered members, unconnected with any organized branch, who may not find it convenient to be present will please forward a report the week previous to Conference, to the address of the Secretary, Mr. Wm. J. Silver, at this office.

Social Party.

THE Monday evening following the New York Conference there will be a social party in the Broome Street Hall. Doors open at 4 o'clock, P. M.; Chair to be taken at 5 o'clock precisely. Tickets of admission 25 cents each, children under 12 years half price, to be had of Elder Silver at the hall, the Presidents of districts at their district meetings, and Elder Dulin, at the office of THE MORMON.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE brotherly Times and Tribune have had some fencing over the course to be adopted by the inhabitants of Kansas—the former recommending a cessation of outside pressure and counsel to rebellion against the laws, good or bad; while the Philosopher sticks to opposing the "bogus enactments."

The Hon. Nathaniel P. Banks, late Speaker of the U. S. House of Representatives, passed through here last weak, with his family, for home. The Tribune first told him he was a great man and then snubbed him for the defeat of Fremont, alleging that the "Pathfinder" would have found the White House if the Republican party had not followed the counsels of the ex-Speaker and folks of his school, who are ever too late to catch the early worm. That's a poor compliment to Mr. Banks after all his services to the cause of Brudder Greeley and Uncle Thomas.

The decision of the majority of the Supreme Court on the Dred Scott case promises to furnish for some time to come buncomb for dried up stump orators, unemployed politicians, drowsy editors and meddling ministers. They wax warm in wrath. Dr. Cheever, of this city, is floundering about in his rostrum—a perfect rival to Beecher. The Democratic journals are giving him it heavy and in not over fine language. Pity men cannot bridal the unruly member. But so it goes. This generation must have excitement, and when there is a scarcity of Barnums to furnish the harmless, in the absence of awful steamboat explosions, terrible railway accidents, outrageous swindling, and horrible murders, the press and pulpit must be busy in their line.

The rat-poisoned water at Washington has had other victims, and the more that is said about it seems to place it further in the mist of mystery.

Gotham has been nicely moved lately by the daughter of a wealthy nabob up town and John, the coachman, a dear boy from the Emerald Isle, getting joined in the bands of wedlock—a modern edition of Romeo and Juliet. The father's counsel tried to make out that the young lady was not just at the moment of the marriage exactly compos mentis; but investigation tending to prove that all was well, and no fraud or deception practiced upon her by John, the judge ordered her to be released if restrained by parents, and she is now de facto Mrs. Dean.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

THE war between Persia and England has terminated—the treaty of peace was signed at Paris on the 2d inst., and is on its way to Persia.

Lord Palmerston's government has been severely handled in the House of Commons over the Chinese difficulty. For some days the justice of the English hostilities at Canton were debated, and, after long and able speeches on both sides, the House divided on Mr. Cobden's motion of disapproval of the war, resulting in a majority of 16 against the government. In consideration of the embarrassments it might occasion to the public service, the ministry will not for the present resign, but the dissolution of parliament will take place at the earliest moment. The result of the vote was not anticipated by either side, but the speechifying had stirred up the blood of Palmerston's political opponents, and the leaders—Disraeli, Gladstone and Cobden made common cause against him, and so followed their respective parties. The English part in the Chinese war, be it right or wrong, with the present defeat of the government, will long be remembered and rejoiced over by the despotic crowned heads who hate English meddling.

Sir John McNeill and Colonel Tulloch, the British officers who were sent to the Crimea to ascertain the causes of the deplorable losses in the English army (not before the enemy) and the best means of providing against its total destruction from want through bad arrangements, have each been offered £1000 by the government as a kind of recognition of their services! They have, with great credit to their names, sent back the paltry pelf. Won't have it. It is a common saying that "Republics are ungrateful," but this tops anything republican.

Poverty among the working classes is creating considerable stir. The rich prescribe emigration as a cure for the evil. The poor man's advocate goes in for colonizing all the parks, hunting grounds and spare lands of the noblesse. Poverty and crime are on the increase in the old world as in the new. What's the matter? No scarcity of ministers, missionaries, tract and Bible societies. We shall give the cue to the salvation of the people, if they have only sense enough to take and practice it. Here it is: Do right, do no wrong for anyone or anything; fear God in heart, keep His commandments, work, eat, live and be happy in the possession of a pure conscience. If you can't get work and can't serve God in one place, go where you can. Lest you should have difficulty in knowing where, we add, go to Utah—but if you don't mean to do as we have prescribed, you need not go there; stay at home.

The first conference on the Neuchatel question met at Paris on Thursday, the 5th inst. From our file of Swiss papers we learn of great discontentment among the people. The difficulties are not yet ended.

The other nations are just "as well as can be expected." Bomba is nearing towards the Pope, and remains the old tyrant. On dit, that a Concordat, similar to that arranged between Austria and Pio Nino, is in course of arrangement between the Holy Father and the King of the two Sicilies—Austria, Naples and Rome. Capital. Fine prospects for liberty!

Correspondence of Elder J. F. Snedaker

SCHUYLKILL HAVEN, Schuylkill Co., Pa., March, 20, 1857.

PRES. TAYLOR,—Dear Bro.:—Believing that you are always pleased to hear from Elders laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, more especially from those under your immediate Presidency, I take the present opportunity to address you.

I beg leave, in the first place, to express my sincere thanks, and heartfelt gratitude to my Heavenly Father for granting me uninterrupted good health, since I have been engaged in my present mission; and still more, that I am considered worthy to bear the message of life and salvation to those who sit in darkness; and, that the Lord has thus far been with me through His good spirit, and strengthened me to the performing of the duties incumbent upon me, as an Elder in the Church of Christ. I have realized the presence of the Holy Spirit in my administration. The honest and upright have been made to rejoice in the words of Truth and the blessings of the Gospel; while the wicked have gnashed their teeth, and exhibited every evil passion of which the grand author of error, lies, and hypocrisy is the father. I feel therefore to adore, and praise the name of the Lord all the day long, for His mercies and blessings extended unto me, in common with all His people.

Since my last communication to you, I have extended my circuit of travelling into several counties of this State (or rather in this portion of the State), where the Gospel has been but very little preached of late years. And for the last few weeks I have labored mostly in the vicinity of Danville, Mantone Co., with some success. The people there not being quite so bigoted as in some other parts, granted me the free use of some of their school-houses, and came out pretty well to hear for themselves what we as a people actually do believe in, which caused a spirit of inquiry to spring up in the minds of some, and which, in connection with the co-operation of a few faithful brethren who were there, has resulted in several being baptized, and more are believing and investigating the work. All that the doctrines and principles of the Latter Day Saints require, is honest, and impartial investigation, to convince every honest person that they are true. I organized the Saints there into a District of the Minersville Branch; and I have no doubt that much good will yet be done there.

The Branches of the Church in Schuylkill Co., are all in a healthy state. The Saints, as a general thing, are united and manifest a good spirit; they all express a firm determination to continue in the cause they have espoused, and to assist in building up, and sustaining the same with all their might.

In or rather near this place (Schuylkill Haven) a little incident transpired lately which shows plainly the pusillanimity of the preachers and defenders of modern Christianity. A literary society got up some resolutions to have a discussion on true Christianity, and legal authority to preach the Gospel; and invited some of the brethren here to take one side, and several preachers to take the other side of the question. The parties were waited upon by a committee, and agreements entered into to meet on a specified evening for to discuss the subjects in question. When the appointed evening arrived a large audience assembled to hear the proposed debate. But to the chagrin of some of the most pious crusaders against Truth, not one of the ministers made their appearance—their promise to appear notwithstanding. Thus showing plainly that they have no confidence in their own systems, and dare not venture a public and impartial investigation. When it comes, however, to misrepresentation behind our backs, and in a place where we had no chance to defend ourselves, we find men like the above alluded to, to be ever ready and on hand. Yes, the vilest calumnies and basest slanders glide from off the tongues of such like holy (!) men with the greatest conceivable ease. They, like their predecessors of old, know very well how to glide about with a long face and pious garb, to disseminate their corrupt and poisonous influences against the principles of truth and the people of God. But in spite of all their unhallowed exertions the doctrines of Christ as advocated by the Latter Day Saints remain invincible. "Truth is mighty and will prevail." The day is not far hence, when the reality of the same will be sounded in the ears of all advocates of error, with a voice of thunder to their utter dismay.

With an ever-praying desire for your welfare and support, in the position you occupy as a defender of the work, and people of God, I subscribe myself your humble servant in the Gospel of Christ. JOHN F. SNEDAKER.

OFFICE OF THE DARSTELLER, 108, Rue de Cendrier, Geneve, 1857.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE, Dear Brother, From my silence you may have concluded that I am negligent, but, such is far from my feelings, I have always recalled to my mind your good instructions and wise counsels which I shall never forget. I wish to remind you of some persons who often think of you, and I want to express to you the pleasure I experience since my heart has yielded to the truth, and since my mind has been open to comprehend and appreciate the value of that precious seed which you have planted in my bosom, which, through the help of the Holy Ghost, has grown up and enlarged, for which blessing I thank God, our Heavenly Father.

The Branch here is doing pretty well, although on account of the hard-heartedness of the people, few are willing to listen to the Elders, (I speak of strangers.) We have always more or less strangers at our meetings. With an evil purpose come sometimes students of theology, impertinent persons, who only seem to be fit for wrangling and confusion, and instead of calling them students of the ministry, they might be called advocates of discord and strife, as they have a talent for falsifying the Bible and avoiding critical questions; such persons want to see miracles. Among those that come and go, there are a few honest souls, who embrace the truth and retain their integrity. Although the ears of the people are deaf and their hearts hardened, we do not cease making our greatest efforts in distributing tracts in the country villages, among those who desire to have them; we go into houses, stores, and even in the street, whenever we see an honest person we give him tracts. Sometimes we are looked upon as fools, sometimes with curiosity, mockery and even hatred, but unconcerned about that, we preach everywhere of Joseph who is so much despised, and bear our testimony to all.

On the steamboat, I met one of those who are servants of the lip, but not of the heart, to whom I bore my testimony; as soon as he knew me to be a Mormon, he wanted to enter into a discussion. Our conversation drew some persons around us, as I was not afraid to speak in a loud voice, to the chagrin of the Methodist, who soon after left me; so that he made himself ridiculous in the eyes of the bystanders, who thought very little of his profession of faith. The Elders here, as everywhere else, prove that they seek after the will of God, and not of man.

My father is indeed faithful to his covenant, and despite of his advanced age and constant travels in his business, (Commis Voyageur,) he is in good health. Time seems to improve his appearance: peace and serenity of mind are reflected in his countenance: he has been appointed a traveling Elder in this mission. My mother has been baptized; but, for my brothers and sisters, religion, especially ours, is incompatible with their worldly ideas—they know not the proverb—"All that glitters is not gold."

Your sincere friend, Mr. Javel, is in excellent health, and anxious to hear from you. When he visits my father's family; if religion is the conversation, he espouses our cause, and declares it the only true religion, but his early associations with the Catholic ministers in France and the confusion and back-biting among Protestants, had, before you knew him, inclined his mind to infidelity—and it still, in some measure, holds to him, or I think he would be baptized.

Prest. Morel is still the same good man, but feels his slavery in Babylon, particularly, as it may be years before he can get to Zion. He is a faithful soldier of Christ. He sends to you his kindest love. Elder J. J. Ruban makes every effort to spread the work of the Lord—always active.

President John L. Smith, moved upon by the Holy Ghost, has proposed to purify our branch and for that purpose all are going to be re-baptized. On the 12th of January, after a meeting of the priesthood, we, the members thereof, were re-baptized by President Smith. We were filled with the spirit of union and love. The weather that had been cold and cloudy before seemed to get fine and the moon shed forth her silvery rays on the banks of the charming lake of Geneva. This spectacle together with the imposing ceremony had an indescribable charm, the Saints will be re-baptized shortly.

Sister Graunauer, whom we call the mother of the Mormons for her kindness to the elders and Saints, desires to be kindly remembered to yourself and family, her husband is sceptical to all religion, nevertheless, he is our friend and is very obliging, and in the clamor against us bears testimony that we are good men.

Of course you know of the difficulties between Neuchatel and Prussia. You cannot imagine the condition of the people. Speak to them of peace with God they cannot listen, but speak of the King of Prussia and war and they are all attention. Several of our German and Swiss Elders are gone to the seat of war, and I anticipate my turn soon as my name is enrolled in the bataillon d'elite.

President Smith joins me in sincere salutations in which I am sure all the Saints would likewise join, but in their absence permit me to do so anticipating their wishes.

With kindest regards for your family, receive my respectful and sincere salutations, and believe me your devoted.

OCTAVE URSENBACH.

[We have translated and published the foregoing letter, as it breaths a good spirit, and sincere devotion to the work of the Lord, and thinking that many of our Swiss brethren in Utah will be pleased to learn of their brethren and friends whose names are there mentioned. We are deeply interested in the progress of the work of the Lord on the continent of Europe, and are glad to see that Bro. John L. Smith has around him men who will maintain the truth and spread abroad the Gospel in spite of the many obstacles with which they have to contend in continental nations.—ED.]

Correspondence from London.

35 JEWIN STREET, City, London, February 27, 1857.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE—Dear Brother: * * * Having finished the business portion of my letter, I may as well fill my sheet with items relating to the Church, in which we are ever interested, in whatever position we may be placed or wherever our lot may be cast.

The first ship load of Saints is not likely to sail from Liverpool till the latter end of March. We have about one hundred and thirty names on our books for that ship, principally from London.

President Benson has just left me this morning. His visit has been a blessing to us all. We have had reformation meetings in London during the last week. The Presidents of Conferences and all the Travelling Elders in the London Pastorate met on Wednesday morning last for fasting and prayer; in the afternoon we were all re-baptised, and in the evening re-confirmed. You can imagine, better than I can describe, the good time we had together. Every man (and there were thirty-two of us) manifested our desires, and these were to be more humble, more diligent and more energetic in the discharge of our duties than we have heretofore been. President Benson felt as free, and expressed himself as freely, as he used to do in our mountain home, and we really felt well. Mormonism is decidedly on the increase in London. Baptisms are very frequent; the priesthood united; every man employed doing something to aid the onward progress of the work of God. It is now fifteen years since I was appointed on my first mission, and I can say with truth that I never labored with more pleasure in the work of the ministry than I do in this Pastorate, surrounded as I am with some of the best men the Church can produce as Conference Presidents, Travelling Elders, and Presidents of Branches, and possessing myself a portion of the spirit of God and the confidence of my superiors. I cannot help but enjoy myself, even in the midst of domestic afflictions. Yours as ever, J. D. ROSS.

[We are sorry to learn by the letter of Bro. Ross of the death of his partner in life, and sympathize with him in his bereavement; but in the midst of his trials we are glad to see the good spirit he manifests in bearing up under them.

We doubt not that many of our readers will be pleased to learn of the progress of the work of the Lord in the English metropolis. From other private letters we are assured that the members of the Church there are renewing their covenants, and in word and spirit carrying out the instructions of the First Presidency in Zion. We learn likewise by the Millennial Star that the Saints throughout the British Mission are bestirring themselves, and endeavoring to "live their religion."—ED.

Questions.

THE editor of the Chronotype seems to have a malicious antipathy against the Mormons. For the benefit of his readers, we will make a few plain interrogations, which he is at liberty to answer, or let alone as he pleases:

1st. What does he know about the true doctrines of that order?

2d. Are not the Mormons here as quiet and industrious as any other citizens?

3d. Did the people ever injure him?

4th. How many subscribers would he have to his paper, if the Mormons and their friends should discontinue subscriptions?

5th. Would not that people be a nice set of fellows if they endorsed his political views?

6th. What would become of his "High School" (!) were no Mormon children to attend it?

7th. Where would this pious (!) editor now have been "editin" and keeping school, if the Mormons had not opened, improved, and brought into notice this region?

8th. Who is this man who comes here a stranger, and tries to swell so large?

9th. What were the PECULIAR circumstances that hastened his emigration here.

THE MORMON.

Correspondence from Utah

NEPHI CITY, Juab Co., Utah, January 8th, 1857.

BELOVED BROTHER TAYLOR: It is some time since I received yours, and ought to have written before; but you must excuse me, and I will be more faithful in the future. I have been very busy raising grain. As it is different farming now to what it was the first two years that this Territory was settled. We have to contend with grasshoppers and worms of every kind. Our potatoes were nearly all destroyed, and corn greatly damaged; but, through all our trials, God has a hand in it. Last season the wheat crop was good: Brother C. H. Bragan, of this place, raised one hundred and sixty-five bushels of wheat from three acres. I suffered from sowing late wheat that was touched with the frost, and had to re-sow—many had to do the same thing.

I was at Salt Lake City in Nov. last, and staid at your house three days, for it seems home to me. All the theme here is reformation. Our beloved Prest. Grant wore himself out in preaching to the Saints, for truly many of us have been in the dark and asleep, and ought to be thankful to our heavenly Father for His continued mercy to His people. I don't know anything that I can write, better than some of my own feelings and views concerning this great and glorious work. When I consider that God has gathered this people to these peaceful vales, in answer to their prayers and supplications when they were in the lands of bondage and oppression, and to see them come and partake of liberty and plenty; owning houses, lands, cattle and goods: such things as they never enjoyed before, nor never would have enjoyed in their old homes; then to see them put past their religion, become deaf to the counsels of the servants of God, and the whisperings of the still-small voice, I can truly say, Thy mercy, oh Father, is great! Many have gathered here for the loaves and fishes; they could not have come to worship God; if so, they have forgotten what they have come for. Prest. Kimball, said, a short time since, that the greatest Apostacy was about to take place that ever had been since this Church has been organized. It cannot be otherwise; for if the faithful keep reforming, the wicked cannot dwell among them. Unless a man has the fire within, he will be consumed. I feel the necessity of reforming more and more every day, and never did I enjoy the Spirit of God as I do now.

Our meeting-house is full to overflowing; and instead of no one feeling like speaking, many rise up at the same time and wait for a chance to speak. The servants of God are crying, "Wake up, wake up, wake up!" the Spirit of God bears witness to every Saint that it is required. I can say that in Nephi, the Saints are beginning to feel the need of arousing themselves from their lethargy.

I have wished many-a-time to preach the Gospel: now the time has come, when I, and and every Elder in Israel, can do it to ourselves, to our families, and all the nations in Deseret. Every man and woman has a great work to do, to cleanse themselves, and make restitution to those they have injured: when that is done, we shall have a union that will be strong and lasting. I believe it will be done, and the Saints will reform and increase in the power of God, for the Scriptures say, "The sinners in Zion shall fear and tremble." That day is dawning, and near at hand. For a short time, let me look at the situation of the world.

If the Saints in Utah are called on to awake up and reform, (where wickedness is but a drop in the bucket,) or the judgments of God will overtake them, what will become of those who will not hearken to the servants of God, when they are toiling day and night to warn them of the near approach of the judgments of a just God, for the blood of the martyred Prophets is crying for vengeance on this nation that allowed them to be slain, while they were crying with a loud voice, "Turn to the Lord and receive salvation at His hands. You must excuse my preaching, for I am full of it all the time. I rejoice in the testimonies of Jesus, and can still bear testimony that God has spoken from the Heavens, calling on all men to repent, for the day of His visitation is nigh. I know, and bear testimony, that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Lord, and that Brigham Young is his lawful successor. Whatever corrupt editors may say, I know that Brigham Young is a good man: that is my testimony, and I have known him over eleven years—part of the time living near neighbor to him. I do rejoice that ever I heard your voice in Mona's fair isle, proclaiming the sound of the everlasting Gospel.

When I bow at the family altar, you are remembered, also George and Angus, for I love you all. I shall rejoice when your mission is done and you are at home, for I long to have a chat with you and receive your fatherly counsel.

May the blessings of our heavenly Father attend you continually, is my continued prayer in the name of Jesus. Amen. THE MORMON is always received by the Saints with joy, and many a prayer is breathed for you and Bro. G. A. Smith. Please remember me to him.

From your affectionate brother in Christ,

SAMUEL PITCHFORTH.

Shall We not Progress?

FROM our own experience and the accounts which we receive from other places, we are satisfied that the reformation which has been commenced in the valleys of the mountains—Utah—is extending to the Saints throughout the world, and producing the happiest results. Humility and love, and a determination to live nearer unto the Lord, are sensibly increasing among the people, and these feelings are attended by the accompanying fruits. A distinction will soon be apparent (it is already the case to some extent) between those who are determined to live their religion and enjoy the blessings thereof, and those who have suffered themselves to be so far lulled to sleep and to be overcome by lethargy as to view the work of reformation as entirely unnecessary so far as they are concerned. This distinction will grow wider and wider, until such individuals will cease to be one with their brethren and sisters; and as they will, of course, be of the opinion that they, themselves, are all right, they will look upon those who are different from themselves, as wrong, and will cease to have pleasure in their society and withdraw themselves from it. This will be the inevitable consequence of the movement now being made throughout the Church, and will have a greater tendency to purify the people and add power to the organization of the kingdom of God upon the earth, than any movement that has been made for some time. With the increase of purity, power and the determination to live more strictly in accordance with the requirements of their religion among the Saints, there will be a corresponding increase of hatred and malignity manifested by those who are opposed to the work of God. Satan will not be content to witness the fulfilment of the purposes of God and the rolling forth of His kingdom, without making every exertion in his power to prevent it; and he will not fail to excrcise all his subtlety and exert all his influence to obtain the aid of those who will give heed unto him, to be his agents in counteracting the designs of the Lord. This will be all right, and though it is his desire to operate against and retard the spread and onward increase of the kingdom by the measures he shall adopt, yet it will help to consummate that which he is so desirous to prevent.

The idea of the Saints reforming, is something that many cannot understand. They cannot see any need of it. But they will learn if they adhere to the truth, that there exists, so long as mankind are imperfect, a continual necessity for reformation. When a Latter Day Saint ceases to perceive the necessity of reformation, or doing better than he has been doing, it should be an evidence to him that he has not the light of the Spirit as he should have it, and that he has ceased to progress. If he is fully possessed of the Spirit of the Lord, he will progress, and if he progresses he will see ample cause to do better to-day than he did yesterday, this week than last week, and the present year then the preceeding year. His experience, if he should live his religion, will increase daily, and with the aid of that experience he will comprehend more perfectly the duties devolving upon him, and will be more capable of discharging them every day that he lives than the preceding one. So that a man or a woman that is living up to the light of truth, is continually reforming—progression implying reform. But the late reformation which has been commenced in Utah, and which is being extended to the churches scattered abroad, is a deep and thorough repentance from sin, a renewal of covenants and a complete awakening from the lethargy and carelessness which has been gradually but surely increasing amongst too many of the Saints. It is a call for the people of God to descend into the depths of humility, to confess their sins with a broken and contrite heart before the Lord, and to continue in so doing, living up to all the precepts of their holy religion, that they may enjoy the fulness of the Spirit. If they should do this, and continually persevere in doing it, they will experience greater blessings than they have ever heretofore done.

Among sectarians, it is a practice to refer with great pleasure to the time when they first experienced, what they term religion, and they express great anxiety to have that feeling return to them; they frequently mourn because, after years of adherence to their church, they do not feel so warm and happy as they once did. We have also heard some Latter Day Saints express themselves in this manner, referring to a previous time in their experience when they felt the Spirit in greater power and enjoyed the gifts more abundantly than they did then, the time of speaking. Why is this? Is it because "Mormonism," or more properly speaking, the Gospel of Jesus possesses less power and is accompanied by a smaller amount of the Spirit and Gifts of God now than formerly? Every one who has lived up to the requirements of his or her religion can answer this for him or herself. No man or woman who has not ceased to progress, and who has no need of deep and heartfelt repentance, will ever allude to any previous period of their lives as a time of superior enjoyment, (so far as the Spirit and power of God are concerned,) to that then experienced. For, however unfavorable the circumstances by which they may be surrounded, if they undeviatingly pursue the course which the Lord has pointed out, present light, intelligence, gifts of the Spirit and happiness will contrast very favorably with the amount of these blessings experienced by them at any previous time. If it were not so, could the people of God be said to progress, increasing in faith and preparing for the revelation of the Lord Jesus? The Saints may put it down as a truth, that if they do not feel to enjoy the power of God more at the present time than they ever did in their lives before, there is something wrong, and they have need to critically examine themselves and repent with all their heart, or they will get worse and worse, until they are completely destitute of the light and intelligence of the Lord. No individual who has kept pace with the onward progress of the work of God, who has continued to obey every law and ordinance revealed by the Lord for man's salvation will be in this situation.

Belief, repentance, baptism and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, will be attended to in their turn by the individual desirous of progressing, and when these are obeyed, he or she will not stop, but will go on from principle to principle, from light to light, until they shall be restored to the presence of God the Father. It is because individuals cease to obey these commandments and ordinances that they cease to have the feelings they once had. When they first became acquainted with the work of God, they rejoiced that He in His mercy had revealed it unto them, and they went forth gladly, repenting of their sins, and obeyed the ordinances of baptism and laying on of hands. Their joy was full, for they had been obedient; and the Lord acknowledged it by bestowing His blessing. Now, this same Lord, even the Almighty, has revealed by the same instrument through which the necessity of obedience to these primary ordinances was made known—other ordinances and laws to be obeyed; but, strange to tell, many who received the first principles and obeyed the first ordinances so gladly, and obtained such exceeding great joy because of their submission to the will the Lord, take exception to these, and either think it unnecessary to obey them or defer the obedience until some more favorable opportunity. The consequence is, they are numbered among the disobedient, and do not have that claim upon the Spirit and blessings of the Lord they once had. Had they persevered as they commenced, that joy which was so exquisite, and which filled them with such love to God and their brethren, would have increased and been ever-present, and they never would have caused to look back with a longing desire for the possession once more of those feelings which they once had.

The impetus which this reformation will undoubtedly give to the work of the Lord on the earth is incalculable. Every elder who goes to the nations in discharge of his duty from this time forth, will be accompanied by an increase of power. The time is comparatively short in which a mighty work must be accomplished and the word of the Lord through his Prophets, regarding the Latter-Day Dispensation, be fulfilled. It is meet, therefore, that there should be increased power bestowed; and that the Saints may be prepared to receive it, they must reform and put away every thing that is evil from their midst. And if they have left any law, commandment or ordinance unperformed, it is their duty to seek to obey it as soon as practicable, and by that means again obtain that peace and joy which is precious and desirable above all things.

Remarks

By President Brigham Young, Tabernacle, Nov. 30, 1856.

REPORTED BY GEO. D. WATT.

I HAVE a few words to say before this meeting is brought to a close. We expect that the last hand-cart company, Bro. Martin's, will soon be in the streets by the Council House. What preparations the Bishops have made for their comfortable reception and temporary disposal I know not, but I know what I desire and am going to tell it to the people.

When those persons arrive I do not want to see them put into houses by themselves; I want to have them distributed in this city among the families that have good and comfortable houses; and I wish the sisters now before me, and all who know how and can, to nurse and wait upon the new comers and prudently administer medicine and food to them. To speak upon these things is a part of my religion, for it pertains to taking care of the Saints.

It is a considerable of a labor to go and preach the gospel to the nations, but we find by experience that that is a very small portion of the work we have to perform; it is but the first item of the business that is upon us. Our labor constantly becomes more arduous, and we will find that it will increase upon us, instead of decreasing; we understand this perfectly well.

In our traditions we had supposed that we should see the kingdom of God established on the earth and Zion become the joy thereof, by merely gathering to the several Stakes; and that then our labors would be done and we should have nothing to do but sit and "sing ourselves away to everlasting bliss;" but we will find that preaching the gospel is but a small portion of the labor that is upon us.

We have quite a task upon us this season, for when the last hand-cart company arrives and is comfortably disposed of, we still have about 400 more brethren and sisters who are yet beyond Fort Bridger, probably near Green River. They are those that came out with teams, or the independent companies. All their gold, their silver, their cattle, and their other property will not enable them to reach here before the snow has overtaken them; and they had plenty of cattle, of money and means; everything that heart could wish, for an outfit for crossing the plains.

To succor those 400 I call out door business; I call it a snow business, a labor, mountain toil and fatigue of a severe description.

Night before last we received a messenger from those two independent trains, by whom we have learned that they are living on their cattle at Green River. The brethren at Fort Supply are striving to get them as far as Fort Bridger.

Our messengers started out night before last to gather fifty more relief teams. We have sent to Utah and Tooele counties.

Until now, this and Davis and Weber counties have had to bear the burden. We have sent for those teams to carry flour to Fort Bridger, and load back with people. Some, perhaps, will have to be left there, and if so we will carry supplies to them and keep bringing in the people, until all are comfortably provided for.

Those that are yet back have been living, probably for nearly a week, solely on the cattle that die; they have no flour, and are subsisting upon cattle that drop down through weakness and exposure, which is certainly hard fare. Still, do not be scared, for they will eat and live and come here.

I can say that the great majority of the brethren here, so far as we have called on them to assist this year's immigration, have freely and nobly manifested their faith by their works. True, some that went out have been imprudent, though I think it will all come out right, and I can feel to bless them, notwithstanding they have been imprudent and foolish. I will tell them wherein, when I can have them before me in this congregation.

As soon as this meeting is dismissed I want the brethren and sisters to repair to their homes, where their Bishops will call on them to take in some of this company; the Bishops will distribute them as the people can receive them.

I have sent word to Bishop Hunter that I will take in all that others will not take. I have house room enough to accommodate the whole of them, if it is necessary; I am willing to take my proportion.

The afternoon meeting will be omitted, for I wish the sisters to go home and prepare to give those who have just arrived a mouthful of something to eat, and to wash them and nurse them up. You know that I would give more for a dish of pudding and milk, or a baked potato and salt, were I in the situation of those persons who have just come in, than I would for all your prayers, though you were to stay here all the afternoon and pray. Prayer is good, but when baked potatoes and pudding and milk are needed, prayer will not supply their place on this occasion; give every duty its proper time and place.

This is what I can say truly, with the rest of your counselors and directors, that no man or woman, that we have any knowledge of in the church, has refused to do as requested, with regard to this immigration; they have run by day and night. Our messengers have been travelling from here to the Platte, and back and forth between Bridger, Green river and the Sweetwater; and scores of men have been riding by day and night, without having enjoyed an undisturbed night's rest during the last two months, and occasionally snatching a little sleep when sitting by the camp fire. They have been riding by day and night, hurrying to and fro and laboring with their might, and have not refused to do what we have required of them; this is to their praise. Works have been most noble when they were needed; we put works to our faith, and in this case we realize that our faith alone would have been perfectly dead and useless, would have been of no avail, in saving our brethren that were in the snow, but by putting works with faith we have been already blest in rescuing many and bringing them to where we can now do them more good.

Some you will find with their feet frozen to their ankles; some are frozen to their knees, and some have their hands frosted. They want good nursing, and if you do not know how to treat frozen flesh, let me inform you that the same treatment is needed as in a burn, and by pursuing that method you can heal them.

The Bishops are here, and as soon as the meeting is closed they will meet the company and dispose of them as wisdom shall dictate. And I want you to understand that we desire this people to nurse them up; we want you to receive them as your own children, and to have the same feeling for them. We are their temporal saviors, for we have saved them from death. Bro. Chislett, who has just been addressing you, would have been dead long before this, had it not been for the assistance of Bro. George D. Grant and those who went back with him. The rear companies would never have got over the Rocky Ridge, or seen the upper crossing of the Sweetwater, had they not been helped from here.

Now that most of them are here we will continue our labors of love, until they are able to take care of themselves, and we will receive the blessing. You need not be distrustful about that, for the Lord will bless this people; and I feel to bless them all the time, and this I continually try to carry out in my life.

The two wagon companies still out we are sending for, and will supply flour to such as may have to tarry at Forts Bridger and Supply. We do not calculate to have the winter blast stop us; it cannot stop the Mormon Elders, for they have faith, wisdom and courage; they can perform that which no other men on the earth can perform.

I bless you, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, with all the power and authority of the priesthood that it is my right to bless you with; and by faith I seal the blessings of heaven upon you daily, and pray that you may be blessed; you have my good feelings all the time.

I wish all to be faithful in their houses, and to let evil spirits alone; to repent of your heart wanderings and your blackaldings and return to the Lord and seek him daily, hourly and momentarily. Cleave to the Lord and all righteous principles, that we may not hear of anything being done, in this, that, or the other part of the city, derogatory to the character of a Christian. May God bless you. Amen.

The Clerk read,

BUSINESS CHAMBER, G. S. L. City, Nov. 29, 1856.

Mr. Daniel Spencer, President of this Stake of Zion.

Dear Sir:—Will you be kind enough to announce from the Stand in the Tabernacle, on Sabbath, that my Bibles are now opened and ready for distribution, and that I purpose commencing family visitations in the city during the ensuing week; but for the accommodation of those individuals and families who may desire it, I can be found in the Depository at Mr. W. C. Staines', on South Temple street, from 7 to 9 A. M. and from 5 to 7 P. M. Yours truly,

C. B. VAN EMMAN,
Agent for American Bible Society.

After which,

President Young remarked as follows:—Mr. Van Emman, an agent of the American Bible Society, and who crossed the plains in Capt. Smoot's company, has a large number of Bibles and Testaments in several different languages, which he is instructed to distribute in this Territory, both by sale and gift, according to the circumstances of the individuals desiring those books.

It is expected that those who desire any of those books will purchase, wherever they are able, as that will afford Mr. Van Emman a larger number for gratuitous distribution to the poor; for this reason I trust that no one who has means will ask for a book without proffering payment.

The Bible Society, of which Mr. Van Emman is an agent, is doing a very extensive business, and have distributed millions and millions of Bibles. Mr. J. C. Brigham, a Secretary of that Society, sent me two boxes of Bibles, which have been distributed through this Territory.

So far as I am acquainted with him, Mr. Van Emman appears to be much of a gentleman; he is a sociable, affable young man, and I wish him well; I wish well to all institutions like the one for which he is an agent.

I know that many of this people feel that Bible Societies, Tract Societies, Missionary Societies, &c., are not of much benefit, but let me tell you once for all, and it is true, if it had not been for those very societies, you would have found, in scores of places where our brethren have been and preached the gospel unmolested, that they would have been mistreated and violently abused for the gospel's sake, as br. Chislett has been. The members of those Societies will be rewarded for the good they have done; that is my faith. If they have not the Priesthood, they are doing all they can; and we should be the more humble and thankful because the Lord has given unto us the priesthood.—[Deseret News.

FOR THE MORMON.

Morality.

All classes of society, especially all religious sects, plume themselves on their morality. Each sect presumes that its moral code, if not its practice, is pure, and individual religionists profess to be ambitious to lead moral lives. And though there is much difference among sects as to special theological dogmas and tenets, as to morality, there is, or is supposed to be, nearly a perfect uniformity of belief, yet if the subject was duly examined, there would be found to be, if not as much difference, as much ground for difference, in this department as in the other, and that false morality is quite as rife and abundant as false religion. Among the current though counterfeit codes of morals may be enumerated—the morality that proceeds from mere worldly, unquestioning compliance, the morality of fashion—the moral code enforced by the statutes of Cæsar, the so called "fear of God taught by the precepts of men"—the morality of commerce and equal exchange, arithmetical morality, reciprocal duty, the code of Mammon, the righteousness of the "Scribes and Pharisees," which gives no title to the "Kingdom of Heaven"—supercilious morality, the morality of censure, and slander, exerting a strict guardianship over the morals of others and diverting attention from its own—the crushing morality enforced by the tyranny of public opinion, the morality of Babylon, the rorality of the majority which is but another version of Brest law that might is right, following the crowd to do evil, dethroning God, hoping to escape the guilt of crime, by merging its individuality in the multitude, that it may not be individually pointed at, as if God was not all seeing—the morality of competition, aiming to be highest and foremost in everything, even in rascality—cowardly morality fearing the censure of man more than the wrath of God, afraid courageously to face the censures of the world in virtue's cause and take up the cross, worshipping the world, seeking and accepting its reward from the world, in riches and vain worldly honors, obedient to the world not to God, yet obtaining its final reward in the firey lake, with the "unbelieving, abominable, murderer" and others—hypocritical morality, acting a farce throughout life with a mask on, hiding nature and real character, than which, it is no exageration to say, that downright transgression is less displeasing to God—the negative non-committal morality of doing no harm, the morality of a stone or log, which, however, has no existence, for they that don't help hinder, by standing in the way, "they that are not for Christ are against him." If we consider how utterly destitute these are of the saving elements of faith, self-sacrifice and taking up the cross, to say nothing of the palpable crimes, and crying practical abomination of the age, we will speedily come to the conclusion that the morality of the world even of this enlightened, civilized, christianized world, that plumes itself so much on its superior morality, especially as compared to its neighbors, is all trash, worse than trash positively and abominably sinful, for "whatever is not faith is sin."

The Mormons have broken in on the despotism of Babylon, in many things, specially in one department, and have courageously trampled under foot the feudal, heathen morality of the age. As the people advance in the morality of "the kingdom," by living up to the instruction which they continually receive from the authorities of the church, the spirit and revelations of the Most High will enlighten His seers, that they may utter forth His will to His people, and innovate still further on the laws of Satan's kingdom.

SIMPLE SUBTRACTION,

Is the method of finding the difference of any two numbers, of the same denomination, by taking the less from the greater.

RULE—1. Place the less number under the greater, so that the units may stand under units, tens under tens, &c., and draw a line below them.

2. Begin at the right hand, and take each figure in the lower line, when it can be done, from that above it, and set down the remainder.

3. But if any of those figures be greater than those above them, add ten to the upper one, and then take the lower figure from it; observing, in this case, to carry one for the ten that was borrowed to the next lower figure; with which proceed as before, and so on till the whole is finished.

METHOD OF PROOF.

Add the remainder to the less number, and if the sum be equal to the greater, the work is right.

A Fast People.

THE Yankees have been hitherto considered a very fast people, but the English, in religious matters, seem to have gone ahead of us on the high-pressure principle. A late English paper says:

"Many prayer books have been sold in London with a looking glass inserted on the inner side of the cover, in order that the ladies may arrange their hair or admire themselves while using the book at church."

The next thing we expect to hear, is a dressing-room attached to our fashionable churches. Fashion has driven religion to the wall. —[Louisville Journal.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given, to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivité, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Flight of Thought.

SELECTED.

How swift thought flies! Go, mark the lightning's track—
Trace blazing comets to Aphelion back—
The flying fragments a volcano gave—
The leaping torrent or the lashing wave—
The sweeping tornado or the thunder's dash—
The whirlwind's fury or the cannon's flash—
Death's hissing weapon or the rush of time,
That is, and was, e'er life could feel its chime.
From world to world, its rapid wing speeds light,
Creation kindles at its lustrous flight;
Night shrinks diminish'd as it fleeting flies
And rends the shadows from the bright'ning skies,
But swifter thought—it bursts the chains of clay,
Explores the infinite, and soars away
To shapeless chaos on confines of space.
Where sun hath never shone, tries to trace
The extremest verge of all created things.
Through ages past, a trackless pathway wings,
Then flits to future; dares the awful glance
Of all that fills eternity's expanse.
Ascending turns its heaven circling flight,
A blazing meteor from the womb of night,
Mounts the throne of God and looks unblenched.
Its wings unwearied, and its life unquenched;
And light and time pause on their path aghast,
While thought is fleeting in its passage past.
One moment scarce had sped from mortal view,
Till thought returns and could its race renew.

How it Strikes a Stranger.

In one sense, I am not a stranger. "This is my own, my native land;" and greatly is it endeared to me. But having been many years absent, a return to it affects me somewhat as a first coming might a stranger.

I have a few graver things to speak of, in some form, but beg, through your columns, to notice what some may think trifling, perhaps, but which is of importance in its place, the use of certain words and forms of speech, not in accordance with the standard of our noble language, and tending to its corruption.

1. Improper contractions.—Aint, 'taint, haint. The first may be thought an allowable contraction for, are not, but the proper one, certainly, is arn't, as you arn't," &c., in the plural only, whereas aint is used with all numbers and persons, as though it were a regular verb. I aint, you aint, he aint, &c. 'Taint is impersonal, and a contraction for, it aint. Haint is an improper contraction for, have not, which should be havn't, and is the more incorrect when used in the singular number, as, he haint. There is even a further absurdity in sometimes using a negative, as, with this already negative form, he haint got none, instead of he hasn't got any; thus making two negatives, which are equal to an affirmative. The same mistake is made with 'taint, as 'haint, or, it aint none of your business; and even aint, as, I aint got none.

2. Proper contractions improperly used.—Don't, which is the proper form for do not, is used as a contraction for does not, and should be used with the third person singular, as he dosen't, &c., but we as often hear he don't as I don't, or, we don't; while these latter are right, and the other wrong.

3. Improper words, or words improperly used.—Thus preventative, for preventive; some, as an adverb for somewhat, as, he is some better; done for did, as he done a good business, they done well; renewedly, for anew; to fellowship, instead of, to have fellowship; to guess, when there is nothing doubtful, as, I guess I'll go with you, I guess my name is John; expect, when nothing is expected, the time being passed, as, I expect he went there yesterday; reckon, when only an opinion is expressed, as, I reckon that's a good speech; suspect, when there is no ground of suspicion, as, I suspect we will go; calculate, when there is no calculation, as, I calculate to go home to-night. These last five are, it is true, used as expletives, without real meaning—as we too often say well, at the beginning of a sentence, or you know, when addressing another, though he may not know at all, until told, what you assume that he knows—but it would be better to use them less, or in a more appropriate way. For persons of education, instead of saying, I think so and so, to commence almost every expression of opinion with I guess, or I reckon, perhaps prefaced by well, shows too great carelessness. Travelling in some parts of the country, if you inquire how far it is to a tavern, you may be answered, "Well, I don't know, I suspect hard on two miles;" but you would not be apt to think the person thus answering was an educated man.

4. Americanisms.—Plunder, for baggage; balance, for remainder, as the balance of a congregation, after several have left. As a commercial term, it implies the difference between two sums, say of debt and credit, and not properly either one or other, as in this accommodated use. It is certainly not an elegant, much less necessary, word, in this connection, though it has become common, even in writing.

To locate.—As an active verb, this may, perhaps be considered as adopted by English writers; but it is used in this country also in the neuter sense, as, "he locates in town." One may well ask—What does he locate?

To exercise.—Also a neuter, whereas it is an active verb. In a newspaper, a heading stands, "how to exercise," to exercise what! This use is almost universal in conversation, and often in print, instead of, to take exercise, or exercise one's self.

To progress.—As the army progressed, when implying motion, and not mere involuntary progress. The business progressed, is proper.

To result.—In a personal and voluntary sense, as the Judges or Court resulted in his acquittal, instead of, the trial resulted, &c.

To learn, as an active verb, in the sense of teach. This is not strictly speaking, an Americanism, for it is old English, but obsolete in England, and adopted here, as, "I will learn you better manners."

To eventuate.—The undertaking eventuated badly. This has not, perhaps, any high authority.

To reluctate.—I reluctate from that proposal. This phraseology may be like the preceding—little used.

To fix, in the sense of arrange, and as applicable to all kinds of arrangement, of the house, room, person, business, dress, &c.; a sort of servant of all work. It properly means to settle, fasten, &c.; and our language is not so poor that other convenient forms may not be found to express equally well the meaning intended. One may as easily say, set the table, as fix the table; unless, indeed, it is to be fixed, that is, fastened. To belittle, to heft, to advocate, to missionate, to tour, and other similar words, originating here, but more or less adapted elsewhere, deserves some notice, as does quite, in its too frequent use, and real, when used adverbally, as, it is real cold, for really; but I will not dwell upon them.

There is no doubt that the people of this country have a right to enrich the common English with new words and terms, when such are really needed, but they must obtain some currency abroad, before they can be considered as part of the language. New terms, from whatever quarter they may come, must be adopted to express new thoughts, with the advancement of science and the arts. It is as proper now to say, we steamed to Europe, as we sailed; and though the English are particular to distinguish between ride and drive, the former being used only for going on horseback, and the latter for going in a carriage, perhaps we may speak of riding in a car, as we certainly do not drive, though we are driven, or drawn.

It strikes me, as a comparative stranger, that some little attention to these things, in speaking and writing, may be well. There is too much tendency to the slipshod in expression, and sometimes in tones, which at the East especially, are often drawling, with a rising inflection at the end, among even educated men, though certainly all affectation, or even preciseness, should be avoided. There is no occasion for our imitating those who say "orter," for ought to; or mindur, for a mind to; or kinder, for kind of, &c., &c., or to speak of elegant milk, handsome tea, &c., or to call anything monstrous pretty, or terribly handsome. It would be well if our books, which give baby talk, negro language, and vulgarism, would distinguish what is incorrect in italics. Also, when words are wrongly spelt, to show the pronunciation of certain classes, as widder, kalkilate, oblege, &c. This would prevent mistakes on the part of those who think all is correct that they see in print. It may be well also to avoid what some writers fall into, the habit of occasionally separating the sign of the infinitive from the verb, as, to recklessly forego, &c. If there be not care, one may fall into the error of the Frenchman, who mistook the use of will and shall; and when intending to call for help, cried out, "No one shall help me, I will be drowned,' and so was left to his fate.—American Presbyterian. M. W.

The Rothschild Family.

On Wednesday afternoon a marriage was celebrated with great pomp and splendor at Gunnersby Park, near Chiswick, the country seat of Baron Lionel de Rothschild. The contracting parties were the representatives of the two great—or rather, greatest—firms of the Rothschild family, the bride being Miss Leonora, the eldest daughter of Baron Lionel, and the bridegroom Baron Alphonse, the eldest son of Baron James Rothschild of Paris. The wedding repast was laid out in two large rooms, one of which was specially built on to the dining room for the occasion. Both were decorated with exquisite taste and splendor. The walls were covered with large mirrors, with ornamental trellis work between, up which were twined long garlands of artificial passion flowers, lilies, wreaths of orange blossoms and other emblematic Flora suited to the occasion.

The outer saloon was lighted from the roof, which was entirely composed of glass, over the panes of which were strained flutings of white and pink silk in the form of a Maltese cross. The subdued roseate hue thus shed into the chamber beneath produced a most beautiful effect. Tables were ranged along the whole length of both apartments, and, but that in this age of progress tables turn instead of groaning, we should have expected them to remonstrate at the weight of silver which was piled upon them. Great centre-pieces, epergnes, candelabra, race cups, and massive tankards, flower vases, and the chefs d'œvres of Sevres, Dresden, and Worcester strewed the board in rich profusion. The wedding cake, a very marvel of sugar architecture, was in the centre at the top, upon a salver, which for size and weight might have done duty as a shield for Achilles, while behind the seats of honor rose up a buffet of gold plate—a background quite in keeping with the gorgeousness of the whole scene. The covers were laid for 140. Only the plate of the family was used. We cannot hazard a guess as to either its weight or value, but it must be enormous.

The bridal presents, both in quality and variety, were more than sufficient to have stocked an Eastern bazaar; so a mere glance at the most prominent must suffice. Breakfast services, as usual, distinctly prevailed, there being some five or six of them, all of silver, except one set from Mrs. Montefiore, which was of massive standard gold, enriched with the most elaborate chasings. To this princely gift succeeded a long row of candlesticks, gold and silver filagree, and enamel ivory workboxes, lace, fans, jewelled buttons, prayer books bound in gold and jewelled, escritoires of buhl and marqueterie, more breakfast services, and a lace parasol. The latter was in a kind of jewel case, the handle was covered with serpents of rubies and diamonds, and the tip of each rib was formed of an oval-shaped emerald and large pearl.

Arranged on a table by themselves were the jewels, a dazzling pile, all given by different members of the Rothschild family. Close by these, and in a well merited place of honor, were some humble but beautifully worked little presents from the scholars and pupil teachers of the Jewish Free School. Shortly before 3 o'clock, the guests who were invited to be present at the ceremony began to arrive. The chief members of the Rothschild family, both here and in France, were of course also present. The visitors assembled in the drawing room, where Dr. Adler, the chief rabbi, assisted by Mr. Archer and Mr. Green, prepared to perform the ceremony according to the rites of the Jewish religion. A velvet canopy, supported by four of the bridegroom's garcons d'honneur, was placed at the upper end of the room. The bridegroom was then led in by his nearest male relatives, and placed under the canopy. The bride, who till then had remained in her apartment, descended to the saloon, attended by no less than sixteen bridesmaids, all attired alike in white dresses, trimmed with light blue, the bride wearing the usual lace dress and orange blossoms.

At the door of the saloon she was met by her mother, who, assisted by the bridesmaids, completely enveloped her whole figure and person in a vail which reached to the ground, and which is worn in compliance with the Scriptural verse in Genesis relating to Rebecca. She was then conducted to the saloon with the same forms as the bridegroom, and placed under the canopy. The chief rabbi, having pronounced a most eloquent exhortation to each, the service was commenced in Hebrew. The betrothed then drank of a cup of wine and water, and the bridegroom taking the ring, placed it on the bride's finger, repeating in Hebrew slowly, "Behold, thou art betrothed unto me, with this ring, according to the rites of Moses and Israel." The marriage contract was then read, and prayers resumed, the betrothed again drank a glass of wine between them, and the glass being laid on the ground empty, the bridegroom crushed it with his foot, all the relations at the same time wishing (in Hebrew) that the marriage might be happy, and the bride and bridegroom be as irrevocably joined as the pieces of glass were sundered.

About an hour after the conclusion of the ceremony, the visitors sat down to the dinner, for such, in fact, it was. The bride's health was proposed by the French Ambassador, and drunk with enthusiasm, shortly after which both bride and bridegroom left for Mentmore, the Seat of Baron Meyer de Rothschild, in Buckinghamshire. Mr. Disraeli then proposed the health of Baron James de Rothschild, and Lord John Russell that of his colleague the Baron Lionel. More toasts followed, and in the evening a grand ball was given, at which there was a brilliant attendance of the aristocracy and beau monde.—[London Times.

Valuable Statistics.

The National Intelligencer has compiled the following from the report on the commercial relations of the United States with foreign nations, prepared in the Department of State by Mr. Flagg and his assistant:

England.—It is assured by British statisticians, that the yearly consumption of tobacco in Great Britain and Ireland amounts to 26,000 tuns, about one-half of which it is supposed is smuggled, owing to the excessive duties (upward of a 1,000 per cent.) levied on the article under the tariff system of that kingdom. The quantity of cigars and snuff imported does not exceed two or three hundred weight per annum.

France.—The article of cotton has, for a number of years, constituted in value, upon an average, three-quarters of all our domestic exports to France. Our other chief export to that country is tobacco, the trade in which is monopolized by the Government, the exclusive right to purchase imported and indigenous tobacco being investigated in the regie, or commission, an association under the supervision of the Minister of France.

One-half of the area of France is cultivable, and of this nine parts are meadow; four and a half parts vineyard; fifteen parts woods and forests; fifteen downs, pastures and heaths; the remainder consisting of roads, cities, canals, vegetable gardens, &c. It presents every variety of geological formation, exhibited in almost every variety of known relations. All the departments, eighty-five in number, contain mineral substances. There are thirty-six coal fields in thirty departments, and the annual produce of coal exceeds 3,000,000 tuns. France is surpassed by England only in its production of iron, twelve mines of which are in operation. Three hundred thousand persons are engaged in mining, and their operations show an annual value of $80,000,000.

Schools are provided for only about one sixteenth of the children, and the aggregate annual revenue from all sources is about $80,000,000, while the natical debt is over $100,000,000.

The Vine.—The number of acres under vine cultivation in France exceeds 5,000,000, giving employment, in the cultivation of the vine and the manufacture of wine, to about 2,000,000 of persons, (mostly females,) and in its transportation and sale to 250,000. The vine disease now more or less prevailing in all vine-producing countries has increased the average price of vine from 100 to 175 per cent. The French Government derives a considerable portion of its internal revenue from the manufacture of this beverage, about 90,000,000 gallons of which are annually distilled into brandy, the exportation of which is under special Government restrictions. Next to wheat the vine is the most important of the vegetable productions of France, and extends over the southern half of the Empire. In 1849 there were produced in France 925,000,000 gallons of wine.

Real Estate.—Landed property is more minutely divided in France than anywhere else in Europe, or even than in the United States. In a hundred acres, but they are rare, and daily becoming more so, as the law divides the reality equally among the children. The greater portion of the farms are now less than twenty acres. Improvements in methods of cultivation progress languidly, and the methods of manuring and rotation of crops and of employing machinery continue to be very defective.

Cotton.—The manufacture of cotton was first introduced into France in 1770, and has increased at an enormous rate. The total number of persons now employed in it is near 300,000. The total value of all the manufactures of France annually is 1,600,000,000 francs, and they are rapidly increasing.

Terrible Photographic Counterfeits.

The Paris correspondent of the Boston Atlas gives the following alarming account of recent photographic counterfeits in that city: The science of photography has, for some time past, been the rage among the young men of fashion in Paris, and has been carried to great perfection by some of them; but none to a greater extent than by M. Aguado, whose successful studies from nature are well known among the artists of every country. On Saturday morning, this gentleman sent word to the experts of the Bank of France that he had at length succeeded so fully in the imitation of one of the thousand franc notes that he defied them to detect it; and to show his perfect conviction of the impossibility of discovery, he warned them that the note would be presented at the bank between the hours of one and three. According to this intimation, the experts were assembled at the caisse, and each note brought in was submitted to their examination before it was accepted. The hour passed by and no false note appeared; the whole of those presented during the interval specified, lay in a row spread out before the experts, who already crowed over the idea that M. Aguado had not dared to hazard the experiment, when just as the clock struck three, in he walked, smiling and triumphant, with a thousand franc note in his hand.

"Well, have you detected my forgery?" asked he, with the greatest coolness.

"No," replied the head expert, "for the good reason that you never sent it."

"Why, there it lies, right under your nose—the third to the left; and here is the original that I took it from."

The dismay of the experts may be imagined, when, even comparing the two they found it impossible to say which was the genuine one and which the false. A committee was held to determine upon the course to be adopted, as according to report, a great number of these photographic notes were in circulation, and M. Aguado declares himself able to manufacture any quantity in a given time, and that none shall be detected, either by sight or touch. The consternation created by the announcement is not to be described, and report tells us that the bank has already accepted the offer of the learned English doctor resident here, to furnish a chemical preparation, of his own discovery, which shall immediately decompose the photograph by the touch of a camel's hair brush, dipped in the liquid, and passed lightly over the printed lines. The adventure has served to make us laugh, although rather grimy, when it is considered that already the greater portion of the notes in circulation may not now be able to stand the test of the learned doctor's brush.

Polishing Plate Glass.

A very interesting experiment was made yesterday afternoon in the presence of several engineers and scientific gentlemen upon the new machinery for grinding and polishing glass. The apparatus consists of a large flat disk of iron which revolves horizontally, the plates fastened in frames at some distance from the axis of the main disk, and receive their motion from it, sand and water is supplied, and the friction and wear at all points of the surface to be ground is perfectly uniform.

After the glass is thus reduced to a plane surface, the plates and the frames are transferred to the polishing disks, which are covered with a felted cloth, slightly channeled or grooved, eccentric to the axis of the disk for the purpose of preventing the cohesion of the plate to the felt, and in order to retain the polishing powder from being carried off too rapidly by the motion of the disk.

We saw a plate polished in this manner in about two hours. The whole time of grinding and polishing a plate of glass as it usually comes from the glass manufactories is about five hours by this new apparatus. The saving in time over the old process is very great, and all danger of the glass being longitudinally marked is avoided.

We learn that the demand for large plates of glass in this country is greater than in Europe. Its importation has kept pace with the growth of luxury and wealth. The value of the polished plate glass imported into the port of New York amounted to about five millions of dollars during the last year. The cost ranged by the returns from 50 cents to $1 50 per square foot. The total importations of plate glass into the U. S. cannot be less than 8,000,000 square feet of polished plate glass. The average amount of breakage is an incidental protection which would warrant the starting of this important manufacture here on a large scale. There is, however, a much more potent element of protection than the risk of breakage on the imported article, and this consists in the ingenious machinery we now possess. Thus far the finer articles of polished plate glass have been imported, and the manufacture has always been done by hand. But this machinery shortens at least five fold the time of production, and substitutes steam in place of human labor. There is besides hardly any limit to the size of the articles which can thus be finished. We hope that all who are interested in the triumphs of American genius will take occasion to witness this new apparatus. We understand that it will be in operation today, at No. 100 Walker street, near Centre, from 11 A. M. until 4 P. M.

Railroad Statistics.

The number of railroad bills deposited this session amounted to 130. Of the number 97 authorize new works, 46 by new companies, with a proposed aggregate length of lines of 896, and 51 by existing companies, with proposed extension of line of 574 miles. The total length of new lines proposed is, therefore, 1,470 miles; and there are in addition 40 miles of deviation lines, and 19 projects for enlargement of stations. The number of persons of all descriptions employed on railways open on the 30th January, 1856, was, in England and Wales, 84,376; in Scotland, 11,635; in Ireland, 6,106; total, 105,117. The length of line of railroads open at the above mentioned date, was, in England and Wales, 6,355 miles; Scotland, 1,164; Ireland, 986. On English lines there were 2,352 stations; on Scottish, 387, and on Irish, 224. The total length of line authorized to various companies at the same date, but not opened, was, in England and Wales, 3,140 miles, of which 663 were then in course of construction; in Scotland 429 miles were so authorized and 100 miles of it were begun; in Ireland, 820, of which 199 were in progress. The number of persons employed on these unfinished and uncommenced lines was 36,473, making a total railroad population for the United Kingdom of 141,600 individuals. These figures are taken from detailed returns just presented to Parliament by the Board of Trade.

An Editress Without a Wardrobe.

Mrs. Prewett, the dashing editress of the Yazoo City (Miss.) American Banner, recently visited New Orleans, where she met with a sad mishap, which she narrates as follows:—

"On the 7th of January inst., I left the St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans, and ordered my trunk put on board the Magnolia, bound for Vicksburg. The porter, I presume, misunderstood the order, and shipped it on some upward bound boat, as it cannot be found or traced. The trunk contains all my wardrobe and jewelry and is to me of much value, and I request that if this notice falls under the eye of any steamboat officer, or anybody else that knows anything of my strayed property, I hope he will advise me of the whereabout, as I am much inconvenienced and distressed at the loss. My name, H. N. Prewett, is painted on one end, so there can be no mistake about its ownership. If any thief has got it, I can only say that he must have a hard heart indeed to rob an editor of a Mississippi newspaper. No! human nature is bad enough, God knows, but there can be no one mean enough for that! If, however, any one has taken it by mistake, let him send it back and no questions will be asked."

Wagon Road from Fort Kearney to California.

The following is a copy of the act passed at the late session of Congress, to construct a Wagon Road from Fort Kearney to California.

An Act for the construction of a Wagon Road from Fort Kearney, via the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains and Great Salt Lake Valley, to the Eastern portion of the State of California, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

That the sum of $300,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, be and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a wagon road from Fort Kearney, in the Territory of Nebraska, via the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains to the eastern boundary of the State of California, near Honey Lake, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to contracts to be made by him; said road to connect with and for an extension of the road already authorized from Fort Ridgely to the aforesaid South Pass.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of two hundred thousand dollars, or as much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a wagon road from El Paso, on the Rio Grande, to Fort Yuma, at the mouth of the Gila River, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to contracts to be made by him.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That a sum of fifty thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a wagon road from Fort Defiance, in the Territory of New Mexico, to the Colorado River, near the mouth of the Mohana River.

Take Special Notice—How do you Like it.

"I expected to find the people half Mormons, but I am happy to learn very few remain. Those who were too poor and lame to travel to their paradise, "Salt Lake," have settled a few miles north of here in two small villages, known as Florence and Crescent Cities."—[Chronotype.

To our knowledge, there are but two or three families of Mormons in this place, but we heartily wish there were an hundred for we know of no class more industrious and persevering. They were the Pioneers to this region; built the first bridges; opened the first farms; constructed the first ferry boats across the Missouri, and opened up the way for the present prosperity and wealth of this fertile country; while yet the present incumbent of the Chronotype was snugly cloistered among the church steeples of old Yankeedom. They are among the most wealthy and enterprising men of our region.

Here is another article from the same paper: How do you think they will match? There seems to be a smacking of something a little over and above truth; but we leave that for our readers to reconcile. Here it is. Speaking of this country, it says:

"The improved lands are generally owned by Mormons, who are anxious to sell and move on to Salt Lake."

The little towns of Florence and Crescent Cities, seem to be a source of much uneasiness, and a real eye-sore to this wright (wrong) editor; and we doubt not but that his paper would be better appreciated, were he to take a little more pains in reconciling his statements, in future, with facts. Don't you think so neighbor?—[Crescent City Oracle, March 6.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1857.

A Member of Congress and the Mormons

THROUGH the politeness of the Hon. J. M. Bernhisel we received last week—but too late for notice in our last issue—a copy of the Washington Globe, containing a very lengthy and rabid attack upon the Mormon portion of the inhabitants of Utah and his Excellency Governor Young. It professes to be the report of a "speech" delivered "in the House of Representatives, February 23, 1857," by the "Hon. J. S. Morrill of Vermont," on "Utah Territory and its laws—Polygamy and its license."

Before entering into an examination of the charges set forth in the speech of Mr. Morrill, we place before our readers the following letter:

WASHINGTON, March 16th, 1857.

Dear Sir: You will receive herewith a copy of a speech purporting to have been delivered in the House of Representatives, on the 23d ult., by the Hon. Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, which, however, never was delivered by that gentleman in the House, nor elsewhere, but which he published without delivering. Yours very truly,

Mr. Taylor. JOHN M. BERNHISEL.

Whatever may be thought of the practice, justice to Mr. Morrill requires us to state that it does occur now and again that Honorable members obtain permission from the House to print, outside its walls, speeches which were never delivered within; but even with precedent as a balm to his conscience, we should think that the high-minded moralist of Vermont would find it something of a stretch to publish to "all the world and the rest of mankind" that his printed slander was delivered in the House. This seemingly trivial affair assumes another position and importance when the motives are known which in this case led to its adoption. We suppose that Mr. Morrill concluded that, though it might cost a stretch of conscience—which was his own—a good reception from his constituents on his return home at the close of the Thirty-fourth Session of Congress, which was certain, if preceded by such an excellent demonstration of hostility to Mormonism, was something to be desired. Few men have stability within themselves to resist temptation and eschew the praises of the ignorant and the bigoted; but Mr. M. may yet live to discover that it would ultimately have been more to his honor and advantage to have returned to his fireside a sober-minded, honest man, strong in the consciousness of having discharged his own duties, and without the reproach of having meddled with that of his neighbor, which by no means linked itself with his. Giving charity its utmost latitude, we may suppose that Mr. Morrill had considered it his duty to pursue the course he has towards the Mormons of Utah and Governor Young; but the profound ignorance of facts of history, so abundantly manifest in his "speech," and which need not have occurred with ordinary attention, forces us to the conclusion that he had labored more for effect than for truth, and was not over particular about the means to attain it. No gentleman would calumniate any people upon charges made by their enemies. An honest man, in or out of Congress, would, if he considered it in any manner his duty to meddle, make himself thoroughly acquainted with the people of whom he spoke—their acts, not their faith—and take nothing upon the ipse dixit of one or another, friend or foe. This we shall show has not been the course of the accuser of the Mormons in Congress, or in Washington rather; but on the contrary, where he has failed to procure for his purpose the necessary supply of slander from others, he has drawn largely upon his own fertile but confused imagination, and blundered so extravagantly that any person the least acquainted with the history of the Mormons could refute this would-be-public moralist and historian. What a spectacle—a man rising up in all the dignity of a member of Congress to expose the immorality of the people of Utah, and in order to do it, stoop to the meanest acts and grossest immorality—for nothing can be more destructive to the morality and welfare of society than falsehood and calumny.

As Mr. Morrill's "speech" extends over seven columns of closely printed matter it is impossible for us in the space we can devote to it in this paper to relieve ourselves at present from all his accusations, we shall therefore only notice some of the prominent false and slanderous statements with which his speech abounds. As Mr. M. is neither at home or abroad one of the mighty men of his generation we opine that the attention we give his speech now is as much as a man of his rank can expect, even in seeking notoriety at the hands of those he has sought to injure.

Our Congress accuser sets out in his crusade by introducing a lengthy quotation from the famous "Report" of Brandeburg, Brocchus and Harris, or rather he has selected passages from that heterogeneous mass, stuck them together, and dignified them with the name of a "chapter of history," reproduced "in order to refresh the memory of gentlemen!" Mr. M., conscious of the flimsy character of the authors of the Report, admits that "it was regarded at the time as too extravagant for belief," notwithstanding, afraid to lose any assistance, he reproduces it and plunges as deep into the mire as the run-a-way judges and secretary by endorsing the Report in the following gratuitous slander to support which he gives not one line of evidence. He says:

"Subsequent events have shown that the picture was not too highly colored, and that no officer, if not a Mormon or a jack-Mormon, can dwell among the Mormons without being subjected to greater insolence than that of which Shylock complained:

'Signior Antonio, many a time and oft,
In the Rialto, you have rated me:
* * * *
Still have I borne it with a patient shrug;
For sufferance is the badge of all our tribe.
You call me—misbeliever cut-throat dog;
And spit upon my Jewish gaberdine.'"

We ask Mr. M. for evidence. We seek for it in the "speech" and find none. We could give abundance of contrary statements over the signatures of United States officers and others, unconnected with Mormonism, who have been residents in that Territory; but it is unnecessary, as the readers of this paper have seen, time and again, such unsolicited testimony from gentlemen of the highest respectability. It is verily true that there have been difficulties with some under strappers in the employ of or lounging around United States officers there, and some of the inhabitants of Utah; but does anything like personal quarrels justify the wholesale charge of Mr. Morrill against that people? The last fuss that we remember hearing of was that of "Bill Hickman," as some of our eastern cotemporaries call a Utonian, thrashing Troskolawski, who was dubbed for the occasion a "deputy surveyor." But what were the facts in that case? Troskolawski was a drunken profligate whose unbridled filthy tongue cost him a sound thrashing. It was then stated very modestly by the enemies of Utah here, that he was nearly murdered for speaking freely of Mormonism. When we heard that report we anticipated that his provocation would turn out to be free speech in reality—Five Points free speech—and the subsequent information we have received from those who were in Great Salt Lake City at the time and acquainted with the course of the free speaker, has confirmed our suppositions. Had Governor Young not been a high-minded gentleman, far above noticing such a rowdy as Troskolawski, he had personally enough of insult from him to have justified his trampling him under his feet. But "Bill Hickman" was not Governor Young, and when Troskolawski tried his free speaking on the former, he met his man and found his day of reckoning had come. If for such personal quarrels the people of Utah are to be branded with the charge of hostility to United States officers and condemned, where is the city, town or village, throughout the Union that will be guiltless. That there are men in Utah that will stand no nonsense from men who presume upon a name for the portection of their person when they insult and outrage others, is true, and that there has been such difficulties is undeniable, and probably there will be difficulties with such persons again. All we wish to say to Mr. Morrill is that no man, in office or out of it, will be treated with disrespect in Utah so long as he keeps a civil tongue in his head, acts honestly, virtuously, and minds his own business; but as sure as Utah is a Territory of the United States, so certain is it that there is no name, nor no office that will protect any man there in doing wrong. Men of the stamp of the runaway judges and the Troskolawskis, have had an idea before they got to Utah, that they could crow over the Mormons there as bullying editors have done in the States; but when they got there the Utonians speak and act as citizens of the United States, and treat all as such, giving honor to those to whom honor is due, and expecting the same in their civil positions; but when a rowdy like Troskolawski, only sees a Mormon in a magistrate he is apt to forget himself and insult him in the discharge of his duties, and find before he is long there that civil law knows no faith, and before it all must bow, and the administrator, Mormon or non-Mormon, shall be sustained in the discharge of his duty. Instead of the Mormons being lawless, it is the non-Mormons who go to Utah who are insolent, and when that law is applied to them they cry out persecution. In the correspondence of such persons all manner of charges have been preferred against the Mormons, and even respectable men in the States, far from the scene of action, like Mr. Morrill, have been found their easy dupes, and have taken up the cry of Mormon hostility to the United States Government. Hence he says in his "speech:"

"The lack of patriotism and the ingrained hostility of the Mormons to our Republic admit of no dispute."

What evidence does he give for this grave statement? None whatever. We call this, therefore, the base slander of a reckless politician, who so deeply imbued with bigotry and hatred to Mormonism, is forgetful or utterly ignorant of the history of the people against whom he launches such an unfounded charge. Let us be as brief as we may in this review, we are certain to extend it over the limits that Mr. Morrill's speech is entitled to, we shall, therefore, here as before, have to refrain from adding evidence to rebut this charge, confiding in the better memory of our readers and the public at large, who are acquainted with the sentiments and acts of this people in Utah and all over the world. The Republic of the United States of America, is regarded by the Mormons in every nation as the best government upon the face of the earth, with a Constitution formed by the wisest and the best men of their generation, men who were inspired of heaven to institute this cradle of liberty.

Has Mr. Morrill forgotten the ready response of the Mormons, under the leadership of President Brigham Young, to the demand of the United States Government for a batalion of 500 men to join the Republican army in the conquest of Mexico? It was an unrighteous, heartless and cruel demand, which no law or precedent could justify, and with which the Mormons would have been constitutionally justified in refusing compliance; but rather than have even "the very appearance" of wanting in patriotism, five hundred men, husbands and fathers, the flower and strength of the wandering camp, marched off at the three days' notice from their wives and helpless little ones—living in tents and wagons, almost entirely destitute of the common necessaries of life, surrounded by the savages and wild beasts of the forests—to share in the battles of the Republic. The man, cognizant of this undeniable, tangible and dearly made demonstration of loyalty on the part of the Mormons to the Government of the nation in the hour of trial, who persists in branding them with the charge of "ingrained hostility to the Republic" is a poor miserable, soulless defamer. But this charge is but one link in the chain that Mr. Morrill would fain forge and have riveted on the Mormons to deprive them of their constitutional rights and liberties, while he rants about the oppression of the South. But here comes the crowning piece of slander:—

"They desire a kingly government, in order to make their patriarchal institutions more homogeneous. When they started out for Utah, it was with the purpose of establishing a kingly government; but the Mexican war coming on, the United States boundaries overtook and again inclosed them. Chagrined at this uncalculated result, they sent to England for permission to occupy Vancouver's Island, and to erect an independent government. This being refused them, they submited to a nominal allegiance, and lie in wait for an opportunity of defiance and revolt, when they can reach the 'crowning glory' of their schemes and of Brigham Young at once."

"They started out for Utah," from Nauvoo, because mobocracy was rampant around them, and there was no protection from the United States Government for Mormon life and property; and before the Mexican war had terminated, and the United States become in possession of the new Territory of Utah by treaty with Mexico, the Mormons had entered that Territory, and taken possession of it in the name of the Republic of the United States, and would have kept it, in spite of the old gentleman's enemies, for Uncle Sam, even though they were still smarting under the bad usage they had received at the hands of some of his sons in authority in the States. This charge about Vancouver is, however, in perfect harmony with the other slanders, and exhibits the value of Mr. Morrill's historical lore. The fact is, three of the Twelve Apostles, of which number we were one, left the camp in the Omaha purchase immediately after the battallion for Mexico, on a mission to the churches in Britain—a mission exclusively to the churches, as the Saints all well know, and of which our publications in England bear abundant evidence. When on that Island many of the members of the church were struggling in poverty, with a gloomy future before them, and no prospect of being able to emigrate to the United States by their own means. Some of the members of the church, who had considerable influence with members of Parliament, mooted the idea of getting the British Saints to Vancouver's Island, on the Pacific, through the assistance of the English Government, who, at that time, was favoring emigration to other colonies. Pitying the poor, and hoping that might be a stepping stone to help them to the place of their final destination, we gave no opposition to the movement; but the idea of asking that Island for the church in Utah, which Mr. Morrill states, for the purpose of forming an independent government, is utterly destitute of truth.

The petition of the British Saints was presented through the present British Ambassador to China, Sir John Bowring, to Lord John Russell, then a member of Her Majesty's Government, and was favorably received; and as to the portion of land asked for the emigrants, it would have been cheerfully accorded, but the Government wanted to employ the means devoted to emigration exclusively to Australia. Had the Saints been possessed of the means to defray their passage expenses to Vancouver, they could have possessed the island without any difficulty. Had Mr. Morrill consulted our publications, through which the Saints were instructed on the Vancouver movement, which he ought to have done before he spoke of it, he would have found that in verse, as well as in prose, the feeling and sentiment was inculcated in the British Saints, that even for them Vancouver's Island was but a temporary resting place. No money could purchase the Utonians to strike the "stars and stripes" and hoist the "British lion" in Vancouver or anywhere else, even for a temporary location, and no abuse will force them to do it, as of that they have plenty to tempt them. We have thus been explicit on this head, and refer Mr. Morrill to the Millennial Star for 1846, for confirmation of our contradiction of his slanderous statement. The three charges which we have now examined show the determination of Mr. Morrill to misrepresent the Mormons before the Congress of the United States, with the view of pushing on a Democratic President to the performance of that which his party had anticipated accomplishing through their own instrument had they been successful in electing him.

We should be glad to follow Mr. Morrill in his speech throughout, and show the misstatements he has made, and the false and unreasonable deductions from that which he has been forced to state correctly, but its great length prevents us from doing so. We say to Mr. Morrill, that if he would be a wiser man he should seek to inform himself of the circumstances of the people and the facts alluded to by the speakers in Great Salt Lake City, from whom he has quoted, before he ventures to deduct false conclusions from isolated sentences.

Truths or facts are of themselves what they are, independant of the will or mind of those by whom they are seen or comprehended and have a certain and invariable value and relationship to other things, but a partial comprehension of truths or facts may present an entirely different phase to the mind than that which a full and perfect comprehension of the same truths or facts would lead to.

The publication by the Mormon press of those speeches and those laws he has quoted shows that there is no double dealing in Utah with neither saint nor sinner; that all is above board, subject to the criticism of the whole world, and to sustain which the men who have spoken or have written them are ready at any moment to render an account to whomsoever can show it is his business to meddle. It is an ancient proverb "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad," to which we would add, whom the Devil would fool he first blinds, and the reading of this gentleman's speech certainly incline us to believe that our Vermont accuser is not the most gifted with clear sight or a clear brain. Some of the Territorial laws which he has cited for censure were actually passed by the Legislature for the prevention of that which Mr. Morrill considers is the duty of every citizen in such circumstances to prevent, and yet he cannot see it, though it is as plain and clear to every unprejudiced mind, as it must now be plain and clear to the readers of this review that Mr. Morrill has done his best to misrepresent and defame the Mormons.

Amicus Curiæ Alias Drummond

FROM the frequent attacks upon Utah it would seem to the uninitiated that there was a whole army of writers in the field against Utah, and a broad and mighty movement in operation to crush, if that were possible, the Mormons in that Territory; but when the veil is lifted, and statements like streams traced back to their source, effects to their cause, the formidable army almost vanishes to a circumscribed unit, and the Mighty Mountain gradually dwindles—becomes beautifully less till it reaches the sublime grandeur of the mole hill.

For some time back the greatest slanderer of the Mormons of Utah, has been the Western writer, who, to prevent his bona fide name from getting to the public adopted, Amicus Curiæ as his nom de plume. Some supposed this fictitious name to have been adopted for fear of prosecution for libel, but the most general conclusion was that it was some scapegrace, whose own cognomen added to any charge would be sufficient to spoil the slander—and so it has turned out to be. To the slanders of the Tribune's correspondence from Utah, the Herald on Sunday last added, for the interest of its pious readers, extracts from the San Francisco Herald about abuses in Utah—a batch of clumsy ill-arranged falsehoods, but for some reason or other our New York cotemporary withheld the signature Amicus Curiæ. Some lies are at times difficult of detection; but even the most expert in the profession of slander, will some time or other so identify himself with his work, as to afford evidence sufficient for detection. The saying, give a dog rope enough he is sure to hang himself, has been verified, Amicus Curiæ has been doing a wholesale business, and that long retinue of papers that are destitute of principle, and live by the publication of "great sensation stories," have been gloriously pleased with his lucubratory concoctions of "murders," "awful outrages," and "rebellion" in Utah against the United States Government. So long as the writer could shield himself under that nom de plume, nobody knew but that it was some disinterested, honest, pure-minded patriot, that was greived at the "sins" of the Utonians, but unfortunately for the sensationists, the late stories from Utah have been spoiled, the mask has been dragged from "Amicus Curiæ," and there stands now before the public as the Utah defamer—we were going to say something, but we soften down to let the Hon. T. S. Morrill speak—the gentleman whom he calls the "horse trader" judge—W. W. Drummond!!! "Amicus Curiæ"—alias Drummond!!! Cato the nigger, Abraham the Jew and "the woman," all of Fillmore city notoriety, stand back, we beseech you, say nothing, or you may give the poor "horse trader" judge the unkindest cut of all. We are satisfied, he has hung himself, let his end be a warning to evil doers, as his memory is a stink in the nostrils of those whom he has sought to injure.

The New York Herald on Utah.

As we have stated elsewhere, the Herald published last Sunday two extracts from California papers, about abuses in Utah, one of which was signed W. W. Drummond. After dreaming over the terrible tableau which the "horse trader" judge had endorsed, on Monday morning a short editorial appears in the Herald, headed "Rebellion in Utah." Our cotemporary is terribly apprehensive of difficulties with Utah, recommends the appointment of a first class man for Governor, with military to back him up in putting things according to his notions by fair means or foul. How does the Herald like foul means when applied to himself? All this the Herald recommends, through having received from California a newspaper with some extravagant stories about burning volumes of law, to which is added the old tale of the wide, unbounded influence of Governor Young. Would it not be a wiser part for the Herald to recommend a little patience, and hear the other side of the story, if there be in reality any foundation for the flury and excitement? We think it would.

On Wednesday morning the Herald publishes a letter from W. W. Drummond, addressed to its editor, taking the opportunity afforded by making a correction to some former story of telling how big Governor Young is, how wicked the Utonians are, and how glad he would be to see military sent out—and a glorious row kicked up. Keep cool, don't fret yourselves, gentlemen, it will all come out right, just take time and you will find the world can get on capitally without that horrible din of kettles and pans, to which you would fain treat the Utonians.

President Daniel H. Wells.

IT will be seen by reference to a communication from Utah to The Western Standard that Daniel H. Wells is appointed to take the place of President Jedediah M. Grant, deceased.

We have been acquainted with Bro. Wells for many years, and have been associated with him in different locations and in varied positions in life.

At the time when the Saints went to Nauvoo he was one of the old settlers there, and owned property on what afterwards became the city plot. Being always active and energetic, when the city charter was obtained he was chosen as one of the aldermen, and we have frequently discussed matters with him in the city Council. He also held an office in the Nauvoo Legion—we think that of colonel; and although not in the Church, he was generally respected by the Saints. Being ourself an officer in the Legion, we well remember the feeling of indignation manifested by Col. Wells when Governor Ford requested the Nauvoo Legion to give up their arms—he thrust his commission into a pistol, and told the Governor's officer to "take that along with the arms, for he would not hold office under such a man." When the majority of the Saints had left Nauvoo, and the dastardly mob made their forays upon the widows, the fatherless, and the infirm that were left, he took up arms in their defence, and was one of the most efficient men in resisting the craven attacks of that bloodthirsty banditti. About this time he joined the Church, and we were informed assisted both by his counsel and means many of the poor and afflicted to leave their inhuman persecutors.

Since his removal to the Valley he has been indefatigable in his endeavours to advance the interests of the Saints and has occupied several positions of both trust and honor. We have met with him in the territorial legislative council. He held also the office of Brigadier-General in the Nauvoo Legion; but the most prominent and laborious business that has devolved upon him is that of superintendent of the public works; and whatever position he has occupied, he has been indefatigable in his exertions to carry out promptly the duties devolving upon him.

We have given this brief synopsis for the information of those who may not be acquainted with the position, standing, or history of Gen. Wells. And as he is now called by President Young to occupy one of the most prominent positions in this Church, viz.: counsellor to the First Presidency, we pray God the Eternal Father that he may be endued with wisdom and intelligence to fulfil the onerous duties of his office; and we call upon all the Saints to sustain him in connection with the First Presidency by their faith and prayers.

Minutes

Of a Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, held in the City of Philadelphia, May 29, 1857.

MEETING called to order by President Angus M. Cannon, who gave out the hymn, "Great is the Lord, 'tis good to praise," &c. Singing by the choir and prayer by President George J. Taylor.

Present in the Stand—1 Apostle; 2 High Priests; 4 Seventies; 11 Elders.

Motion of President Angus M. Cannon that Elder William I. Appleby preside over this Conference. Carried unanimously.

President John Taylor arose and said: We have met together to transact the business of this Conference as is usual on such occasions. We have not much contention and strife among us as is common among others; if there were, we should know there was something wrong. We never have contrary votes, but it is necessary to call for them in order to place things in their proper light and position. The Authorities of the Church are presented before you that you may sustain or reject them; so that if they have done anything wrong it may be set right. There is no body of people, either political or religious, that have to go through so trying an ordeal as that through which passes those who stand at the head of the Kingdom of God upon the earth. If you receive them in their callings it is expected that they will be sustained by you. As you are about to vote for them at this Conference it is expected that you will not forget the covenants that you will make by your votes. If the Presidency of this Church are endowed with authority from on High and guided by Revelation, it is required of you, especially your Elders, not to waver, but become "subject to the powers that be" over you, and be prepared to stand in your office, and stand the scrutinizing gaze of all the world; and if you cannot do so you ought not to hold a portion of the Priesthood of God. We want sincerity and truth in all things. If I have done anything wrong, bring it forth and let us know it; and if you cannot sustain me raise up your hands against me, or against any one else in whom you have no confidence. We believe in perfect freedom and independence, and in being united here as well as in Utah and all over the world. When such is the case, we care not for all the influences of evil men and devils.

Moved and carried, That this Conference uphold President Brigham Young as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints throughout the earth, with President Heber C. Kimball as his First, and Daniel H. Wells as his Second Counsellor.

Moved and carried, That we sustain John Smith as Patriarch to the whole Church.

Moved and carried, That we acknowledge and sustain Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, Geo. A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, C. C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, F. D. Richards, as the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, with Orson Hyde as President.

Moved and carried, That we sustain George A. Smith as Historian of the Church.

Moved and carried, That we sustain Presidents Taylor, George A. Smith, and Dr. Bernhisel, as the Delegation of Utah to Congress.

On motion, Brigham Young was sustained as President of the P. E. F. Company.

Moved and carried, That we receive and sustain John Taylor as President of the Church in the Eastern States.

Moved and carried, That on the departure of President John Taylor for Utah, that Elder George J. Taylor be received and sustained as his successor in the Presidency of the Church in the Eastern States, on whom will devolve the publication of THE MORMON, and the superintendency of all Church business transacted on the Eastern mission.

On motion, voted to sustain Angus M. Cannon as President of the Philadelphia Conference.

Moved and carried, that we sustain Angus M. Cannon as one of the councillors to Prest. George J. Taylor.

On motion, voted to sustain Elders John F. Snedaker and A. P. Welchman as Travelling Elders in this Conference; Joseph M. Hammar as Secretary of the Conference. Carried unanimously.

The following Branches were represented as being in a flourishing condition—the Saints rejoicing in the truth:

PENNSYLVANIA.—Philadelphia, S. Harrison; Minersville, James Sewell; Pottsville, Robert Hazen; New Mines, John Galloway; West Haven, A. M. Mortimore; Mount Carmel, James Low; Union, M. Heiner; Pittston, B. Isaacs; Reading, Mifflin Palmer; Chester, Wm. Cockroft.

NEW JERSEY.—Toms River, T. McKean; Hornerstown, R. D. Treceder.

President Cannon represented the Conference to be in a very satisfactory state, and felt that he was supported in his labors by good men as Travelling Elders and Presidents of Branches. Three Branches had been lately organized, a goodly number of persons baptized, and over one hundred had emigrated. He anticipated a still greater work would be done in the coming season through the blessing of God and the assistance of his brethren.

Benediction by President John Taylor.

Conference adjourned to 3 o'clock, P.M.

AFTERNOON SESSION. 3 P.M.

Meeting opened in the usual way.

Sacrament administered.

On motion, voted that the Toms River Branch be released from its connection with the Philadelphia Conference, and cordially recommended to the New York Conference, on account of its being situated nearer to the Presidency of the Church at New York than at Philadelphia.

On motion, Elder Thomas Terry was released from his mission and privileged to return to Utah.

Motion to ordain Bros. Joseph Crossgrove, J. A. B. Crossgrove, and George Washington Mousley, from Delaware, to the office of Elders. Carried. Adjourned until evening.

EVENING SESSION.

Meeting opened by singing and prayer; after which President W. I. Appleby called on Elders A. P. Welchman and John F. Snedaker to occupy a short time in addressing the audience assembled. They each expressed their determination to maintain the truth as revealed in the last days, which was followed by an eloquent and powerful discourse from President John Taylor, which will appear at another time.

JOS. M. HAMMAR,
Sec'y of Philadelphia Conference.

Hon. J. M. Bernhisel.

WE had the pleasure of this gentleman's visit in the early part of last week. After a few days sojourn in this city, he took his departure for Utah. The doctor was in excellent health, and seemingly in buoyant spirits about a stroll on the desert plains.

Governorship of Utah.

LAST week the Hon. F. McMullen was, according to Washington correspondents, offered the Governorship of Utah: the same gentlemen report this week, that the honorable gentleman had "indignantly" refused! There is some sense and honor in the nation after all! Who shall be next on the tapis?

Conference at New York.

The Saints will meet in the capacity of a Conference at Brookes' Assembly Rooms, 361 Broome street, New York, on the first Sunday in April, at 10 o'clock A. M.

Representatives from all the branches composing the New York Conference are expected to meet at the house of President John Taylor, on Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock P. M., to give a report of the state of the branches.

Social Party.

THE Monday evening following the New York Conference there will be a social party in the Broome Street Hall. Doors open at 4 o'clock, P. M.; Chair to be taken at 5 o'clock precisely. Tickets of admission 25 cents each, children under 12 years half price, to be had of Elder Silver at the hall, the Presidents of districts at their district meetings, and Elder Dulin, at the office of THE MORMON.

Despicable Artifice to Injure the Mormons.

IN the Herald of Wednesday, "Amicus Curiæ," who distinguished himself a few months ago by writing a silly article giving a crippled account of the members of the Legislature and their wives, has another long article, headed "More Outrages of Brigham Young." In this latter article he proceeds to call the attention of the editor of the Herald to "a few of the recent outrages of the people of Utah, and particularly to the course of Brigham Young," by enumerating several instances in which Brigham Young and the Mormons have violated and trampled upon the laws of Congress, and refused to have them administered by the Federal officers sent by Government to act in their midst. The article is evidently written with the most base and malicious intentions, and is the production of a man who, if we may judge by the spirit of his article, would have no higher pleasure than to see the dogs of war let loose upon the "Mormons" and they exterminated from the face of the earth. The article is dated Jan. 7th, Great Salt Lake City, but was without doubt written in this city, as the editor of the Herald's proclivities for such slanders are too well known to admit of the supposition for one moment, that he would keep so sweet a morsal on hand for two weeks after the arrival of the mail. The public are expected, of course, to innocently gulp down the whole story without questioning; dating the letter at Great Salt Lake City would make the article have a more telling effect, and was an artifice perfectly justifiable in the estimation of the writer to be used in creating prejudice against Brigham Young and the Mormons. To corroborate and give the statements a greater semblance of truth, on Thursday another communication appeared, over the signature of W. W. Drummond, confirming and giving additional items relative to the fate of all the records, books, etc., belonging to the office of the Clerk of the supreme Court, the abstraction of which was alluded to in the communication of Wednesday as one of the treasonable outrages of which the Mormons had been guilty.

It was not intended, of course, that the public should know that "Amicus Curiæ," the Great Salt Lake correspondent of the Herald, and W. W. Drummond are one and the same personage, yet, every person who will examine both communications, the structure of the sentences, etc., will scarcely fail to be convinced that the effusions of "Amicus Curiæ" and that of W. W. Drummond emanated from the same pen. We have the best of reasons for concluding that both communications originated here, and if they did, how contemptible a subterfuge to practice to bring indignation upon the Mormons! It was a most brave device and excellently planned! "Amicus Curiæ" at Great Salt Lake City omitted to mention the fate of the books, records, etc., abstracted from the office of the Clerk of the Supreme Court of Utah by a party of Mormons in high standing, under the direction of Brigham Young, but the omission is easily corrected; W. W. Drummond, U. S. District Judge of Utah, steps into the witness stand in San Francisco, and completes "the whole history of the infamous insult" by informing the editor of the Herald that they were burned, yes, "sir, burned up in the City of Great Salt Lake, and no notice taken of the outrage by any one in authority at that place!" Thus the convenient omission of this item by the mythical "Amicus Curiæ," gives an opportunity for the testimony of another to be introduced, who confirms one part of the story and tacitly conveys the idea that the remainder is equally true; and thus the un-initiated are left to imagine that there are two persons, one in Great Salt Lake City and the other in San Francisco, who testify to the same things!

Such low and disgraceful measures to injure the Governor and the people of Utah are unworthy of any man who lays the slightest claim to respectability and truth, and they will sooner or later recoil on the heads of those who originate them. It is not the first attempt that has been made by runaway judges to foment difficulty between the people of the States and the Mormons, by publishing misrepresentations and falsehood about the Mormons' hatred to the General Government, but like all such former attempts, it will fall innocuous to the ground and the fabricator pass into oblivion, while Brigham Young and the Mormons will live and flourish.

[The Editor of the Standard is, we doubt not, perfectly right in fixing upon Drummond the slanders of Amicus Curiæ. And though we have been silent, of this we had evidence in this office months ago, from a gentleman well known to the judge. That tissue of falsehood and misrepresentation, that was published not long since about the "cripples" and "cross-eyed" members of the Utah Legislature, and their wives, was signed Amicus Curiæ when first published out West, and a Baltimore editor honestly avowed that Drummond had sent it to him for publication, and was the author of it. Ed. Mormon.]

News from Utah.

THE following interesting items we extract from the Deseret News, and Western Standard correspondence from Great Salt Lake City:

"Elder Orson Hyde and company, arrived in Great Salt Lake City, from Carson Valley, on the 9th of Dec. They started on the 6th of Nov., tarried four or five days on Truckee River, and travelled part of the way on a new route, in order to avoid some Indians who had been a little troublesome on St. Mary's River. For the last 200 miles, they found snow varying from one to three feet in depth, except on the desert, where there was none. Elder Hyde was in excellent health.

"Mr. A. L. Tanssig, of the 15th Ward Tannery, has shown us some specimens of French enamelled, and French kid leather, which, in beauty of finish, and every requisite in artcles of that kind, we have never seen excelled in any market. He also exhibited some sole leather far superior to much that has heretofore been offered for sale. Such skill most justly deserves the best of trade encouragement, to the fullest extent of its ability to supply demand; and will, so far as known, command the best paying patronage, while keeping within a proper range of prices asked for, like imported articles.

"The Legislative Assembly, as previously noticed, organized in the State-House in Fillmore, on the 8th Dec. In the Council, the Hon. Heber C. Kimball was elected President; Leo Hawkins, Secretary; John T. Caine, Assistant Secretary; George D. Grant, Sergeant-at-Arms; Samuel L. Sprague, Messenger; Richard Harrison, Foreman; and Cyrus H. Wheelock, Chaplain.

"In the House, the Hon. Hosea Stout was elected Speaker; James Ferguson, Chief Clerk; James H. Martineau, Assistant Clerk; Wm. H. Kimball, Sergeant-at-Arms; Brigham Young, Jr., Messenger; William Derr, Foreman; and Jesse Haven, Chaplain.

"Pursuant to adjournment, the Council and House of Representatives convened in the Social Hall, in G. S. L. City, on the 18th inst., when His Excellency, Gov. Young, communicated his Message to the Assembly in joint session, which was read by Mr. Jas. Ferguson, Chief Clerk of the House, and 500 copies ordered to be printed. The Message, which is a pertinent and concise document, we are compelled to omit this week.

"Hon. Orson Hyde was elected on the 20th inst., a Representative to the Legislative Assembly, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. Jedediah M. Grant.

Prest. Brigham Young gave an entertainment in his new residence, the "Lion House," on Christmas evening, to a large number of the missionaries lately returned from foreign missions, and a few other brethren, with their wives.

"The Legislature met at Fillmore, on the 8th of Dec., organized, and passed a resolution, changing the seat of Government. On the 18th, they commenced sitting in the Social Hall, in G. S. L. City.

"Daniel H. Wells was ordained, and set apart on the 4th Jan., as second Counsellor to Prest. B. Young.

"The reformation is opening upon the business department of the Church to a considerable extent. Old men are resigning their places, and young men are filling them. Every lazy, drowsy, sleepy officer in the kingdom, is being called upon to awake, or get out of the way and let some one of energy and power take his place. In a word,

'The Spirit of God like a fire is burning.'

"The Twelve who are now here, are holding meetings Thursday and Sunday evenings throughout the city, commencing with Ward No. 1, and continuing by rotation. Two or three missionaries are appointed to each of the twenty Wards in this city, who spend quite a portion of their time in visiting and holding meetings. These missionaries meet the Twelve and Presidency in the Historian's Office every Wednesday evening, to report progress and get instructions.

"Every Monday evening, the Presidents of of Seventies meet in their Hall. Tuesday evenings, the Bishops and lesser Priesthood meet in the Seventies' Hall. Wednesday evenings the missionaries as above named. Thursday and Sunday evenings are for Ward meetings. Friday evening, the City Council and other bodies meet; and on Saturday evening, the High Priests meet in the Social Hall. The Twelve generally attend the Quorum meetings.

"One day last week, all the members and officers of the Assembly, who had not been, were re-baptized in the font, and confirmed in the Endowment-House.

"The United States Statutes at large, are now under examination, with a view to extract all that is in any way applicable to this Territory, and compile it in one volume, a labor of considerable magnitude."

Correspondence of Prest. Angus M. Cannon.

PHILADELPHIA, March 30, 1857.

EDITOR OF MORMON—Dear Bro: A short time ago, an article was published in the MORMON, instructing the presiding officers of the Church in the Eastern States, to have meetings more frequent in their various fields of labor, that the Truth might have a greater circulation and effect upon the minds of the honest in heart. None could help but acknowledge the wisdom manifested in the instructions then set forth to the Priesthood, as Truth is mighty and must prevail with all who love it, when it is administered by the instruments whom God has chosen to redeem their generation. Truth is a "Savor of life unto life, and death unto death;" as the Apostle affirms, "It hath pleased God by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe." By it, the world will be judged, saved or condemned, even though the Lord has chosen the weak and foolish things of the world, to be His instruments in propagating it.

Through this I have found consolation in my ministerial labors in this mission and in the performance of whatever duties God my Father has alloted to me to accomplish. I do realize indeed that I am laboring among a people who have viewed the gospel of truth, as taught by Jesus Christ in its purity, as a heresy! and who have denounced every one who has come forth with authority from God as blasphemers and knaves for coming forth in the name of the God of Israel instead of their own name or that of some popular sect. I feel, nevertheless, to rejoice in my labors and strong in the Lord of Hosts. Who can but rejoice while advocating principles emanating from God and eternal as the throne of Jehovah! While we know in truth that the heavens and the earth will pass away but the Truth which we advocate will remain till the words of the servants of the Lord have been fulfilled. I have proved the inefficiency of the combined wisdom of men to controvert the principles of salvation which are alone calculated to raise fallen man from his low and grovelling, degrading position and exalt him on high to the friendship of God and the association of angels.

It is pleasing to see the brethren of the priesthood in the different Branches whose hearts burn with the sacred fire, endeavoring to carry out your instructions in seeking to benefit their fellow beings by bearing their testimony to the truth revealed in these latter days, and thus letting the light shine that is in them. Although many Branches have not the opportunity of holding as many meetings as they could desire, they are nevertheless zealous to spread the truth. The renewed zeal in the propagation of the truth in my field of labor has produced in many instances a spirit of acrimony and opposition among the enemies of truth, and which in some cases has led to the expulsion of brethren from their employment, because they had found the pearl of great price, and had the boldness to tell it to their friends and neighbors. It was said formerly, and is equally true to-day—"Men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

In this city we have well improved our time and held frequent meetings, at which the Saints have been instructed, and in which they have rejoiced; while, at the same time, strangers have had opportunity of becoming acquainted with the principles of the Kingdom. We have had the city divided into districts, with a President and two Counsellors over each. On Sundays the Saints meet in Washington Hall, which is large enough to seat eight or ten hundred persons. We have preaching in the morning and evening, besides holding general council meeting at 2, and sacrament and testimony meeting at 3 o'clock. On Monday evenings we have preaching in three different parts of the city. On Tuesday evenings we have four district council meetings, where the Teachers who visit the Saints report the standing of each member. On Wednesday evenings the Elders meet in class and speak on various principles, and when required wrong ideas are corrected; another class, composed of the lesser Priesthood, meet Friday evenings for the same purpose: beside this meeting we have occupied the same evening a temperance hall in the south part of the city, where we have delivered a number of lectures. These, with three testimony meetings held in different parts of the city on the Thursday evenings, show that our time has been well occupied.

A good spirit generally prevails among the Saints, and they daily feel to live nearer and nearer to the rock of their salvation, and carry out the instructions of the servants of the Lord.

Elders Snedaker, Terry and Welchman have all united with their whole soul their efforts with mine during the past winter to forward the work; and has caused me to say, when I have witnessed the difficulties they have to contend with: May God never forsake them, but be their near friend, their shield, buckler and support. Elder Terry being set at liberty to return home to his family in Utah, goes, with our confidence and prayers for his prosperity, in rejoining his family in our mountain home.

Praying the Lord ever to bless you, and the brethren associated with you, I am your humble servant and brother,

ANGUS M. CANNON.

FOR THE MORMON.

Impossibility.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

It is evident from linguistic studies, that there are in every language many ambiguous terms, that is to say, every nation uses words which have, in a strictly logical sense, more than one meaning, as for instance, Impossibility, truth, value, etc., and as such ambiguous terms are of a very frequent occurrence, and an ignorance of the same may lead to fallacious reasoning, so that truth may be made to appear false and error true, it is necessary to examine and comprehend the variety of meanings in which every term is employed. People use frequently in common conversation, and even sometimes in writing, expressions, of the bearings of which they have misconceptions, without their knowing it, as generally such ambiguous terms are familiar to nearly every one, and thus people, when looking upon such words and expressions as on old acquaintances, are put off their guard, so that they do not notice any discrepancy, looseness or contradiction in their statements. The reader will farther bear in mind, that we may be familiar with an expression or term, without knowing its real meaning, and that familiarity is not knowledge, and does consequently not remove the danger of having erroneous ideas.

The word impossibility is, as remarked above, one of these ambiguous terms, in as much as it may be used in three different senses, viz., physically, mathematically, and morally. Impossibility, in relation to the phenomenal or outward world, may be physical, that is to say, something may be advanced or asserted, which is quite contrary to reason, common sense and the general laws and principles of natural philosophy, as for instance, a child is to raise a stone of 1000 pounds of weight. This request is evidently against the laws of nature, because a child, whose muscles and sinews have not yet got a sufficient strength, cannot lift so great a weight. In relation to physical performances or operations, it is necessary that they are in accurate proportion to the strength a man possesses, viz, that a certain amount of strength or power be in a man, in order to surmount the resistance of physical objects. Hence, if the performance of a thing by a mere man has taken place, in which the resistance of physical objects exceeds that of the physical strength of the human system, it is called a miracle, that is to say, something has been accomplished, which in the eyes of the common mind is impossible. But although the performance or accomplishment of a certain thing may be an Impossibility for the physical nature of man, we can see the consistency of the existence of beings who are capable of doing things which are beyond the physical power of mortals, as for instance, to change water into wine, or to turn a river into blood, without any chemical operation. Because, if we admit the existence of a supreme being, that rules and controls the elements, and we naturally conclude, that it has all the qualities and powers of divine perfection, it follows necessarily, that such a sublime agency must also possess the power of altering or changing the properties of substances.

A mathematical impossibility is that which in its very nature, has the impress of inconsistency and absurdity; it is, in relation to abstract or concrete things, something which is evidently against reason and common sense, for instance, that a parallelogram should be divided by the diagonal line in two parts, of which one is to be larger than the other, or that a part of a straight line should be a curve. The above suppositions are impossible and unreasonable in its conception, because a parallelogram is, from its very nature, divided by the diagonal line in two equal parts, (viz. triangles,) and in relation to a straight line, the smallest part can be nothing but straight, as it would contradict the definition of a straight line. The reader will bear in mind here, that the impossibility to execute or realize the above suppositions, does not involve a limitation of power, but it is something which, on account of its absurdity, cannot be done either by man or by any superior agency. Hence it is evident that a mathematical impossibility is an inconsistency which no power or wisdom in Heaven or on earth can make consistent, as for instance, to construct a line, which would be both straight and crooked, this cannot be accomplished, because it can only be one of the two, viz. straight or crooked, and a straight line will always be straight, nothing less, and so vice versa.

Moral impossibility is something which leaves no doubt in regard to its improbability or inconsistency. A thing may be morally impossible without being contrary to the physical laws of nature, but which, from reason and experience, will never happen, as for instance, that a man who is no shot, should hit a nail with a ball at a certain distance fifty times, or that a person should draw the same number in a lottery 60 times successively. In speaking of the foregoing supposition, it is evident, that the hitting of a nail with a ball, or the drawing of the same number several times successively, depends not exactly upon the physical laws of Nature, although experience and a steady hand have a great influence on accomplishing the object, but from observations we know, that a person, although an excellent shot and provided with good arms, will have to depend, to a great extent, on mere chance, and as in such cases the odds are generally against man, or when expressed in an algebraical formula, are like 100: 1, it generally occurs, that what we are desirous of accomplishing the most, is thwarted by an unforeseen circumstance, which is beyond human calculation. Hence it is a moral impossibility to expect of a bad shot to hit a nail a certain number of times successively. As regards drawing the same number in a lottery several times successively, it is evident, that it is not against the physical laws of Nature, but it is against reason and experience, because a man depends here, although he may, by clever combinations, find approximately the right number, mostly upon mere chance, hence it is according to reason impossible to believe a person could draw the same number 60 times successively. Supposing he would accomplish his object, and get a certain number 50 or 60 times successively, this would not prove that every other person could do the same; we would say, he is extremely lucky or fortunate. In such cases, people, as gamblers, soldiers, jugglers, etc. trust more to chance or fortune than reason, because the latter can establish no rule or proof for the probable accomplishment of things which are subject to mere chance or luck.

The word "impossibility" is generally used relatively, and cannot always be confined to certain limits, there are many things which previous to their occurrence, appear morally impossible, that is to say, reason tells us, that there is no or but very little chance for the accomplishment of a certain object, still through a little, trivial circumstance, a good chance is brought to bear upon it, and the thing is done. The philosophy of trifles or mere chance, is well illustrated in the bloody engagements of belligerent parties; soldiers who are exposed to a most murderous fire of the enemy, so that an escape from death seems to be a moral impossibility, are often through chance or trivial, insignificent circumstances preserved, whereas others, who were quite in the rear, and as it were out of the ranges of the enemy's fire, are killed. Concerning the philosophy of chances, I remark here parenthetically, that frequently one favorable, lucky circumstance is followed by a long train of others, and, on the contrary, an unfortunate occurrence is frequently attended with a long series of all kinds of disastera and calamities, whereas others met with their death in the first skirmish. From the foregoing the reader will see, that we often use the term "impossible," whenever according to our reason, intelligence and experience, the feasibility of a thing seems improbable, hence a thing may appear to some impossible or improbable, and to others not. But often the word "impossibility" is used, when the accomplishment of a certain object is within the reach of human power, and can consequently be carried out, for instance, we can conceive impossible, that all the nations of the earth should give up their preconceived notions, traditions and erroneous ideas and embrace the true Gospel, although they have the power to do so, but every one will see, that this depends entirely upon their own choice, the honesty of their hearts, and the energy and enlightenment of their minds. Supposing we could hear of a man having acted dishonestly, of whose integrity we were perfectly convinced by his noble actions, and our supposition in relation to his character were correct, we should consider this charge to be a calumny, a moral impossibility; that is to say, we have sufficient reason to rely implicitly in his good conduct and disbelieve or deny the thing spoken of concerning him; and this idea is not arising from our ignorance of his possessing the power of acting according to his will, but our confidence, our conviction is founded on that very circumstance of his being free and independent, and this, in connection with our full knowledge of his character, causes us to look upon the charge as a slanderous report.

By moral impossibility we understand the performance of an action, by a mere man, and which requires superior intelligence, knowledge and power; in that case such a performance may be termed a moral miracle. For instance, no man, unless he is inspired of God, can tell things to come with the exactness which signalized so emphatically the era of the ancient prophets. It is impossible that a man of an ordinary mind and inferior abilities should conceive such brilliant and profound ideas which illustrate so exquisitely the workings of the economy of nature as Sir Isaac Newton, and others.

Independent of the above, we meet frequently in our every day life, a certain kind of moral impossibility caused by want of energy, laziness and dishonesty, which are often the only obstacles in our career, debarring us thus from mental excellence. We are all intelligent beings, at least we profess to be so, if we then have a certain purpose in view, which of course must be honest, useful and within the reach of our physical and mental powers, we have no right to speak of impossibilities; but we have to push on till we accomplish our object. Remember that every one of us is the architect of his fortune, so that he has to show himself an energetic, persevering and industrious man in all the avocations of life, in order to occupy an honorable place in the kingdom of God.

SIMPLE MULTIPLICATION.

Is the method of finding what any given number of one denomination will amount to when repeated a certain number of times.

The number to be multiplied is called the Multiplicand.

The number by which it is multiplied is called the Multiplier.

And the number found, after the work is finished, is called the Product.

NOTE.—Buy a small Table Book, and refer to the Multiplication Table, which should be committed to memory.

RULE.—1. Place the Multiplier under the Multiplicand, so that units may stand under units, tens under tens, &c., and draw a line below them.

2. Begin at the right hand, and multiply every figure in the Multiplicand by the unit's figure in the Multiplier, setting down the whole of such products, as are less than ten, directly under the figures that are multiplied.

3. But for those that exceed ten, or a number of tens, write down the unit, or excess, only; or, if there be no excess, a cipher, and carry a unit for every ten, to the product of the next two figures.

4. Proceed in the same manner with each of the other figures of the Multiplier, observing to place the first figure of every line immediately under the figure multiplied by, or so that it may stand one place farther to the left than that in the preceding line.

5. Then add all the lines of products together, according to the order in which they stand, and their sum will be the answer or whole product required.

NOTE.—When the multiplier does not exceed twelve, the product must be written down, as it arises, at one operation.

METHOD OF PROOF.

Make the former Multiplicand the Multiplier, and the Multiplier the Multiplicand; and if the Product found from this operation be the same as before, the work is right.

Alcohol Distillery Burned—Loss of Life, &c.

BALTIMORE, March 26.

The alcohol distillery of J. Higby & Co., on President street, was destroyed by fire this morning. The fire was caused by the bursting of a steam boiler. The buildings connected with the establishment were shattered, and the bricks and timbers thrown a great distance. Several persons were injured. Four burnt bodies have been taken from the ruins, and it is feared that others still remain beneath them. The fire raged with great violence, and was suppressed with much difficulty. Loss not ascertained.

Steamer Burned—Loss of Life.

PITTSBURGH, March 26, 1857.

The steamer Sultana was burned to the water's edge last night at 10 o'clock, below the the town of Hickman, on the Mississippi River. Two persons were killed, and others were seen to jump overboard, and are supposed to be drowned.

Fire and Loss of Six Lives.

BOSTON, March 27, 1857.

Terrific Gunpowder Explosion.

ST. LOUIS, March 27, 1857.

About seven o'clock this evening, a terrible explosion of powder occurred in the gun store of T. J. Aldrich, on Main street, blowing the building to atoms, together with the establishment adjoining of Kraft & Co. It is impossible to get the full particulars to night, but as far as can be ascertained, four persons have been killed, and several others seriously wounded. The ruins of the buildings are now burning.

ST. LOUIS, March 28, 1857.

The explosion yesterday at Oldrich's store was caused by the accidental discharge of a pistol into a canister of powder. Three persons were killed instantly, one severely injured, and several slightly hurt. The stock in both stores was entirely destroyed. The loss is probably upwards of $50,000.

There was a large fire a week ago at Liberty, Missouri, which destroyed property to the amount of $50,000.

The Hume Homicide—Acquittal of Colonel Lee.

WASHINGTON, March 29, 1857.

The jury in the case of Lee, an ex-Clerk in the Pension office, indicted for the murder of Mr. Hume, a respectable merchant of Alexandria, Virginia, this (Sunday) morning rendered a verdict of acquittal. They were governed by the instructions of the Court, granted at the instance of the counsel for the defence. Lee, it will be recollected, openly but erroneously, at the last public reception of President Pierce, charged Hume with picking his pocket. Next morning when Hume called at the Pension office to convince him that he was mistaken, Lee not only refused to retract, but firmly reiterated the charge. For this Hume caned Lee, who shot him.

NEW ORLEANS, March 30, 1857.

The Trial of the Rev. J. S. Kalloch, Charged with Adultery.

BOSTON, March 31, 1857.

The trial of the Rev. J. S. Kalloch, on the charge of adultery, commenced this forenoon before the Court of Common Pleas, in Cambridge. Mr. Kalloch is defended by R. H. Dana, Charles H. Train and H. W. Paine.

The trial excites much interest. When the case was called at the opening of the court, a motion by defendant's counsel for the postponement was disallowed, and thirteen witnesses were called and sworn for the commonwealth. Mr. Kalloch occupied a seat near his counsel, and appeared self-possessed, but rather pale and careworn. The indictment was read, charging him with the crime of adultery committed on the evening of the 5th of January, at Lechmere Hotel, with a woman unknown.

The first witness examined was the Rev. W. F. Holland, who testified to the fact that the defendant lectured before the East Cambridge Lyceum on the night in question. He declined to accept his (witness,) invitation to take tea at his house, but preferred a room in the hotel, for the purpose of looking over his notes.

Mrs. Griffin, 19 years old, wife of one of the proprietors of the house, testified to her curiosity being excited by a conversation which she overheard between the defendant and the unknown woman. She saw them through a crevice over the door kiss each other. She saw the woman pinch defendant's cheeks and indulge in other affectionate flirtations, which led witness to suppose they were not married.

Mr. Ephraim B. Bailey, one of the proprietors of the house, testified that Mr. Kalloch came to the hotel early in the evening. He introduced the lady with him as his wife, and called for a private room; and also for a warm whiskey toddy, which he wished to be brought to him privately. The curiosity of this witness was also excited, and while Kalloch and his female friend were absent at the lecture, he had a door of the room fixed partially open.

Without concluding Mr. Bailey's examination, the Court adjourned till next morning.

News from New Mexico and Sonora.

ST. LOUIS, March 31, 1857.

Santa Fe dates to the 28th ult. have been received.

The Indian depredations were on the increase. Several skirmishes had occurred between the Mexicans and Indians, and numbers of both parties were killed. It is reported that Judge Hoppin and James Lucas, and two other Americans, had been killed by the Indians, near El Paso, and also that James Hubble, who had gone to Sonora to purchase mules, was killed by the government party.

A letter from Santa Cruz river, dated February 30, says that if the people of Sonora had encouragement they would declare themselves independent of Mexico and ask to be annexed to the United States. The country is overrun with Indians, who are robbing and murdering the people in every direction.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Col. Lee of Washington who shot Mr. Hume the morning after the last levee of President Pierce, has been tried and acquitted.

A respectable person of this City had "for experiment" obtained the Photograph of several $100 notes, and "in a moment of temptation was induced" to offer on Monday, one of the bills in payment for a $25 dressing gown he had purchased—suspicion arising in the mind of the salesman, the Note was sent to the Bank and detected to the extreme grief of the gentleman.

Mr. R. J. Walker has accepted the governorship of Kansas. Great hopes are entertained that Mr. W. will settle the difficulties in that Territory to the satisfaction of all parties, as he is determined to hold the scales of justice impartially. Kansas a free or slavery State as the people shall vote. A rumour has been in circulation that Lord Napier, the British Ambassador, had sought to influence the Cabinet to appoint Mr. Walker to Canton as the Americam ambassador in the hopes that he would act in unison with France and England in the present difficulties with the Celestials.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

England is presently agitated over the Chinese war. Parliament is shortly to be dissolved; the members are busy all over the country telling their constituents how well they did everything, and begging a renewal of their confidence, and a seat among the Commons as their honorable representatives. Of course, Palmerston anticipates that the nation will express itself favorable to his foreign policy, and thus take the sting from the late disapproving vote of the House; but if he does succeed, it will only be by the skin of the teeth—the opposition is strong.

Lord Elgin has been appointed by the crown as the British Plenipotentiary to China; and rumor has it that France will likewise send a Plenipotentiary to back John Bull, and both together are reported to be very anxious to have our Uncle Samuel send out his Plenipotentiary at the same time, that they may make a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether at John Chinaman's prejudices and stiffness, and get him to permit his celestial cities and the flowery lands of his great empire to be visited by the barbarian princely merchants of France, England and America. If the celestial Emperor has much of the wisdom of Confuscius about him he may justly dread the evils to accrue from intercourse with such civilization.

Accident on the Illinois Central Railroad.

FIVE MEN KILLED AND EIGHT INJURED—NARROW ESCAPE OF A WHOLE TRAIN OF PASSENGERS.

We learn from a gentleman who arrived yesterday from La Salle, that a frightful accident occurred on Thursday morning, on the Illinois Central Railroad, near La Salle. The particulars are as follows:

About seven o'clock in the morning, the gravel train, loaded with laborers, who work along the line, started from La Salle southward. The train crossed the bridge all right, and as the engine came on the embankment on the other side of the bridge, it all at once gave way, and the whole train was precipitated a distance of probably twenty-five feet. Four men were killed on the spot, and one died a few hours afterwards. Eight others were severely injured, some with broken legs, arms, &c. The engineer and fireman escaped with their lives, though somewhat injured. The marvel is that so many escaped.

The heavy rains of last Sunday, along with the general thaw that ensued, had so softened the embankment that it appeared as soft and as incapable of bearing up a train as the softest kind of mud. Whenever the engine came off the bridge it seemed as if it had fallen over a precipice.

But disastrous as the occurence has proven it seems providential that it is not much more fatal. The passenger train that ought to have passed over the road at that point on Wednesday night, by some trivial accident was delayed, and did not arrive at the fatal spot till after the gravil train was wrecked. As it was loaded with passengers, boxed up in close cars, the sacrifice of life that would have attended its attempt to cross must have been much larger.

One informant did not learn the names of the dead and injured. They were all Irishmen at work on the road, and probably all have families.—Chicago Press, March 28.

The Proposed Ship Canal Across the Isthmus of Darien.

THE subjoined article from the Cincinnati Times gives some interesting information in very concise terms:

The project of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien has long been entertained by the leading minds of the world, and the construction of this vast work is now but a question of time. Congress has appropriated a sum amply sufficient for the thorough survey and exploration of the proposed route, and a corps of army engineers with appropriate assistents will soon be detailed for the service. Thus has the United States taken initiatory steps in one of the most magnificent ideas of modern times. Napoleon, in his expedition to Egypt, discovered the site of an ancient canal across the Isthmus of Suez, and his engineers by survey estimated the cost of reopening the work; but it was never accomplished.

Our readers will remember the terrible sufferings of Lieut. Strain and his companions who endeavored to cross the Isthmus of Darien on a preliminary reconnoissance by order of our government. Profiting by his experience, we trust the expedition now about to commence operations will be able to avoid disaster. A few details in relation to the scene of operations may be interesting to our readers.

The Isthmus of Darien, or, as it is more commonly styled, the Isthmus of Panama connected North and South America, and is principally comprised in the republic of Granada. On the northern side is the Caribbean sea and the Gulf of Darien; on the south the Gulf of Panama. In length the Isthmus proper is about two hundred miles, with an average breadth of forty miles; but in longitude 79 degrees it narrows down to less than thirty miles. The country is undulating with chains of small mountains, but very fertile and well timbered. The expense of a commodious ship canal, say thirty miles long and two hundred feet wide, would not be less than fifty millions of dollars. England, France and Holland are anxious to aid in the work, and become joint owners with the United States. When it is considered that one half the world's commerce would in all probability pass through this canal, the expense sinks into a mere trifle. All the India and China trade, instead of doubling Cape Horn, would find passage through the canal. It should be free to all nations who assist in the construction by money or credit.

The appropriation alluded to was embraced in the naval appropriation bill. It gives a sum not to exceed $25,000 to be paid to officers selected by the Secretaries of War and Navy for the purpose of making explorations and verification of the survey already made of a ship canal near the Isthmus of Darien, to connect the waters of the Pacific and the Atlantic by the Atrato and Truando rivers. Mr. Bocock, a member of the committee of conference on the part of the House of Representatives, explained this provision, inserted by the Senate, in brief but forcible terms. He stated that the government of Granada had given a company of Americans the right to explore and build a ship canal, if practicable, through the Isthmus of Darien. They have made the survey and believe a ship canal to be altogether practicable; but they had come to the conclusion that capitalists will not invest in this exploration unless it be endorsed by competent officers of the government. They merely ask that their exploration shall be tested by officers of the army and navy. The House concurred in the proposition of the Senate.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that, when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre; à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Évangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâches de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

FOR THE MORMON.

A Saint's Confidence.

BY W. L. A.

How vain this lower world appears
To him whose hope is heav'n;
Who's given unto God his years,
And knows his sins forgiv'n.

Surrounded here with pride and show,
That ev'ry where doth meet him,
No one to call a friend below,
Unless a brother greet him.

His name cast out, dispis'd—bell'd;
He hears it night and morning,
The epithet to him appli'd,
A "Poor deluded Mormon."

But midst it all he doth rejoice,
And glory's in the name,
The Savour he has made his choice,
Eternal life his aim.

His confidence is in his God,
On him his stay--reliance;
He humbly bows to heav'n's rod,
And bids the world defiance.

China As Seen by Sir John Bowring.

Population of the Empire—Strict Census Registration—Mortality Statistics—Poor Law System—Food Supplies—Emigration Returns—River Navigation and Inland Trade—Agriculture and Tillage System—What the People Eat, and their Tastes at Table—Effects of the Civil Wars—How the People Die—Marriage—The Army and Navy.

THE following letter, addressed to the Registrar General, London, by Sir John Bowring, has been published in the Journal of the Statistical Society:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, HONG KONG, July 13, 1855.

Sir—I wish it were possible to give a satisfactory reply to your inquiries as to the real population of China.

There has been no official census taken since the time of Kia King, forty-three years ago. Much doubt has been thrown upon the accuracy of these returns, which gave 362,447,183 as the total number of the inhabitants of China. I think our greater knowledge of the country increases the evidence in favor of the approximate correctness of the official document, and that we may with tolerable safety estimate the present population of the Chinese empire as between 350,000,000 and 400,000,000 of human beings. The penal laws of China make provision for a general system of registration; and corporeal punishments, generally amounting to one hundred blows of the bamboo, are to be inflicted on those who neglect to make the proper returns. The machinery is confided to the elders of the district, and the census is required to be annually taken; but I have no reason to believe that the law is obeyed or the neglect of it punished.

In the English translation of Father Alvarez Semodo's "History of China," published in London, A. D. 1655, is the following passage:

This kingdom is so exceedingly populous that, having lived there twenty-two years, I was in no less amazement at my coming away than in the beginning at the multitude of the people. Certainly the truth exceedeth all hyperboles—not only in the cities, towns and public places, but also in the highways, there is as great a concourse as is usual in Europe on some great festival. And if we refer ourselves to the general register book, wherein only the common men are enrolled, leaving out women, children, eunuchs, professors of letters and arms, there are reckoned of them to be fifty eight millions, fifty five thousand, one hundred and four score. The minuteness of the enumeration would seem to show that the Father quoted some official document.

I forward herewith two tabular statements which I have copied from Dr. Williams's "Middle Kingdom," one of the best books on China. The first gives a list of the various estimates from A. D. 1393 to 1812, with the authorities quoted. The second is a re-arranged statement of censuses taken at different periods.

As there are few men in China more diligent or better instructed than Dr. Williams, I thought it desirable to communicate with him, in order to ascertain his present views as to the credit which may properly be attached to the official statistics of China. I send a copy of his letter:—

I do not know that there is any safer course than to reason from details to generals, from the known to the unknown; and I have taken every opportunity which my intercourse with the Chinese has afforded me, to obtain, if no correct, at least approximate information as to the true statistics of the country. It may be affirmed without any hesitation that as regards the five ports and the adjacent districts to which we have access, the population is so numerous as to furnish arguments that the number of inhabitants of the entire empire is very much greater than is represented by the official returns. These localities cannot be taken as fair averages; for, naturally enough, increased commercial activity has brought with it a flow of new settlers, and there can be no doubt that some of the ancient seats of commerce have lost much of their population in losing their trade; but whether all the causes of decline in particular spots have much counteracted the fecundity of the Chinese races, considered as a whole, may be questioned.

Some years ago I had an opportunity of discussing the subject of Chinese population with the mandarin at Ningpo, who was charged with making the returns for that district. Ningpo can scarcely be called a progressive place—it is decidedly the least so of the five treaty ports; but I found, generally speaking, that the real returns were considerably in excess of the official estimates.

And I would remark that, in taking the area of the 18 provinces of China at 1,348,870 square miles, the census of 1812 would give 268 persons to a square mile, which is considerably less than the population of the densely peopled countries of Europe.

According to ancient usage, the population in China is grouped under four heads:—1, Scholars; 2, husbandmen; 3, mechanics; 4, merchants. There is a numerous class who are considered almost as social outcasts, such as stage-players, professional gamblers, beggars, convicts, outlaws, and others; and these probably form no part of the population returns. In the more remote rural districts, on the other hand, the returning officer most probably contents himself with giving the average of more accessible and better peopled localities.

I have no means of obtaining any satisfactory tables to show the proportion which different ages bear to one another in China, or the average mortality at different periods of human life; yet to every decade of life the Chinese apply some special designation—the age of ten is called "The Opening Degree," 20, "Youth Expired;" 30, "Strength and Marriage;" 40, "Officially Apt," 50, "Error knowing;" 60, "Cycle closing;" 70, "Rare Bird of Age;" 80, "Rusty visaged;" 90, "Delayed;" 100, "Age's Extremity." Among the Chinese the amount of reverence grows with the number of years. I made, some years ago, the acquaintance of a Budhist priest living in the convent of Tien Tung, near Ningpo, who was more than a century old, and whom people of rank were in the habit of visiting, in order to show their respect and to obtain his autograph. He had the civility to give me a fair specimen of his handwriting. There are not only many establishments for the reception of the aged, but the penal code provides severe punishments for those who refuse to relieve the poor in their declining years. Age may also be pleaded in extenuation of crime and in mitigation of punishment. Imperial decrees sometimes order presents to be given to all indigent old people in the empire. I am not aware of any detailed statistics giving the number of such recipients, since a return published in the time of Kanghi (1657.) Kienlung (1785) directed that all those claimants whose age exceeded 60 should receive 5 bushels of rice and a piece of linen; those above 80, 10 bushels of rice and two pieces of linen; those above 90, 30 bushels of rice and two pieces of common silk; and those above 100, 50 bushels of rice and two pieces, one of fine and one of common silk. He ordered all the elders to be enumerated who were at the head of five generations, of whom there were 192, and, "in gratitude to heaven," summoned 3,000 of the oldest men of the empire to receive Imperial presents, which consisted principally of embroidered purses, and badges bearing the character shau, meaning "longevity."

The Kanghi tables show the number of those who enjoyed the benefit of the edict; but as the returns bear no proportion to the general population of the country or to the relative extent of the various provinces, many fortuitous and local circumstances must have caused the obvious incongruities. For example, in the adjacent provinces of Kwangtung and Kwangse, in which the whole mass of population is in the proportion of two to one, the recipients are as 46 to 1; and as regards age, while the proportion of those above 80 is represented at 19 to 1, those above 90 are only a little more than 5 to 1. In all these matters the greater or less co-operation of the local authorities is one of the most important elements in producing a result. Kwangse is extremely mountainous, and bordered on the northwest by the country of the Meaou-tsz, or aborigines, the districts adjoining which are but in a half-reclaimed state, and governed by officers of a character and denomination distinct from those of the provinces. But it is inexplicable that the province of Pechile, in which Pekin is situated, should exhibit but a small proportional return, especially as compared with the adjacent province of Shantung. Hookwang, with a population of 26,250,000, has 87,354 indigent persons above 70, while Szechuen, the population of which is 21,500,000, presents only 176 persons in that category.

I think there is abundant evidence of redundant population pressing more and more heavily upon, and suffering more and more severely from, an inadequate supply of food. Though there are periods when extraordinary harvests enable the Chinese to transport rice, the principal food of the people, from one province to another and sometimes even to foreign countries, yet of late the importations from foreign countries have been enormous, and China has drawn largely on the Straits, the Philippines, Siam, and other places, to fill up a vast deficiency in supply. Famine has, notwithstanding, committed dreadful ravages, and the provisions of the imperial granaries have been wholly inadequate to provide for the public wants. It is true that cultivation has been greatly interfered with by intestinal disorders, and that there has been much destruction by inundations, incendiarism, and other accidental or transitory causes; but without reference to these, I am disposed to believe that there is a greater increase in the numbers of the population than in the home production of food for their use. It must be remembered, too, that while the race is thus augmenting, the causes which lead to the destruction of food—such as the overflow of rivers, fires, ravages of locusts, bad seasons, and other calamities—are to a great extent beyond the control of human prudence or human exertion. It would be difficult to show what new element could be introduced which would raise up the native supply of food beyond its present productiveness, considering that hand-husbandry has given to cultivation more of a horticultural than an agricultural character.

The constant flow of emigration from China, contrasted with the complete absence of emigration into China, is striking evidence of the redundancy of the population; for though that emigration is almost wholly confined to two provinces, namely, Kwantung and Fookien, representing together a population of probably from 34,000,000 to 35,000,000, I am disposed to think that a number nearer 3,000,000 than 2,000,000, from these provinces alone, are located in foreign countries. In the kingdom of Siam it is estimated that there are at least 1,500,000 Chinese, of whom 200,000 are in the capital (Bangkok). They crowd all the Islands of the Indian Archipelago. In Java, we know by a correct census there are 136,000. Cochin China teems with Chinese. In this colony we are seldom without one, two or three vessels taking Chinese emigrants to California and other places. Multitudes go to Australia, to the Philippines, to the Sandwich Islands, to the western coast of Central and Southern America; some have made their way to British India. The emigration to the British West Indies has been considerable—to the Havana greater still. The annual arrivals in Singapore are estimated at an average of 10,000, and 2,000 is the number that are said annually to return to China.

There is not only this enormous maritime emigration, but a considerable inland efflux of Chinese towards Mantchouria and Thibet; and it may be added that the large and fertile islands of Formosa and Hainan have been to a great extent won from the aborigines by successive inroads of Chinese settlers. Now, these are all males; there is not a woman to ten thousand men; hence, perhaps the small social value of the female infant. Yet this perpetual outflowing of people seems in no respect to diminish the number of those who are left behind. Few Chinamen leave their country without a fixed purpose to return to worship in the ancestral hall—to bring sacrifices to the tombs of their fathers; but it may be doubted if one in ten revisits his native land. The loss of life from disease, from bad arrangements, from shipwreck and other casualties, amounts to a frightful per centage on those who emigrate.

The multitudes of persons who live by the fisheries in China, afford evidence not only that the land is cultivated to the greatest extent, but that it is insufficient to supply the necessities of the overflowing population, for agriculture is held in high honor in China, and the husbandman stands next in rank to the sage or literary man in the social hierarchy. It has been supposed that nearly a tenth part of the population derive their means of support from fisheries. Hundreds and thousands of boats crowd the whole coast of China—sometimes acting in communities, sometimes independent and isolated. There is no species of craft by which a fish can be inveigled that is not practised with success in China—every variety of net, from vast seines, embracing miles, to the smallest hand filet in the care of a child. Fishing by night and fishing by day—fishing in moonlight, by torchlight, and in utter darkness—fishing in boats of all sizes—fishing by those who are stationary on the rock by the seaside, and by those who are absent for weeks on the wildest of seas—fishing by cormorants—fishing by divers—fishing with lines, with baskets, by every imaginable decoy and device. There is no river which is not staked to assist the fisherman in his craft. There is no lake, no pond, which is not crowded with fish. A piece of water is nearly as valuable as a field of fertile land. At daybreak every city is crowded with sellers of live fish, who carry their commodity in buckets of water, saving all they do not sell to be returned to the pond or kept for another day's service. And the lakes and ponds of China not only supply large provisions of fish—they produce considerable quantities of edible roots and seeds, which are largely consumed by the people. Among these the esculent arum, the water chestnut (scirpus tuberosus) and the lotus (nelumbium) are the most remarkable.

The enormous river population of China, who live only in boats, who are born and educated, who marry, rear their families, and die—who, in a word, begin and end their existence on the water, and never have or dream of any shelter other than the roof, and who seldom tread except on the deck or boards of their sampins—show to what an extent the land is crowded, and how inadequate it is to maintain the cumberers of the soil. In the city of Canton alone it is estimated that 300,000 persons dwell upon the surface of the river; the boats, sometimes twenty or thirty deep, cover some miles, and have their wants supplied by ambulatory salesmen, who wend their way through every accessible passage. Of this vast population some dwell in decorated river boats used for every purpose of license and festivity—for theatres—for concerts—for feasts—for gambling—for lust—for solitary and social recreations; some craft are employed in conveying goods and packages, and are in a state of constant activity; others are moored, and their owners are engaged as servants or laborers on shore. Indeed, their pursuits are probably nearly as various as those of the land population. The immense variety of boats which are found in Chinese waters has never been adequately described. Some are of enormous size, and are used as magazines for salt or rice—others have all domestic accommodations, and are employed for the transfer of whole families, with all their domestic attendants and accommodations from one place to another—some called centipedes, from their being supposed to have 100 rowers, convey with extraordinary rapidity the more valuable cargoes from the inner warehouses to the foreign shipping in the ports—all these, from the huge and cumbrous junks, which remind one of Noah's ark, and which represent the rude and coarse constructions of the remotest ages, to the fragile planks upon which a solitary leper hangs upon the outskirts of society—boats of every form and applied to every purpose—exhibit an incalculable amount of population, which may be called amphibious, if not aquable.

Not only are land and water crowded with Chinese, but many dwell on artificial islands which float upon the lakes—islands with gardens and houses raised upon the rafters which the occupiers have bound together, and on which they cultivate what is needful for the supply of life's daily wants. They have their poultry and their vegetables for use, their flowers and their scrolls for ornament, their household gods for protection and worship.

In all parts of China in which we have access, we find not only that every foot of ground is cultivated which is capable of producing anything, but that, from the value of land and the surplus of labor, cultivation is rather that of gardeners than that of husbandmen. The sides of hills, in their natural declivity often unavailable, are by a succession of artificial terraces, turned to prolific account. Every little bit of soil though it be only a few feet in length and breadth is turned to account; and not only is the surface of the land thus cared for, but every device is employed for the gathering together of every article that can serve for manure. Scavengers are continually cleaning the streets of the stercoraceous filth; the cloradæ are farmed by speculators in human ordures; the most populous places are often made offensive by the means taken to prevent the precious deposits from being lost. The fields in China have almost always large earthen-ware vessels for the reception of the contributions of the traveller. You cannot enter any of their great cities without meeting multitudes of men, women and children conveying liquid manure into the fields and gardens around. The stimulants to production are applied with the most untiring industry. In this colony of Hong Kong I scarcely ever ride out without finding some little bit of ground either newly cultivated or clearing for cultivation.

Attention to the soil—not only to make it productive, but as much productive as possible—is inculcated as a political and social duty. One of the most admired sages of China, (Yung-chin) says: "Let there be no uncultivated spot in the country—no unemployed person in the city;" and the fourth maxim of the sacred edict of Kang-hi, which is required to be read through the empire on the 1st and 15th of every moon, in the presence of all the officers of the State, is to the following effect:—"Let husbandry occupy the principal place, and the culture of the mulberry tree, so that there may be sufficient supply of food and clothing." Sein Nung, the name of one of the most ancient and honored of the Chinese emperors, means "the Divine Husbandman."

The arts of draining and irrigating—of preserving, preparing and applying manure in a great variety of shapes, or fertilizing seeds, indeed, all the details of Chinese agriculture, are well deserving of note, and all display evidence of the inadequate proportion which the produce of the soil bears to the demands for the consumption of the people.

The Chinese, again, have no prejudice whatever as regards food; they eat anything and everything from which they can derive nutrition. Dogs, especially puppies, are habitually sold for food; and I have seen in the butchers' shops, large dogs skinned and hanging with their viscera by the side of pigs and goats. Even to rats and mice the Chinese have no objection—neither to the flesh of monkeys and snakes; the sea slug is an aristocratical and costly delicacy which is never wanting, any more than the edible birds' nests, at a feast where honor is is intended to be done to the guests. Unhatched ducks and chickens are a favorite dish. Nor do the early stages of putrefaction create any disgust; rotten eggs are by no means condemned to perdition; fish is the more acceptable when it has a strong fragrance and flavor to give more gusto to the rice.

As the food the Chinese eat is for the most part hard, coarse and of little cost, so their beverages are singularly economical. Drunkenness is a rare vice in China, and fermented spirits or strong drinks are seldom used. Tea may be said to be the national, the universal beverage; and though that employed by the multitude does not cost more than from 3d. to 6d. per lb., an infusion of less costly leaves is commonly employed, especially in localities remote from the tea districts. Both in eating and drinking the Chinese are temperate, and are satisfied with two daily meals—"the morning rice" at about 10 A. M. and "the evening rice" at 5 P. M. The only repugnance I have observed in China is to the use of milk—an extraordinary prejudice, especially considering the Tartar influences which have been long dominant in the land; but I never saw or heard of butter, cream, milk or whey being introduced at any native Chinese table.

While so many elements of vitality are in a state of activity for the reproduction and sustenance of the human race, there is probably no part of the world in which the harvests of mortality are more sweeping and destructive than in China, producing voids which require no ordinary appliances to fill up. Multitudes perish absolutely from want of means of existence—inundations destroy towns and villages and all their inhabitants; it would not be easy to calculate the loss of life by the typhoons or hurricanes which visit the coasts of China, in which boats and junks are sometimes sacrificed by hundreds and by thousands. The late civil wars in China must have led to the loss of millions of lives. The sacrifices of human beings by executions alone are frightful. At the moment at which I write it is believed that from 400 to 500 victims fall daily by the hands of the headsman in the province of Kwangtung alone. Reverence for life there is none, as life exists in superfluous abundance. A dead body is an object of so little concern that it is sometimes not thought worth while to remove it from the spot where it putrifies on the surface of the earth. Often have I seen a corpse under the table of gamblers; often have I trod over a putrid body at the threshold of a door. In many parts of China there are towers of brick or stone where toothless—principally female—children are thrown by their parents into a hole made in the side of the wall. There are various opinions as to the extent of infanticide in China, but that it is a common practice in many provinces admits of no doubt. One of the most eloquent Chinese writers against infanticide—Kwee Chung Fu—professes to have been specially inspired by "the God of literature" to call upon the Chinese people to refrain from the inhuman practice, and declares that "(he God" had filled his house with honors, and given him literary descendants as the recompense for his exertions. Yet his denunciations scarcely go further than to pronounce it wicked in those to destroy their female children who have the means of bringing them up, and some of his arguments are strange enough:—"To destroy daughters," he says, "is to make war upon heavenly harmony" (in the equal number of the sexes); "the more daughters you drown, the more daughters you will have; and never was it known that the drowning of daughters led to the birth of sons." He recommends abandoning children to their fate "on the wayside" as preferable to drowning them, and then says:—"There are instances of children so exposed having been nursed and reared by tigers. Where should we have been," he asks, "if our grandmothers and mothers had been drowned in their infancy? And he quotes two instances of the punishment of mothers who had destroyed their infants, one of whom had a blood-red serpent fastened to her thigh, and the other her four extremities turned into cows' feet.

Doubt has been sometimes expressed as to the practice of infanticide in China on any great scale; but abundance of evidence of the extent of the usage may be found in Chinese books. The following is a translation of a decree of the Emperor Kanghi, entitled:

EDICT PROHIBITING THE DROWNING OF CHILDREN.—When a mother mercilessly plunges beneath the water the tender offspring to which she has given birth, can it be said that it owes its life to her who thus takes away what it has thus just begun to enjoy? The poverty of the parents is the cause of this wrong-doing; they have difficulty in earning subsistence for themselves, still less can they pay nurses and undertake all the necessary expenses for their children. Thus driven to despair and unwilling to cause the death of two persons to preserve the life of one, it comes to pass that a mother, to save her husband's life, consents to destroy her children. Their natural tenderness suffers; but they at length determine to take this part, thinking themselves at liberty to dispose of the life of their children in order to prolong their own. If they exposed these children in some unfrequented spot their cries would move the hearts of their parents. What, then, do they? They cast the unfortunate babe into the current of a river, that they may at once lose sight of it, and in an instant deprive it of life. You have given me the name of the Father of the People. Though I cannot feel for these infants, the tenderness of the parents to whom they owe their being, I cannot refrain from declaring to you with the most painful feelings that I absolutely forbid such homicides. The tiger, says one of our books, though it be a tiger does not rend its own young; towards them it has a feeling breast and continually cares for them. Poor as you may be, is it possible that you should become the murderers of your own children? It is to show yourselves more unnatural than the beasts of prey.—[Lettres Edifiantes, vol. 19, pp. 101–2.

Father Ripa mentions that of abandoned children the Jesuists baptized in Pekin alone not less than 3,000 yearly. I have seen ponds which are the habitual receptacle of female infants, whose bodies lie floating about on their surface.

It is by no means unusual to carry persons in a state of exhaustion a little distance from the cities, to give them a pot of rice, and to leave them to perish of starvation when the little store is exhausted. Life and death in China, beyond any other region, seem in a state of perpetual activity. The habits of the people, their traditions, the teachings of all the sages—all give a wonderful impulse to the procreative affections. A childless person is deemed an unhappy, not to say a degraded man. The Chinese moralists set it down as a law, that if a wife give no children to her husband, she is bound by every title of duty, to encourage and to patronize a concubine, through whom his name may be preserved, and provision made, that when he leaves the world, honors will be done to his manes. One of the most popular of Chinese writers says:

"There are in the world wives who, never having borne boys nor nourished girls, even when the husband has reached the age of forty, prohibit his bringing home a concubine or entertaining a handmaid for the purpose of continuing his posterity—they look upon such a person with jealous hatred and malignant ill will. Alas! do you not know how fleet is time? Stretch as you may your months and your years, they fly like arrows, and when your husband's animal spirits and vigorous blood shall be exhausted, then, indeed, he can never beget children, and you, his wife, will have stopped the ancestral sacrifices, and you will have cut off his generation—then repentance, though you may exhibit it in a hundred ways, will indeed come too late—his mortal body will die—his property, which you husband and wife have sought to keep together, will not descend to his children, but be fought for by multitudes of kindred and relations: and you will have injured not one person—not your husband only—but even yourself, for who shall take charge of your coffin and your tomb? Who shall bury you or offer sacrifices? Alas! your orphaned spirit shall pass nights in tears! It is sorrowful to think of. There are some wives who do control their jealousies and allow their husbands to take concubines to themselves; but they do so (ungenerously) as if they were drinking vinegar and eating acids—they beat Betty by way of scolding Belinda—there is no peace in the inner house. But I beseech you to act as a prudent and virtuous woman. If you have no children, provide with openness and honesty a concubine for your husband. If she bear him children, to you he will owe that the arteries and veins of his ancestral line are continued; his children will honor you as their mother; and will not this comfort you? Give not way to the malignant jealousy of a wicked woman. Prepare not a bitterness which you yourself must swallow."

Generally, however, the wife willingly coincides with the husband in introducing into the houshold any number of concubines whom he is able to maintain, since she exercised over them an undoubted authority, and the child of a concubine is bound to pay higher respect to the first wife than to its own mother. The Chinese illustrate all the domestic relations by imagery, and are wont to say that as the husband is the sun and the wife the moon, so the concubines are the planets and the stars of the domestic firmament.

And it has been often truly observed that, although the Chinese may be called sensualists, there is no deification of the grosser sensualities, such as is found in the classical pantheons, and in many of the oriental forms of faith. Tales of the amours of their gods and heroes seldom figure in their historical books or traditional legends. The dresses and external habits of the women in China are invariably modest; and on the whole the social arrangements must be considered friendly to an augmentation of the human race. The domestic affections are strong. Parents are generally fond and proud of their children, and children obedient to their parents. Order is, indeed, the first law of Confucius—authority and submission the apex and basis of the social pyramid.

The sentiment of dishonor attached to the extinction of a race by the want of descendants through whom the whole line of reverential services (which some have called religious worship) rendered to ancestors is to be perpetual, is by no means confined to the privileged classes in China. One of our female servants—a nominal Christian—expressed her earnest desire that her husband should have another wife in her absence, and seemed quite surprised that any one should suppose such an arrangement to be in any respect improper.

The marriage of children is one of the great concerns of families. Scarcely is a child born in the higher ranks of life ere the question of its future espousal becomes a frequent topic of discussion. There is a large body of professional match-makers, whose business it is to put all the preliminary arrangements in train, to settle questions of dowry, to accommodate differences, to report on the pros and cons of suggested alliances. There being no hereditary honors in China—except those which reckon upwards from the distinguished son to the father, the grandfather, and the whole line of ancestry, which may be ennobled by the literary or martial genius of a descendant—the distinctions of caste are unknown, and a successful student even of the lowest origin would be deemed a fit match for the most opulent and distinguished female in the community. The severe laws which prohibit marriages within certain degrees of affinity (they do not, however, interdict it with a deceased wife's sister) tend to make marriages more prolific, and to produce a healthier race of children. So strong is the objection to the marriage of blood relations that a man and woman of the same Sing or family name cannot lawfully wed.

Soldiers and sailors are in no respect prevented from marrying. I expect there is, from the number of male emigrants—from the greater loss of men by the various accidents of life, and their abstractions in many circumstances from intercourse with women—a greater disproportion between the sexes, tending naturally enough to the lower appreciation of woman; but correct statistics are wanting in this, as indeed in every other part of the field of inquiry.

The proportion of unmarried to married people is (as would be deduced from the foregoing observations) exceedingly small. To promote marriages seems everybody's affair. Matches and betrothings naturally enough occupy the attention of the young, but not less that of the middle aged and the old. A marriage is the great event in the life of man or woman, and in China is associated with more of preliminary negotiations, cermonials at different steps of the negotiations, written correspondence, visitings, protocols and conventions, than in any other part of the world.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1857.

Conference at New York.

WE call the attention of the Saints to the minutes of the New York Conference held here last Sunday. We wish the Presidents of Branches, and the Priesthood associated with them, to perfectly understand what we have said in relation to the business of this office, that they may be qualified to instruct properly the Saints with whom they labor upon these matters, and see that they act upon them.

We were much pleased to see so many Delegates and Saints from distant Branches at Conference. The good spirit that prevailed in all the meetings was very cheering to those who are interested in the progress of the Saints and the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom. We have every reason to believe, from the spirit of the Conference, that all were refreshed and invigorated in no ordinary manner for future labors, and that much good will result from our reunions.

As the business of the Conference has necessarily interfered with our ordinary routine of business, and left us less time this week to devote to the quill, we shall have to defer a lengthy notice of other things till another time. Before laying down our pen, we should, however, say that we had a fine party on Monday evening, in which all seemed to enjoy themselves well.

The Aurora Beacon.

A SMALL sheet in Aurora, professing to be a "Beacon" to some milk-and-water religious politicians, has this week made an effort at arousing its readers from the heavy slumbers into which the editor had hushed them with months of twaddle, by introducing a little noise about Mormonism. The editor seems, from the humble, heavy tone of the Beacon, to be a quiet sort of fellow, just such a person as we would engage to talk us to sleep if we were fatigued and wanted the assistance of such an operation to hush us into the world of dreams. Having ever considered him a harmless creature, we have considerable sympathy for him now, and expect that his barking is but momentary. The other animals have lately been barking, and he probably wants to be "one of them."

When we took up the Beacon and remarked that he had been yelping, Capt. S. P. Brown, of Toms River, N. J., was in the Sanctum, and in his jovial seaman style, told us a little story that is really too good to keep from the Beacon. "Well," says the captain, "These editors yelping about Mormonism, recalls to to my mind a trifling circumstance I witnessed yesterday. On passing along in the railway cars at a pretty good pace and with some considerable noise, we seemed to arouse the indignation of a little pugnaceous puppy-dog that was lying by the road-side, and off he started after us, pulling foot as best he could, and yelping lustily while he had breath. Finding we continued on our course and gained considerably a-head of him, he suddenly stopped, looked a-head, and seemingly convinced that he had neither frightened nor retarded the iron horse, and that his pluck and rage had been badly spent, he lowered his ears, dropped the pendant, and trotted back again to take his place among the other critters."

We had our laugh at the time, the editor of the Beacon may have his now, and learn from the pugnaceous puppy, that he too can't stop nor frighten what is bound to clear the track and go-a-head.

Elder Jacob Hofheins.

AT Conference, on Sunday last, Elder Hofheins was released from his mission to the German population of this State, and left for the West on Wednesday evening. Bro. Jacob has labored diligently while he has been in the States, both at Toms River and New York. Believing he would be an efficient assistant in the emigration across the plains, we have started him thus early for the frontiers. Bro. Jacob returns to his family and the Church in Zion with our approbation and blessing.

Minutes

Of a Council and Conference held at East Brooklyn and New York, on Saturday and Sunday, April 4th and 5th, 1857.

ACCORDING to previous announcement the Presidents of Branches connected with the New York Conference and the Council of the New York Branch, met in the house of President John Taylor, East Brooklyn, on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock.

Called to order by Judge Appleby. Opening hymn—"Oh, say what is truth." Prayer by Elder James F. Cleary.

President Taylor addressed the Council on the business of the Conference. He stated that in addition to the ordinary business of the Conference, representations, statistics, &c., they should be called upon to adopt such means as the Spirit of the Lord would manifest for the support of THE MORMON after his departure for Utah; it would likewise devolve upon them to appoint others to fill his position both in presiding over the Church in the Eastern States and taking charge of the paper. He had at one time thought of having Elder George J. Taylor return with him to their home in the valleys of the mountains; but in looking around for some one to take charge, he was forced to conclude that Bro. George was the person for that position. He was really too young to bear such responsibility alone, he had therefore concluded to give him two Counsellors who, by reason of their position and experience, would be a support to him, and the three united with the blessing of the Most High would, he firmly believed, discharge the obligations that had heretofore devolved upon him.

It was necessary likewise to reduce the expenditure in the office, and for that purpose he would change in some measure the order in which business had been done up till the present time. The paper had heretofore supported expenses that were incurred through services entirely unconnected with it, but in future those for whom the business was transacted would be called upon to support those who did their business.

Bro. George had been the President of the Conference—another would therefore have to be appointed—he would call for a President and Counsellor, who, while they transacted the business of the Saints in the office, would, act as their presiding officers, and in this manner, be sustained, and decrease the unnecessary expenses in the office.

The following resolutions were submitted to the vote, and sustained unanimously.

Resolved, That we receive and sustain George J. Taylor as President of the Church in the Eastern States, with Angus M. Cannon and Thomas B. H. Stenhouse as his Counsellors.

That we receive and sustain George J. Taylor, Thomas B. H. Stenhouse, Alexander Ott and Charles C. Dulin as a committee to edit and publish The Mormon.

That Alexaner Ott be President of the New York Conference with Charles C. Dulin and William H. Miles as his Counsellors.

That Elder Dulin be ordained a High Priest.

That Elder Hofheins and Archer be released from their respective offices, with the blessings and good feelings of their brethren.

William H. Miles be sustained as President of the New York Branch, with Aaron Smethurst and Richard Morris as his Counsellors.

Elder Appleby spoke for a short time, as did Elders G. J. Taylor, Cannon, Stenhouse, Ott, Dulin, Miles and Morris.

An excellent spirit pervaded the Council, and the utmost unanimity of feeling and sentiment was manifest.

Singing—"Glorious things of thee are spoken."

Dismissed by Elder Benedict.

SUNDAY MORNING.

Conference assembled in Brookes' Assembly Room, 361 Broome street, New York, at 10 A. M.

Called to order by Elder Stenhouse. Congregation sung—"The Morning Breaks, the Shadows Flee." Prayer by President Cannon. Hymn—"Mortals Awake, with Angels Join."

Prest. J. Taylor addressed the Conference: He said the Saints had been called together according to the order of the Church, to renew their expressions of confidence in the presiding authorities or otherwise, if they had reasons for withholding that confidence. In sustaining the various officers whose names will be brought before you, if you know aught against them, speak out without hesitancy; but if you cannot find anything wrong with them, and their conduct will bear the strictest investigation, support them; for you most assuredly can find but few men who can stand the scrutinizing test through which pass the officers of the Kingdom of God. You will, in voting for them, signify your intention of abiding by their counsels, and will, therefore, be expected to obey their instructions. The Presidents of the Branches, who have come here this day as delegates to Conference, will be sustained at their respective Branches, and pass through the same ordeal as the general authorities here to-day. If any connected with their Branches know reasons for rejecting them, they should take the proper steps to represent their transgression to the President of the Conference, and such person or persons would be immediately looked after; but if no cause of complaint can be alleged against them, and they are pursuing a righteous course, uphold them with your best confidence, and they will be instruments in the hands of the Lord in blessing you. We have met together for that purpose to-day, and shall now proceed to business. I propose that Elder Appleby preside over this Conference to-day: carried unanimously. Elder Wm. J. Silver was appointed to act as Clerk, and T. B. H. Stenhouse, reporter.

Prest. Appleby expressed his satisfaction at being priviliged to meet with the Saints once more in a Conference capacity, and believed that they should have a good conference, invoked the blessing of the Lord upon all who had come to take part in its proceedings, and called for a representation of the Branches.

1. New York, represented by Elder Wm. H. Miles. The Saints in New York were generally in good standing. They had endeavored to do their duties and discharge the pecuniary obligations that they had accepted for the support of THE MORMON; but in this they had not done as much as they might have done, and that in a great measure resulted more from not carrying out instructions than from lack of ability or will on the part of the Saints; they should, however, in future come up to the mark. Pres. Miles expressed his determination to sustain those placed over him by every means that might be at his disposition, and to walk in the fear of the Lord in all his intercourse with the people of God and in his efforts to build up the kingdom.

2. Haverstraw, by Elder John Druce. In good standing, rejoicing in the truth and united in doing all that is required at their hands.

3. Westport and Norwalk, by Elder E. R. Young. With some few exceptions, in good standing; considerably scattered; the priesthood united, heart, hand and soul.

4. Gilsum, by Elder Solomon Mack. The Saints few in number, widely scattered; meeting held occasionally at the house of Brother Mack, who was more determined than ever to shake the dry bones around him.

5. Rockville Centre, by Elder F. K. Benedick. Coming up well, had renewed their covenants, enjoyed a good spirit, and had begun to manifest their faith by their works.

6. Arnoldton, by letter. Doing well, striving with all their might to build up the kingdom of God; hold meetings every Sunday; prospects good, as the people are favorably inclined to investigate the principles.

7. Boston, by Elder James F. Cleary. In good standing, lately organized; good attendance at meeting, and prospects encouraging.

8. Greenfield, by Elder William Walker. Widely scattered in small companies, but rejoicing in the truth and willing to help roll on the mountain stone.

9. Lowell, by letter. A few in good standing, and willing to accomplish whatever they may be called upon to do, but the greater number are scattered and lost.

10. English-Mills, by letter. Few in number, and widely scattered; generally in good standing; prospects not very good at present.

11. Channceville, by Priest Jarrert. All in good standing; desire to keep the commandments of God; to do better than they had done in sustaining THE MORMON; had been lately organized, and were rejoicing in the Gospel.

12. Toms River was received from the Philadelphia Conference, and represented by Elder S. P. Brown. In good standing and devoted to the work of the Lord.

The foregoing reports were received, and the presiding authorities over the Branches unanimously sustained.

President J. Taylor addressed the Conference, as follows:

Brethren, before I leave you I am anxious to place all things in a proper working order that the interests of the Kingdom of God may suffer in nothing after my departure. In his last two communications to me, President Young said, "I wish THE MORMON to be continued if possible." I thought at first that would be one of the very hard things, and so it would be if things were to continue as they have been. For about three months before this year's subscription came in I had to pay every week about fifty or sixty dollars to keep the paper going and the question immediately arose in my mind "who will do this when I am gone?" But in looking over the other side of the subject and considering the difficulties with which I had to contend on my arrival here from Utah, when the Saints were so few that we could scarcely find any, and now the more favorable circumstances, and numerous Saints around, I thought, that if I, and the few brethren who came with me, could, under the most discouraging circumstances, sustain THE MORMON, so many Elders and Saints ought not to think it a very hard matter, and it can be done.

How is it to be done? Every man must feel his part of the responsibility and no man shall be considered in good standing and seeking the interests of the Kingdom unless he shoulders a part of that responsibility. You have got to make a united effort and roll along this work which is placed upon you—and there is to be no thinking it can't be done—for it can. I have been enabled by the blessing of the Lord to wield an influence over this people to come forward and contribute to the accomplishment of this Mission, and very many good men have nobly assisted me, while I, in addition to my labor and time, have incurred heavy pecuniary responsibilities to keep things moving.

We have come to a position where I want to retrench in our expenses and spread out in another direction. There has been considerable unnecessary, or rather extraneous, expense laid on the office. The paper has had to sustain everything. If poor emigrants came along they called at the office for assistance, and we have given it. Some hundreds of dollars have been "loaned" to them and much of it never returned. If persons had business to attend to, enquiries to make, we have attended to it without fee or reward. One Clerk has been kept for such business all the time and that at the expense of the office; but this cannot be continued longer. I presume we receive every week letters requiring not only many services in the office, but we are often required to do much out of it. Some one occasionally will enclose a dollar, another will say, do so-and-so and we will remit you for your trouble; but by far the greater portion apparently conclude, that because they profess the same faith that that entitles them to all they can ask. We are ever happy to oblige; but a moment's reflection will convince every person, that situated as we are, holding the relation we do to all the Saints, we are overwhelmed with business and cannot possibly do what is required without calling others to assist us, and they must be supported by the business they transact. We charged nothing for services till very recently. We have forwarded money all over creation, taken the trouble and risk and had no pay, but the measures to be laid before the Conference to-day will remedy this to the benefit of the paper and the satisfaction of every intelligent honorable person connected with the Church. In future all business will be attended to as in the past, but when the brethren write and require service let them enclose a dollar in the letter and that will help to pay the person who attends to the business, for he has to live and therefore must be remunerated for his labor and time. For every remittance we have to make to England we shall charge one dollar for our trouble. Had we extensive business of that character, this would pay well; but in that our business is limited—still the expenses of the office and the Clerk's existence is the same.

While I have been presiding here, it was my privilege to have been sustained by those over whom I have presided; but I have asked nothing and do not mean to do so while I remain, as I know you have considerable expenses to meet, but as those whom I leave behind will not be able to do as I have done—they will require your support. The Presidents of the Church and those over the various Conferences have to be sustained by those over whom they preside, and not by the paper. These little things, though small in themselves when laid upon hundreds of people, are nevertheless considerable when laid at the office door. The Presidency of the New York Conference will, in future, be supported like the Presidency of any other Conference. Every expense that can be taken off the paper must be taken off, and this measure will help considerably. There will be one person whose time will be entirely and exclusively devoted to the paper, and who will be the only person sustained by it, and that is Bro. Stenhouse.

The New York Branch has got to advance every week the sum promised for the sustainence of the MORMON, and the other branches must do the same thing. The MORMON fund must not go down, it must be kept up under all circumstances; and those who think they can and will sustain it, hold up your right hands—(all hands up.)

I have observed in some Branches, that when a President of District has presented his subscription book, and the amount collected was much short of the sum promised, the President has said nothing; the Clerk takes the money, and the deficiency is never heard of. This ought not to be; the President of a Branch must hold the Presidents of Districts responsible for the sum they promise every week, unless they show reasonable grounds for it being otherwise: sickness, or want of employment, "but had not time to call for the money" is folly. The Presidents of Districts must see that the teachers do their duty, or they must do it themselves; and the Presidents of Branches must see that the District Presidents do their duty, or they must do it for them: and whoever can't do what is required of him, must vacate his place and let another occupy it who can and will do it.

I have given Brother George, your future President, orders on no account to get into debt in publishing the paper. The non-fulfilment of your engagements, therefore, stops the paper. You have the thing in your hands, and can do as you wish on your own responsibility.

Were it not for the obligations resting upon us to publish the paper, and the burthen of that obligation resting particularly on New York and Philadelphia Conferences, I should long ere this have put every person under the law of tithing. I have not put that law in force; but where I have seen opportunity of establishing it, I have not failed to urge it—now I say to all who can and will do so, withhold not, for in the day when all men's works will be reckoned, that item will stand to your credit. All who wish to place themselves under that law have now the opportunity. Let them do so, and the blessing of the Lord and the answer of a pure conscience will be their present recompense. On this we shall give further instructions shortly through THE MORMON.

As myself and the other members of the quorum of the Twelve in the States are called home to Utah, and Brother Appleby returns at the request of President Young, I have made arrangements for carrying on the work in my absence; and the new appointments, as ratified in Council last evening, will take their place in the general order, which will now be read before you.

Moved, That this Conference uphold President Brigham Young as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints throughout the earth, with Heber C. Kimball as his First, and Daniel H. Wells as his Second Counsellor.

That we sustain John Smith as Patriarch to the whole Church.

That we acknowledge and sustain Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, C. C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, and F. D. Richards, as the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, with Orson Hyde as President.

That we sustain George A. Smith as Historian and general Church recorder.

That we sustain Presidents Taylor, George A. Smith, and Dr. Bernhisel, as the Delegation of Utah to Congress.

That we sustain President Brigham Young as President of the P. E. F. Company.

That we receive and sustain John Taylor as President of the Church in the Eastern States.

That on the departure of Pres. John Taylor for Utah, that Elder Geo. J. Taylor be received and sustained as his successor in the Presidency of the Church in the Eastern States, with Elders Angus M. Cannon and T. B. H. Stenhouse as his counsellors.

That President Geo. J. Taylor in connection with Elders T. B. H. Stenhouse, Alex. Ott, and Chas. C. Dulin be appointed and sustained by this Conference as a Committee to edit and publish THE MORMON, subject to the direction of President Geo. J. Taylor.

That Alex. Ott be appointed by this Conference as President of the New York Conference with Elders C. C. Dulin and Wm. H. Miles as his Counsellors.

That W. J. Silver be sustained as Secretary of the N. Y. Conference.

That Pres. W. H. Miles be sustained as President of the New York Branch with Elders Aaron Smethurst and Richard Morris as his counsellors. Carried unanimously.

Proposed that Elder C. C. Dulin be ordained a High Priest.

That Elder Jacob Hofheins be released from his mission to the German population in this State, with the privilege of returning to Utah—and that he leaves with the blessing and goodwill of the Saints.

That at the request of Elder John B. Archer, who has heretofore acted as counsellor to Pres. Miles, he be released from that office.

That as Elder Wm. L Appleby has for some length of time been travelling in the Eastern States, regulating and setting in order the churches, building up the Saints, instructing them in their duties, and carrying out the instructions of Pres. Taylor, we, in view of his departure for Utah, offer him in the name of this conference, where he has devoted a part of his labors, the united thanks and every expression of good will and best wishes of this people, and that we do our utmost to now bless him as he has blest us, and that he may thereby return to his family and the church in Zion with the satisfaction that his labors have been appreciated.

Elder Appleby made a few remarks and dismissed the meeting by prayer.

2 P. M.

On the motion of Elder Young, the Delegates met for the purpose of presenting President John Taylor with a testimonial of their high appreciation of his labors in the Eastern States. The following was unanimously approved of and ordered to be published in THE MORMON.

TESTIMONIAL

PRESENTED TO

Elder John Taylor,

EDITOR OF THE MORMON,

AND PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS IN THE EASTERN STATES.

By the Representatives of the Branches under his Presidency, on occasion of his departure for Great Salt Lake City.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR—Beloved Brother:

As in the overruling providence of the Almighty we have been for upwards of two years under your presidency and watchcare in the eastern and middle portion of the United States of North America, and are now about to lose for a time your supervision and labors as a minister of salvation and editor of THE MORMON, we, the Delegates from the various Branches of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints connected with the New York Conference, do, for ourselves, and in the name of those we represent, feel to express to you our high admiration of the course which you have publicly pursued for the advancement of the work of God.

Your high standing in the Kingdom of God, as one of the chosen Twelve, restricts us to offer only our expressions of deep gratitude for the benefits which we ourselves have received, and the assurance we have that the Saints whom we represent have in like manner been blessed and enjoy the same feeling. Your labors have been onerous, and your unceasing attention to them have shown to all who have had the privilege and honor of your society the deep feeling of responsibility that has ever dwelt in your bosom. The truth has, through your labors, been widely circulated; falsehood has been thrown back upon the heads of those who had no better weapon with which to assail the cause of righteousness; and the Saints of this country and from the nations of Europe will ever have reason to bless your name for the fatherly counsels you have given them, and for the numerous blessings which they have derived from the organizations you have so wisely and firmly established.

Your absence will be regretted by all; but as you are destined to take an active part in the establishment of the Messiah's Kingdom, we feel assured that though we are deprived of your counsels, all is well. We, therefore offer you, President Taylor, the gratitude of our souls for the benefits we have derived from your labors, and wish you peace, happiness and prosperity in returning to your family in Zion; and may your life be long spared to help Israel to establish that kingdom which shall never be cast down, worlds without end.

2 1-2 P. M.

A General Council of the Delegates and Priesthood were held, Elder John Taylor, presiding. Means were voted for the assistance of Elders Appleby and Hofheins on their return to Utah, and arrangements made for the future sustainence of THE MORMON.

3 P. M.

The Conference was called to order, singing, prayer, after which the sacrament was administered. The resolutions passed in the forenoon were read to the congregation and unanimously sustained.

Elder C. C. Dulin was ordained to the office of High Priest, under the hands of President Taylor and others.

President Taylor said, that inasmuch as Presidents George J. Taylor and Angus M. Cannon had been set apart to their new callings at Philadelphia, he should likewise set apart the brethren in New York who had been called that day to fill new appointments. Elders Stenhouse, Ott, Dulin, Miles and Morris were blessed by President Taylor.

Congregation sung a hymn.

President Taylor addressed the congregation upon the work in which the Saints were engaged, reviewing the course that had been adopted by the enemies of truth to stay its progress, their impotence to achieve their task and the onward march of the Kingdom of God. The work that THE MORMON had accomplished was to him satisfactory, and was so likewise to the Presidency in Zion, and the Saints rejoiced in the teachings and instructions imparted through its columns. It had made itself felt, for editors, high and low, had learned that their lies would not be permitted to pass current without challenge and exposure. With general exhortations to the Priesthood to discharge their duties, to be honorable, pure, and high-minded men above meanness, he concluded a very spirited and instructive discourse.

Congregation sung a hymn. Dismissed with prayer by President George J. Taylor.

7 P. M.

Congregation sung a hymn. Prayer by Elder Druce.

President Appleby addressed the meeting, and said he was glad to meet with the Saints, and rejoiced in the proceedings of the Conference, and he had no doubt that all shared with him the same feelings. However much he desired to speak to the people of God, he considered it his duty to give place to the brethren who had been called, and set apart that day to new appointments.

President Geo. J. Taylor being called upon, spoke of his determination, with the assistance of the Lord, to fulfil his duties. President Cannon followed and made some very spirited and appropriate remarks. He was followed by Elders Stenhouse, Ott, Miles and Morris.

Elder McCune, from the East Indies, was called upon to address the congregation, and spoke in a very interesting manner about his efforts to spread Mormonism in Burmah.

President Taylor bore testimony to the Divinity of Mormonism, and his intimate acquaintance with the Prophet Joseph Smith. His testimony and spirit made a deep impression on the audience.

The Testimonial of the Delegates was read to the meeting, and, being put to the vote, was accepted as the interpretation of their feelings.

Singing by the congregation. Dismissed by President, J. Taylor.

TOASTS BY PRESIDENT TAYLOR.—Brigham Young, the Lion of the Lord, whose dwelling place is in Desert—his influence, wisdom and power are extending to the ends of the earth. From his Mountain home he looks down upon his enemies, and when he roars, the braying beasts of the field and plains tremble.

TOASTS BY JUDGE APPLEBY.—Deseret, the Hive of the Saints, whose bees while they gather honey for their friends, have always a sting for those who seek to crush them.

The Church of "Latter Day Saints"—Jehovah is its author—organized according to the order of God, and the pattern of heavenly things—a light shining in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not.

Zion on the Mountains—The home of the Saints—the pure in heart—the brave and free. Nations afar off are hearing of her glory—the honest in heart rejoicing in her light, and desire to partake of her fame.

President John Taylor.—The champion of truth, the able defender of the Saints, a protector of virtue and innocence, the stern advocate of right and justice, and a terror to lying editors, uninspired clergy, and all wicked men.

P. P. Pratt, G. A. Smith, and Erastus Snow—Three of the chosen Twelve, who have helped to bear the heat and burthen of the day, in proclaiming the principles of Eternal Truth to the nations of the earth: their sun has been brilliant, unobscured by trials or persecutions; may it go down in peace, arise in glory, and they receive their everlasting reward in the resurrection of the just.

The Daughters of Zion.—God bless them, emblems of purity, virtue and innocence; the companions of man, the sharers of his joys and sorrow, the ministering angels in sickness, and the prefection of his glory, and exaltation in a celestial world.

Judge Dulin.—May he always be able to discharge his duty, and administer to the comfort of his friends, as well as he has performed his part on the present occasion, and may the brilliant stars that have been so conspicuously shone around him this evening, continue to shine around him, until their rays shall illuminate him completely, and he becomes the centre of their attraction.

Song: "We Meet Again," by Elder Savage.

A short address and dismissed with prayer by President John Taylor.

The whole of the proceedings went off well, everything being in peace and harmony, which reflected great credit on the Committee of Arrangements.

President George J. Taylor.

PRESIDENT GEORGE J. TAYLOR left on Tuesday afternoon for St. Louis, via Chicago. He goes out to the frontiers to make the necessary arrangements for the Saints in the Eastern States who go to Utah this season. He will return here in a few weeks.

A Recent Importation.

ELDER C. TRAVELLER, of Philadelphia, forwarded us the following clipping from the Daily News of that city. The thing itself is unworthy of notice, but the greediness with which it has been received from the old country, and transfered to the columns of even respectable newspapers in different parts of the Union, shows the awful dearth of anything tangible with which to assail Mormonism. Here is the precious morceau:

BAPTISM OF ONE HUNDRED MORMONS.—A singular, and it may be added, a most disgraceful scene, took place on a recent Thursday evening at Chesterfield. On the outskirts of the town runs a narrow stream among the fields, called the river Rother, over which, on the Hasland road, is a bridge called Stoney Bridge. About one hundred or one hundred and fifty persons, chiefly women, are scattered on the verge of the water, waiting for the appearance of the deluded fanatics who are to be "dipped." They call to each other from opposite sides, and crack jokes of a most indecent and shameless character. It is past eight and quite dark, the moon being obscured and not a single star out to shed even a glimmer of light. Two or three candles are brought down to the water and stuck in the mud by the side, and presently a coarse featured man descends into the middle of the stream, and takes up his position under the arch of the bridge. This is the priest, who is to perform the ceremony. He has nothing on but a pair of trowsers, tucked up at the knee, and a waistcoat with sleeves. He intimates to his attendants that he is ready, and in a few minutes emerge from a house two or three hundred yards off, men (some half and others entirely naked,) and they walk over the ground, which is strewed with pieces of broken bottles, bricks and tiles, to the water. They are compelled to pass through the women who line the banks, and the remarks which ensue are revolting and indelicate beyond description. One by one they are received by the priest, who, amid shouts of laughter, dips each individual, pronouncing over them the formula: "I, being commissioned by Jesus Christ, baptize thee for the remission of thy sins, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." As he utters these words, he lays them beneath the water, and the individual who is being baptized being in every case blinded by the water, there is a struggle to rise, and on several occasions both priest and baptized rolled over together in the stream. As may be imagined, this affords immense amusement to the mob, who testify there approbation by clapping of hands, shrieks, and roars of merriment.—Cor. Manchester (England) Examiner.

The first time we met with the the above, was in the Woman's Advocate; and we confess that we were surprised that either the fair editress "Annie" or "Lydia" would suffer their neat sheet of ordinarily well-selected matter to be disgraced by such a piece of rubbish as from the quill drivers of the other gender, we never expect much that is creditible, we therefore let them pass; but our sisters of the quill in the Quaker City must be more choice hereafter. Such a piece would suit Bonner's Ledger, but for a journal like the Advocate, that aims at both refinement and progress, to give currency to such a Burlesque of a sacred ordinance, is more than we were prepared for.

Notice to the Saints.

As many of the Saints residing in the different branches of the Church, situated in the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States, have requested me by letter, from time to time, to visit them, and I had contemplated to have done so ere this, but on account of ill-health, and the inclemency of the weather during the past winter, prevented me from visiting all the branches I desired. As I purpose leaving here for Utah about the first of May renders it impossible to visit any more of the branches except a few adjacent to New York.

Some two or three branches have remitted means to defray my expenses to visit them, and I have been unable to comply with their request. To those I would say, that the means so remitted I have spent in travelling from place to place in my mission, comforting the Saints, preaching and assisting in building up the Kingdom of our God, together with hundreds of dollars of my own means. If any one requests the means so forwarded refunded, please inform me, and their request will be promptly responded to. And, furthermore, there will be efficient Elders soon sent to visit and instruct all those branches that I had purposed seeing, particularly those in North Carolina and Virginia. W. I. APPLEBY.

Correspondence of Elder Snedaker.

PHILADELPHIA, April 1, 1857.

PRES. TAYLOR—Dear Sir: Being, by reason of my calling, almost daily thrown in contact with the religious world, I meet with a great many persons holding different opintons and views upon religious topics; the variety of which have often surprised me, and caused me to believe that but very few of the professed Bible believers understand the true character of the Bible, especially of the New Testament. My mind has therefore been led to cogitate upon the subject—What was the Bible intended for? and to whom may it be properly applied? And having a little leisure time, I have placed a few of my reflections upon paper, and hereby take the liberty to offer them to you for inspection and insertion in THE MORMON, in case you should find them of any worth.

The Bible is admitted by all Christendom to be a sacred book, to have been written by divine inspiration, and to be a guide unto all who desire to worship the true and living God. Its contents may, to my view, be classed under two grand heads, viz: History and Prophecy.

The historical part informs us of the dealing of God with the inhabitants of the earth in the different dispensations of which it makes record. It tells what commandments He gave at different times; makes known some of His laws and attributes, and also His will, to a goodly degree, concerning mankind in general. It shows us how He rewarded the faithful and obedient, and punished the rebellious and wicked: as in the instance of Noah and the antideluvian world; subsequently Abraham, Lot, and the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph and his brethren, Moses and the exodus of the children of Israel from Egypt, with their subsequent rebellions and punishments, repentance and acceptance again; together with their entrance into the land of Canaan, and the different scenes they passed through afterwards; with an account of the teachings, exhortations, admonitions, prophecies, and sufferings of the Prophets and men of God who were sent to the children of Israel at different periods of time. The particulars of all the above-named events are too numerous to mention here, as they comprise all that portion of the sacred record called the Old Testament. The New Testament makes record of events more glorious than those recorded in the Old, namely, that of the coming-forth, or incarnation, of the Saviour of mankind. It gives us an account of his birth, ministry, sufferings, death, resurrection, and ascension; with the calling of his Apostles, and some of the particular instructions which they received from his lips; how they went and proclaimed the Gospel, what particular doctrines they taught, how they initiated or adopted people into the new kingdom, how that kingdom or church was organized (to some extent,) what particular blessings and gifts were bestowed upon the legal members of that church as true followers of Christ and his apostles; and, to some extent, what persecutions and sufferings the primitive Christians had to undergo—embracing altogether a period of about ninety-six years of the Christian era: by which time, it appears, the wicked had succeeded in driving divine inspiration, or the priesthood, almost entirely off the earth; consequently, divinely inspired writings, or sacred history, ends there.

The prophetical portion of the Bible consists in prediction concerning the future; some of which have been fulfilled, and therefore may now be classed with the historical; the balance remains yet to be fulfilled. The most prominent items of the unfulfilled prophecies may be ranked under the following heads: The gathering of the Jews and the whole house of Israel—their restoration to their former lands and nationality—the re-building of Jerusalem—the building up of Zion—the rearing of a Temple on the tops of the mountains, to which many nations shall flow for instructions—the preaching of the everlasting Gospel, (the fullness of which has been brought again by an angel in this our day,) to every nation, kindred, tongue and people—the gathering of the Saints out of Babylon—the ushering in of the Millennium, or reign of a thousand years—the scourging and final overthrow of the wicked—the final judgment, and complete purification and celestializing of our earth.

Having thus briefly glanced over the contents of the Bible, let us next see what it was directly intended for. Moses wrote or caused to be written, the five books of Moses, for the immediate instruction and benefit of the children of Israel, that they and their children after them might know the commandments of God which were given unto them, and also, that after generations might retain a knowledge of the miraculous dealings of God with their forefathers. It is also obvious that the books of Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, and all those preceeding the Psalms, were intended for the same purpose. The latter seems to have been more particularly written as sacred songs for religious services. Solomon's writings seem to have been designed for general instructions. The books of the Prophets being mostly of an admonishing and prophetic character, were no doubt first written for the purpose of having their principles more extensively circulated among the whole nation than could have been done by the oral proclamation of the Prophets only; for we find that each Prophet came with a message of vital importance to the then living generation, hence the urgent necessity of having it generally known. As they also contained important predictions concerning the future, they were, of course, carefully preserved, and handed down to posterity. Thus, then, different Prophets wrote what took place in their particular day, which writings in subsequent ages were collected together, and for convenience sake, no doubt, compiled into one volume, which we now call the Old Testament; but which, as it does not contain anything like all the books, of which it gives an account. These books, it is evident, were all written for general information; but it does not at all appear from any of them, that their authors intended to exclude any succeeding man of God from writing the word of the Lord as given to them, or the dealings of the Lord with them.

In glancing over the New Testament, we discover the same order of things as in the Old; each writer making record of important events and principles, and in some cases for the benefit of particular individuals, as in the instance of Luke, writing the Gospel and Acts to his friend Theophilus. They also made use of writing, as a means to instruct, admonish or exhort individuals and communities, who could not, for the time being, be personally visited or looked after. Hence the different Epistles. Paul's Epistle to the Romans was written to the Church of Rome, particularly, for they seem to have received erroneous doctrines which he wished to eradicate. It was, therefore, more particularly applicable to them than any other country. He also used it as a means of exhortation to renewed zeal and faithfulness. The same may be said of all the other Epistles, each one being more directly suited to the immediate wants of the individual or community to whom they were sent. The book of Revelations differs, in some respects from the others, being more of a prophetic character; still it was first addressed to the Seven Churches in Asia.

Now, in what light may all these writings and books be properly viewed? That they are the production of divine inspiration, no believer in them will doubt for a moment; but did the authors of them intend them as an only guide for subsequent generations? Does it at all appear that they were intended to exclude succeding men of God, from making use of the same means that they had done to instruct, chastise, exhort, or record prediction concerning the future? In short, do they convey the remotest hint, that immediate or direct revelation should ever cease, except it be on account of wickedness? Certainly not; for, the Apostle Paul expressly declares that Apostles and Prophets should be in the Church, until the Saints are united and perfected; (consequently there would be a continuence of revelation.) If then they ever did cease, it was because of the willful apostacy and wickedness of mankind. We may conclude then, that the Scriptures were given, as Paul says, for doctrine, teaching, and reproof; but never as an only guide for the Church of Christ.

Having said so much concerning the character of the bible, let us next look at the application of the same; that is, let us see to whom the commissions, blessings and promises, it (more especially the New Testament,) records may be rightly applied. We frequently hear particular instructions and blessings, pronounced by our Saviour and His Apostles, applied to almost the whole human family, or at least to almost that entire portion of them who can read the bible, the record of them. As for instance the commission of the Saviour to his Apostles, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel," &c. "Whatever ye bind upon earth shall be bound in Heaven," &c. "He that receiveth you, receiveth me." And he promises. "Ye shall sit upon thrones," &c. "And I appoint unto you a kingdom as the Father hath appointed me." "I go to prepare a place for you," &c., &c. Now, it is very evident that the above sayings appertained unto the Apostles and Disciples of Jesus, and unto those who should afterwards be legally called by them; and not unto all those who can read the record of them.

Again, the apostle Paul says to the church at Rome. "The spirit beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God, and if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ," &c. To the Corinthians he says, "Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." To the Galatians, "And if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." John in his Epistle says in one place, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doeth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know, that when he doth appear, we will be like him," &c. The same Apostle says in Revelations, "And hath made us Kings and Priests unto God and his Father." Now, if we closely examine the above passages, we will at once discover that they cannot be applied to, or claimed for all who can read the record of them, or who may imagine unto themselves that they believe in them. But they were made to particular individuals and communities. St. Paul did not write his Epistles to all the inhabitants of Rome, or of Corinth, &c., but to the churches—the saints—the brethren. To those "who had put off the man of sin," who had been "buried (immersed) with Christ in baptism;" who had been adopted into the "Commonwealth of Israel." In short, to those who had obeyed the Gospel in its fullness, and thereby become the sure sons of God. Is it therefore reasonable, and consistent with the Bible, to apply those sayings to, or claim those blessings for any but those who have obeyed the same laws? to any but those who have passed through the same ordeal? who have made the same, or similar sacrifices, and continue to the end in the same faith? certainly not! Men may persuade themselves, or others, as much as they please that they are Christ's; that they shall be joint heirs with him; they may hug the Bible, and ponder over its contents until they know every verse of it by heart; they may sigh, groan, and profess so much piety, that a smile is scarcely ever allowed to brighten their gloomy faces; but until they obey "that form of doctrine" which the New Testament records, and it is administered unto them by one holding authority from God, and cease from deriding and setting at nought the ordinances, commandments, and priesthood of God, they will remain "aliens to the commonwealth of Israel." And where God and Christ is they cannot come worlds without end.

I would kindly advise everybody therefore to look, and see what they are doing, to let reason have its legitimate away; to no longer follow the shadow and forsake the reality; yes, to cease their blind reverence for the Bible, and no longer garnish the sepulchres of the departed Prophets and Apostles, while at the same time they are ready to reject, persecute, and kill living ones; but receive the words and administrations of living Apostles and Prophets; which in connection with the admonitions and instructions, we find in the records of departed servants of the Lord will lead us on to perfection, and insure unto us a complete salvation and exaltation.

Correspondence of Elder Coombes.

MURRELL'S ISLAND, Miss. Co., Ark.,
March 29, 1857.

PRES. J. TAYLOR—Dear Bro.: Although it has not been my privilege to associate with, or even to see you in the flesh, I take up my pen to address you, with as much freedom as I would a brother. And are we not brethren? I feel that we are. We acknowledge the same Father, and are engaged in the same great work; we profess to be influenced by the same All-wise Spirit, and to be striving for the same glory and exaltation. Yes, I claim you as my brother, and hope that I may never be unworthy of that title. But I write this letter to give you a short account of my labors in this State as a missionary, knowing that you are interested in the progress of this kingdom everywhere. I received my appointment to this State from Prest. Snow on his return to St. Louis from his eastern tour. I landed here on the 16th ult. an utter stranger and destitute of money. I was not long, however, in finding the residence of a brother (S. J. D'Spain) who received me with joy, and has treated me with the utmost kindness. I found also two other brethren who were glad to see me; these and their families I have re-baptized. I have organized a Branch at this place, which numbers sixteen members, and have appointed Bro. D'Spain to preside. Many other honest minded persons have been set to doing what the devil so much dreads, viz.: thinking, the result of which will be, as it has always been, conversion, repentance and baptism. Although this State, like the rest of Babylon, is chiefly infested by wolves, yet I believe there are some few sheep remaining, who only need to hear the voice of the good shepherd to bring them back into the sheepfold. Be it my duty, then, to search them out. Five families will leave here this fall with their faces set Zionward; they will go as far as our Loup Fork settlement, and will remain there till further counseled. They are all American born and used to a backwood's life, and will therefore be able auxiliaries in establishing that settlement. They have the spirit of gathering, and would, of course, wish to push on to the Valley next spring; but I believe they would be governed by counsel in that as well as in all other matters; I have every confidence in them.

During my short sojourn in this land of swamps and cane brakes, I have been zealously engaged in disseminating truth and tearing down the strongholds of error. The Lord has, according to his promise, been with me, and blessed me in my labors; He has dictated me in my words and in my actions; through the influence of His spirit I have been enabled to bear a faithful testimony to this people concerning the establishment of Christ's kingdom upon the earth in these last days. It is true I have met with opposition—that devout and sanctified "Christian" ministers have held up their hands to their "BODILESS" God in holy horror, and denounced me as a deceiver, and warned the people against me; it is true that in their disinterested love for the people, they have even gone so far as to send their own darling sons to my meetings, in order to create disturbances, and thereby distract the minds of the audience from my discourses—but all this is nothing more than I expected. When I left my "Valley home" I realized that I was bidding farewell to peace, to order and to good society—that, for a time at least, my lot was to be cast with a wicked gainsaying and adulterous generation, and therefore I am not surprised in the least. I came here for the express purpose to fight "the Devil" and his imps, and to gather out the honest hearted. I came here to warn this nation that the cup of her iniquity is almost full, and that unless she repents she will be speedily destroyed; and I fully expected that such a declaration would draw down upon my head the wrath of the people. Why did I look for such a result? Simply because better men than myself have been sent to them with the same message, and have been slain for it. Well, brother Taylor, after all I am not a misanthrope; on the contrary, I love all men, more especially the pure in heart—and I long for the time to come when that class alone shall possess the earth.

That the Lord may bless you in your labors, is the prayer of your humble brother, in the Gospel of peace.

ISAIAH M. COOMBS.

Correspondence of Elder McCune.

NEW YORK, April 8, 1857.

EDITOR MORMON—Dear Sir: Having been a resident in India and Burmah for the last twenty-one years, the last four or five of which I have been engaged, in connection with my other duties, in proclaiming the Gospel as revealed in these last days through the Prophet, Joseph Smith, I accept your invitation to add my moiety of testimony to the great work in which we are engaged. In both those countries I have realized, in common with my brethren there, and in all other countries, that those who will live in accordance with the Gospel, will suffer persecution; yet, withall, enjoying that peace which results from obedience to the laws of Heaven, as revealed in former and in latter days. It will be clear to you that I do not allude to that spurious species of piety which characterizes (without, I am sorry to say, any exceptions) the different sects throughout Christendom, i.e., "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof;" but I allude to the obedience of the Gospel, as we find it in the Old and New Testaments, also in the Book of Mormon, Doctrines and Covenants, &c., and found to be by both former and Latter-Day Saints, "the power of God unto salvation"—not in name only, but in deed and in truth, accompanied with present revelation, and the gifts and blessings of the spirit of God. This I have realized in a measure ever since I have been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Having been at length freed from my engagements in India, I hastened to emigrate with my family, in obedience to the commands of God, to the land of Zion; and by the blessing of heaven have reached this place on my way to the home of the Saints. The day after my arrival, I had the pleasure of meeting with the Saints in New York City; and I feel to express my thanks to them and my gratitude to God for the very kind reception I met with among them. I had before known the Saints to be the best people in the world; but never having had the privilege of meeting with a large body of them in India or Burmah, language fails me in attempting to describe the joy and happiness which I felt in meeting with, and realizing the spirit they were of; and again, mingling with them in their conference and festive meetings, has been to me a treat of the highest order. To enjoy the much longed for privilege of sitting under the teachings of an Apostle and numbers of the Elders of Israel, has filled me with gratitude and thankfulness to God, that I have been thus far delivered from Babylon, and endowed with such blessings.

I purpose, God willing, in my next, should you deem it of interest to your readers, or calculated to sustain in any measure the truth, to give you a synopsis of events and incidents in connection with the preaching of the Gospel in Burmah and India.

Praying the best blessings of heaven may rest upon you, and all associated with you,

I remain, dear sir,
Your obedient serv't,
M. MCCUNE.

[Elder McCune, in accordance with our instructions, will remain with his family in this neighbourhood for a few weeks in order to join the company of the Saints from the Eastern States who will start early for Utah. While he sojourns among us we shall be happy to publish any communication he may find time to furnish us with.—ED.]

FOR THE MORMON.

Sanctity.

SANCTITY, as generally understood, signifies a preciseness of conduct, affecting a person's words and actions in certain particulars, more or less numerous, according to individual taste, or the moral or religious code of the party to which the individual belongs, connected with more or less of a supercilious air, which would seem to say: "Stand off, I am holier than thou." But such is very far from being the original and proper signification of the term. The term sacred, which, as an adjective is equivalent to it, both being of Latin origin, properly signifies devoted, appropriated, set apart for. Sanctity, holiness, sacredness, sanctification, therefore, signify a setting apart, devoting, appropriation to special uses. Applied in a strictly religious sense, sanctity with its synonyms, therefore, signifies a devotion, a setting apart to the service of God. A Saint, therefore, a term derived from the same root as sanctity, is one who is specially devoted and set apart to the uses and purposes of God's will and Kingdom—one who, in filling out the fulness of his office and duty, "loves and serves God with all his heart, mind, soul and strength." Man, therefore, to reach the consummation of his proper destiny, his own glory, as involved in that of his Maker, must serve God with the whole force of all his faculties, both bodily and mentally. The whole man, body, soul and Spirit must be "Holiness to the Lord."

From the devotion or sanctity above defined, no part or parcel of man's faculties or organs may be excepted—they are all equally holy to him; for, as man was "made in the image, after the likeness of God"—or, rather, as the Hebrew has it—"in the image, after the blood of God," man must be constitutionally the same, in every part, organs and faculties, as his Maker, perfect both in kind and quality, "good, very good." No one, therefore, has any right or reason to stigmatize, condemn, ignore, or neglect any of man's God-like, God-sprung faculties, or apply to them base epithets. Whoever despises any part of man's organism or faculties, thereby despises and insults God—for man is not only in toto, but in every part like God, "good, very good," and, therefore, God like him.

As in a "great house there are many vessels, some to honor and some to dishonor;" the dishonorable vessels being equally as necessary in the household as the honorable; so there are in the human organism, as conventionally agreed, "uncomely parts" as well as "comely;" yet to our "uncomely parts" is conceded "more abundant comeliness," and to them is given "more abundant honor." And if man has inferior parts, so has God. Moses could not bear the effulgence of the Almighty's face; God's hinder parts were all that Moses was allowed to see.

God intended that all man's faculties, without exception, should be free, restrained by no law but that of excess, perversion, or social infringement. The exercise of them, even of the conventionally inferior, is not only permitted but commanded. They that assume the right even to allow, must also possess the corresponding right to forbid, a condition incompatible even with human existence. Matters involving so grave consequences ought at all times to be treated seriously, not with ridicule or that nervous horror which is made to pass for extreme virtue.

But man's conventionally baser parts are not the only and exclusive field for the exercise of conventional usurpation and tyranny; all man's faculties and organs are more or less chained. To say nothing of the chaining of the mind, which, nevertheless, is carried to a fearful extent; the limbs are chained from joyous or useful and healthful exercise, lest dignity or factitious morality should be violated; yet all man's members, without exception, were made by God, and are such as God himself possesses, and in the due exercise of them God is obeyed, honored and praised. We may praise God not only with our voices, but with the harmonious motion of our feet—"in the dance."

In all things wisdom lies in the medium, "that happy medium which fools never hit." Whatever man pursues with ardor, he infallibly spoils, not excepting even a virtue. "Extremes meet." In the crime of every condition is found its opposite; and in the supreme sanctity of the world is found the perfection of hypocrisy. OBSERVER.

FOR THE MORMON.

Reflections on Man.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

On taking an extensive view of the endless variety of creations, and the wonderful improvements that have been made through human ingenuity, we find, that pleasing prospects, scenes of beauty, where nicest art conspires with lavish Nature, might well be calculated to form a Paradise on this globe, if it was not for the jarring strings that are heard in the universal symphony of this life, which is a grand portraiture of care and suffering.

Not enough that Time, on its life-wasting wings, casts its dark mantles over the sunny moments of human existence; not enough, that the infirmities of mortality often deprive us of our dearest objects, but even man, whose mental illumination in relation to all things connected with the improvement and happiness of our species, should increase, in order to bring about a universal beatitude, is often possessed of a selfish and corrupt soul, which seeks for bliss in the blandishments of sense, and not in the improvement and ennobling of the mind; a soul which as a faithful votary of Mammon and Epicurism, engages merely in the promotion of its worldly interests in order to empty the full brimming cup of sensual enjoyments, instead of contemplating and realizing the illustrious solemnities of eternity.

What is earth with all its ostentatious scenes? Nothing but the vast arena, on which the human characoter is showing itself in all its chameleon hues and forms; where truth, candor, affability and other noble impulses meet often with falsehood, hypocrisy and dishonesty, so that virtue shrinks back appalled at the revolting, moral irregularities of mortality, and the sun of happiness and justice is darkened by the deepening night of immorality and crime, and every thing that makes life so lovely and enjoyable is buried in the abyss of iniquity.

Is not this fair garden of Nature formed to happify the existence of every living being, and does not its sun throw a radiance on the scenes of this life, and even on those beyond the grave? When on a fine morning Nature is rising from its nocturnal rest; when the greyness of the dawn decays gradually, and red streaks begin to tinge the fleeces of the horizon, till the east is lost in an ardent and boundless blush; when the gentle dew steals down and empearls the flowery carpet of the fields, and the wakeful birds, that have left their nests, are mounting on high to salute the opening day; when the solemn and majestic stillness, which is resting on the lovely scenery, the freshness of the air, the sweet, gentle breeze which is playing on the landscape and the cloudless sky tend to inspire the pilgrim of life with those feelings which, like fairy thoughts, dress every thing in a most rosy hue: should not such a beautiful panorama touch the secret strings, and cause those mysterious vibrations, which, like low, prophetic murmurings of unseen messengers from better worlds, are productive of mental illuminations which never dawned upon the soul before, and which cause the mind to wing its flight to the scenes of eternity, to future happiness and bliss? But instead of looking upon the mirror of Nature as a portraiture of everything grand and sublime, as a lesson not to outstep the limits of a dutiful life, but to act always up to the character of noble and exalted minds, we find generally that virtue and reason have to take refuge from the vexatious solicitations of corruption, from the fatal effects of iniquity. Ah, ye grim phantoms of crime, ye offspring of vanity and pride, when will ye teach man the lesson no longer to appear what he is not, but to act the part Providence has destined him for, namely, to be a true and beautiful incarnation of divine mercy, a noble herald of God's wisdom, a champion of truth. When will man learn to seek happiness without splendor, and shun splendor without happiness?

It is the most palpable delusion that can be imposed upon the human mind, to do what is disproved by virtue, reason, and sense; to bewilder the brain with the vain, fleeting images of vanity and selfishness. Away, then, ye wild dreams of human inconsistency that cheat the noblest and most intellectual gifts of Nature into folly and destruction! Away ye delusive amusements of worldly honor; like Lethe's fabulous stream, ye have an oblivious power over the sublime solemnities of eternity. Let us, then, stand disengaged from the little interests of time, and not allow our intellect to be pinioned, as it were, by vanity, and run after its empty shadows like after an ignis fatuus.

To be, to live, that is to say, to realize that we are the veritable entities or personified abstractions which are inherent in all beings, and are capable of perceiving physical and mental objects; to know that the most sensual appetites of our nature have to be completely subjected to the mind; to attune the soul to that state of existence for which Providence has evidently intended man; to be tutored in those principles which have a relation to a future world, to an overruling Intelligence; to realize that the mind is in constant motion, that it is a stream running from the fathomless source of Divine Wisdom, that it soars through the universe, in which there are endless gradations of intellect, endless orders of intelligence: such rational reflections and trains of thought will gradually unfold to our view new and interesting scenes of God's wisdom; they will prevent us from spending our leisure hours in folly and dissipation, and be at the same time an agreable relaxation from the stern duties of life. When our imagination is in such a stretch, evil thoughts will vanish like an evanescent dream, and we will yield with greater delight and fascination to reflections on the happiness and blessings of a glorious future.

Death of Andersen, the Traveller.

The Fædrelandet of Stockholm, of March 2, says:—We have just received the news of the death of the celebrated Swedish traveller, Mr. Andersen. He some time ago set out on his third journey to the interior of Africa, to make zoological researches, and after having explored the banks of the Tioghe and of Lake Ngam, he undertook, in company with an Englishman, Mr. Green, an excursion in an easterly direction, and succeeded in reaching a country into which no European ever penetrated. There he met a young elephant and went in pursuit of it; just as he was on the point of overtaking it, a very large elephant joined it; two natives fired on the latter and wounded it, on which the animal attacked Mr. Andressen and killed him by trampling him under foot. Mr. Andersen was buried on the spot on which he was killed. His numerous and valuable collections have been deposited at the Consulate of Sweden and Norway, at the Cape of Good Hope.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu! Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous avons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

National Anthem.

BY MISS E. R. SNOW.

Lo! an Ensign of Peace on the top of the mountains—
A Banner, a Banner is widely unfurl'd:
Hark! the heralds are sounding a loud proclamation—
Hear, hear the glad message go forth to the world.
Ho, ho! to the States, to the Kingdoms and Empires,
Whose fabrics are tott'ring and ready to fall:
Ho, ho! to all people of every religion,
Art, trade, or profession, the great and the small.
Here is Freedom, glorious Freedom—
Freedom Gods and men hold dear;
The white-crested Eagle has fled to the mountains,
The Genius of Liberty follow'd us here.

The people of Joseph, the Prophet of God,
Are here: we are free from oppression's rod.
Hosanna, hosanna! to God: He has broke
From off our necks the Gentile yoke,
And has given us a government pure and free,
And we breathe the sweet air of Liberty.
And rejoice in the blessings our forefathers won
When they fought, bravely fought with Washington.

Here intelligence' richest fountains
Flow, but not from the snow-topp'd mountains—
They flow from heaven;
Men of God by revelation
Teach the precepts of salvation
Freely given;
Eternal principles now unfold—
Jehovah speaks as in days of old;
And we'll shout hosanna, till nations afar
Shall awake to the sound, and follow the star,
The star of Peace, which o'er Deseret
Arose in full splendor, and never will set.

Fanny Fern on Dress.

IF is my opinion, after all that is said, that women dress much more with an eye to their own sex than the other. What man, unless he is a dry goods merchant, knows whether a woman wears Honiton or cotton lace? What man else knows the value of the dainty handkerchiefs with which ladies so ostentatiously polish their pretty noses? What man else knows, or cares to know, the value of the camel's hair shawls, spread so carefully over their shoulders? By the rood—not one. But the delighted peacock possessor rejoices that every female eye which rests upon it, computes its value to a fraction. Yes—women dress much more for each other's eyes than of men. I never knew a man whose opinion was worth asking, who did not prefer to see a pretty woman (and I imagine the most demure of 'em don't look long at any other!) unostentatiously and modestly dressed; and I never saw a pretty woman who did not look prettier in her plainest home dress, than in her most elaborate adornments. But alas! for plain home dresses. Where are they? Where is the pretty delaine and neat calico, none too good for little climbling feet, (now fashion banished!) Echo answers: Where!

When there are Ciphers in the numbers to be multiplied,

RULE.—If the ciphers are at the right hand of the numbers, multiply the other figures only, and place as many ciphers to the right of the Product as are in both the Factors;

And if, instead of being at the end, they are in any part of the Multiplier, neglect them as before, observing to place the first figure of every Product exactly under the figure you are multiplying by.

QUESTION.

A gentleman dying left a will, dividing his property thus: after his creditors were paid, (whose bills amounted in all to 315645 dollars 45 cents,) one-half of what was left, and half a cent more was to be given to his wife; one-half of what was then left, and half a cent more to his eldest son; and so on, for his other six sons and nine daughters, his father, mother, two executors, two sons-in-law, housekeeper, butler, cook, chambermaid, and page; which being done, there was nothing left: how much was the amount at first, as left by the will?

Have a Purpose.

SIR E. BULWER LYTTON, in his recent address on the occasion of his installation as Lord Rector of Glasgow University, endeavored to impress upon the minds of the students the value of a definite purpose in life, in the following admirable language;

"Having once chosen that calling which then becomes your main object in life, cling to it firmly—bring to bear on it all your energies, all the information you are elsewhere variously collecting. All men are not born with genius, but every man may acquire purpose, and purpose is the backbone and marrow of genius—nay, I can scarcely distinguish one from the other. For what is genius? Is it not an impassioned predeliction for some definite art or study, to which the mind converges all its energies, each thought or image that is suggested by nature or learning, solitude or converse, being habitually and involuntarily added to those ideas which are ever returning to the same central point, so that the mind is not less busily applying when it seems to be the most released from application. That is genius, and that is purpose—the one makes the great artist or poet, the other the great man of action. And with purpose comes the grand secret of worldly success, which some men call will, but which I would rather call earnestness. If I were asked, from my experience in life, to say what attribute most impressed the minds of others or most commanded fortune, I should say 'earnestness.'

"The earnest man wins way for himself, and earnestness and truth go together. Never affect to be other than you are—either richer or wiser. Never be ashamed to say, 'I do not know.' Never be ashamed to say, whether as applied to time or money, 'I cannot afford it'—'I cannot afford to waste an hour in the idleness to which you invite me—I cannot afford the guinea you ask me to throw away.' Once establish yourself and your mode of life as what they really are, and your foot is on solid ground, whether for the gradual step onward, or for the sudden spring over a precipice. From these maxims let me deduce another—learn to say 'No' with decision; 'Yes with caution—' No' with decision whenever it resists temptation; 'Yes' with caution whenever it implies a promise. A promise once given is a bond inviolable. A man is already of consequence in the world when it is known that we can implicitly rely upon him. I have frequently seen in life a person preferred to a long list of applicants, for some important charge which lifts him at once into station and fortune, merely because he has this reputation, that when he says he knows a thing he knows it, and when he says he will do a thing, he will do it. Muse, gentlemen, over these maxims; you will find it easy enough to practice them, for when you have added them together, the sum total looks very much like—a Scotchman."

ABUNDANCE is trouble—want, a misery—honor, a burden, and advancement dangerous—but competency, happiness.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1857.

A Bid for the Gubernatorial Chair of Utah

SOME weeks ago the Washington correspondents sent the lightning messenger east, west, north and south, with the intelligence that the Governorship of Utah had been offered to an honorable gentleman in Texas; a few days afterwards, this honorable gentleman was said to have declined the honor; to another gentleman the Federal office was tendered, but he was reported to have indignantly refused the proposition. To how many more the Gubernatorial chair of Utah may have been offered, we know not; but the last public news on this matter, from the seat of appointments, was that important business before the Cabinet had caused the Utah question for a time to be laid on the shelf.

Not knowing the grounds on which the gentlemen above alluded to declined the Governorship of Utah, we concluded that they were gentlemen who had some respect for themselves and for the principles of Democracy, and would not consent to take part in any movement which would be in open violation of the groundwork of Democracy—the sovereignty of the people—as it is well known to every person who knows anything of the subject, that Gov. Young is the choice of the inhabitants of that Territory, and any other Governor can only be desired by those who have no interest in the Territory or in the well-being of the people—persons who desire nothing better than to learn of destruction and death to the Mormons, because of their religion. Such was our charitable interpretation of the gentlemen's refusal to cross the plains and reign over the land of grasshoppers and crickets; but for every work there are ready tools. If the administration at Washington should really forget the principles they profess, and through the profession of which they have been placed in their present high position, they need not apprehend any difficulty in procuring a man for the work. The New York Herald of last Sunday contained a letter from an anonymous writer, who is everything that can be desired—the very pink of a governor for Utah—a military man, once connected with Mormonism, now boiling over with fury against his Excellency Gov. Young, and burning with zeal to annihilate him and every man who will stand by him. The Goliath has been found; open your recruiting gin shops and clear the track for an army of rowdies officered by the pious, holy and devout Philistines of Christendom. Now is the time for a brush with the Mormons. All who pant for blood come on to the righteous massacre of the Utonians. We shall, in our sphere, when we learn of his appointment, beat up for recruits; but to Goliath we would say: give us time, as there are thousands of our own boys in the States, and others constantly coming from Europe, who would like nothing better than to join Uncle Sam's army, get pay and rations to go to Utah; but what they would do when they got there, of course we can't say; but chance that, give us time and we shall beat up for recruits. The only difficulty that we see in the way of this modern Goliath carrying out his plan of annihilation is, he seems to be greatly gifted with foresight, sees many dangers, is apprehensive of poison and the other stratagems of warfare. He has one great quality, however, that will no doubt counterbalance the absence of others: he can lie. He begins his letter to the Herald with a falsehood about us; he says:

"Noticing from the Mormon, a paper published in this city, by John Taylor, one of Brigham Young's apostles, a statement tantamount to a denial, and then again a partial admission of the truth of the statements from Judge Drummond in Utah, concerning the late high-handed outrage and treasonable act of the Mormon Governor against the Federal Government," &c.

Now our readers know well that the latter portion of that quotation is a palpable falsehood. We never made any such "partial admission." We denied all knowledge of the fact charged upon the Utonians by Drummond. In the first place, we disbelieved the charge, because we know Drummond to have been doing his utmost to injure the Mormons ever since he got annoyed over that woman business getting to the public, and we could therefore believe nothing he would say to their hurt, without confirmatory testimony of an undisputed character. That testimony we have not seen. In our correspondence from Utah, and in that of others, we have never heard one word or one allusion to anything to justify his charge, or anything like it. There has been no "partial admission," on our part, "of the truth of the statements from Judge Drummond in Utah;" we therefore throw back upon this would-be Goliath the charge of misrepresentation. In alluding to our remarks about the Governorship of Utah being offered to the Hon. F. McMullen, he says there is "also a silent threat in the expression of the editor, that the hon. gentleman to whom the Governorship of Utah was tendered does well to reflect." This is also a gross perversion of our remarks, and a perversion which the writer knew to be a perversion. We did say that the gentleman would do well to reflect, but in what manner? We said that:

"If President Buchanan thinks of his own election being the expression of the popular will, he will think of the popular will in Utah. His Excellency Gov. Young is the choice of that people," &c. "The Hon. F. McMullen does well to reflect—and so will all round. The wish of the citizens of Utah ought to be respected as that of any other Territory."

At other times we should not have taken the slightest notice of this scribbler and falsifier of our writings, but the country is deluged with lies about Utah, and perverted words are put in the mouths of our brethren to represent them as hurling defiance at the General Government, in the hopes that a row may be got up between them; but the above exposition will show to our friends, and for the others we don't care the snap of our fingers what they think, how much reliance can be placed in anything that is published by our enemies. The efforts of the present writers against Utah seem to resemble that of low-bred boys, to be met with at every school, who are never better pleased than when they can get up a fight. They go to one boy and tell him that another boy has spoken disrespectfully of him and challenges him to fight. The pride of the first gets wounded, not at anything he has to complain of in the boy selected for his antagonist, but from fear of being considered a coward; he therefore advances and begins to threaten and vex the other, who knows no cause of quarrel. The originators of the mischief stand by and misrepresent to the ears of both, so that the fight comes off to their satisfaction. The whole crowd of writers are dunning into the ears of the administration at Washington that the Mormons hurl defiance at them and want to fight, but no effort shall be spared on our part to prevent pride from leading to more than what calm, dignified reason and honor can justify. We have not hurled defiance at the government, but on the contrary, accord to it our confidence, and shall not withdraw it till forced to do so. We are aware of the outside pressure of men who seek Federal offices, and we are aware of the fanaticism that the late election stirred up against the Mormons, and the hopes that inspire the enemies of Democracy. Perceiving all these at work, we feel rather to cheer men in authority on to the faithful discharge of their duties, unmindful of the boisterous, envious, riotous crowd, who would glory at any unrighteous measures against the Mormons. There are plenty of men ready at any moment of excitement to cry war, war, and not a few ready to take part in it and rush unthinkingly to the cannon's mouth in their wild race for the world's glory; but there is a glory beyond that, to which we think the gentlemen who rule the nation should aspire. Let the Administration, on whom are fixed the eyes of both God and men, stand up for the rights of their fellow citizens in Utah against the clamor of the bigoted and this thirsting for blood—we ask no more.

Let the voice of the President be heard, with the solemnity of heaven upon him, declaring to the nation that the Mormon, Shaker, Quaker, Presbyterian, Protestant, Catholic, and every other person who professes to serve the Great I Am, shall be protected in the practice of his religion, so long as that practice effects in nothing none but the domestic institutions of the parties professing that faith, and so long as they conform in their relationship with the Federal Government in the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States Any other course would sink the Democratic Republic to the level of the Pontifical States of Pio Nino and the despotism of King Bomba of the Two Sicilies. We have done our best, and so have the Utonians, to keep principle before the eyes of those in authority at Washington, and have been respectful, but not sycophant, in all our relationship with the Government; but should they choose to take the responsibility of a contrary course, we shall ever have the satisfaction of having discharged our duties.

We pass over Goliath's professed history of the life of President Young and the leaders of this people, as his charges are a mass of falsehood, which only could be written by a madman, thirsting for blood, inspired by the fury of hell. Knowing that his recommendations for the destruction of the Mormons would call forth the reprehension of every virtuous, honorable person, he says:

"I may be considered harsh in thus expressing myself as though I thirsted for the blood of those whose garments are red with crime of the deepest dye, yet such is not the case."

Notwithstanding this latter attempt at cloaking the blackness of his putrid, murderous heart, he concludes:

"The dividing line between Brigham Young and his followers and this government is drawn, and each party will therefore now take sides and prepare and come to the strife. One will make all haste to gather in Utah, that the nation may arise with one accord against these traitorous revolutionists, the result of which remains to be seen."

Had this Goliath added his name, we should have known what value to place upon his statement that "the dividing line had been drawn;" but proceed from whom it may, the Mormons will take things easy. They have trusted in the Almighty, and are just as confident to-day, as ever Israel was, that He is their God, and there is none other. It is certainly something strange to this dollar-hunting generation to hear men talk of trusting in God; but the Mormons, among other peculiarities which distinguish them from their professedly pious neighbors, do trust in Him, and when the winds blow, the thunders roll, and the passions of men threaten to spread ruin, devastation and death around them, they can stand calmly and witness the salvation of Israel.

Before finishing with this outrageous letter-writer, we deem it but justice to ourselves to notice at some length his charging Governor Young with the murder of Capt. Gunnison and Col. Babbitt. To his Excellency Governor Young is laid the charge of employing men to murder those who are supposed to be opposed to him and then charging it to the Indians. The charges of an anonymous writer merits no attention; but we shall notice this, as the same charge has been made by Drummond, and his letters are printed in nearly every paper, and have been the principal cause of the present excitement among editors. Speaking of Colonel Babbitt's death, this anonymous accuser says:

"It was a serpent-wise policy to prevent his telling tales at Washington, as he was on his way there—to stop his breath."

Facts well known to the Administration at Washington, and as well known to the Herald, that published the lying outrage of this Goliath, show the wickedness of the charge. Colonel Babbitt's murder on the plains is laid to the Mormons as they feared he should say something against them on his arrival at Washington. Now, Col. Babbitt left Great Salt Lake City for Washington, and was accompanied by Judge Appleby, and Abraham the Jew crossed the plains at the same time with them. Judge Appleby and the colonel never were separated from their departure from Utah till their arrival at Washington, save during two or three days that the colonel called upon his father at Boonsville, Mo. Col. Babbitt was not killed till after he had been to Washington, seen the Government, transacted his business, and was between Forts Kearney and Laramie, on his way home. This accusation shows the wickedness of the heart of our anonymous accuser. He had heard of the colonel's death on the plains, and straightway conceives that it would suit his plans to accuse the Governor of the massacre, and allege at the same time that there were some terrible secrets to be told to the Government. But of the colonel's death we shall say more. He was in this office the day that he left for Utah, and we, in the presence of half a dozen gentlemen, discountenanced the colonel's plan of travel across the plains. Every person then present considered that the colonel was imprudent to travel almost alone across that country, and dissuaded him against it. We learned at the time, through the Council Bluffs Bugle, edited by his friend and relative, Mr. Johnson, that the colonel had at that city likewise been persuaded against travelling with so little protection. We have disposed of the anonymous writer's charge about stopping his breath before he got to Washington. Here is the charge of Drummond in his letter to the Attorney General at Washington:

"The late Secretary of the Territory, A. W. Babbitt, was murdered on the plains by a band of Mormon marauders, under the particular and special order of Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, and J. M. Grant, and not by the Indians, as reported by the Mormons themselves; and that they were sent from Salt Lake City for that purpose, and that only."

We could state many things within our own knowledge that would at once show the falsity of this charge; but we shall quote from the Bugle:

"The arrival on Sunday eve of a train from Salt Lake under command of Capt. W. J. Hawley, places beyond question the fact of the murder of Hon. A. W. Babbitt, Secretary of Utah Territory. From Mr. Hawley we obtain the following information:

"Near the 'Sweet Water,' he met Messrs. Kimball and Ferguson. This is about 200 miles West of Fort Laramie, and 300 east of Salt Lake. He heard from them the rumor, and in order to get at the facts he remained with Mr. Trist, the Indian agent, for several days. The Indians had come into the Fort and reported that twelve of them had attacked Col. Babbitt while one of his men was away, and after the Colonel had fired his double-barrelled gun and his two revolvers, one of the Indians crept behind the wagon and tomahawked the Colonel. Frank Rowland and Sutherland were also killed.

"The Indians said the Colonel fought like a grizzy bear.

"When at Fort Kearney, Capt. Hawley learned that Maj. Wharton had in his possession the papers (including a draft of $8,000) and some of his hair. His watch was obtained by a Frenchman, from the Indians. Altogether about eighteen whites have been killed.

"Next week we shall have more space for particulars."

From the next number of the Bugle we quote the following:

"He (Col. Babbitt) left his family last spring to visit Washington upon official business, visiting this place both upon going and returning. With a number of friends, we accompanied him to Florence, N. T., on the last of August, from whence he started out to Utah, with only one attendant. Upon arriving at Fort Kearney, he found that the Cheyennes had attacked his freight train of Government property and killed four of the party, and taken the stock and every other valuable they desired.

"Here Mr. B. stopped a week to gather up what could be found of the scattered property, purchase other teams, obtain drivers and start the train again, himself starting forward with two attendants, viz: Frank Rowland and a Mr. Sutherland. They stopped at 2 o'clock when twenty-eight hours out, and having travelled 120 miles, a band of twelve mounted Cheyennes, whose hands and arms were yet reeking with the blood of the murdered, bore down upon them with a wild shout and a hideous yell. Mr. S. was away from the wagon a short distance. Mr. R. stood near by apparently petrified, and was shot down by a score of well aimed arrows. Mr. B. after hailing the Indians, fired, first his rifle, then his revolving pistols at them, but being still hard pressed, clubbed his rifle and backing toward his carriage fought desperately and effectually, and single handed and alone as he was, would have stood a chance to have come off victorious over more than half a score of savage warriors, had not a blood thirsty wretch come up behind him into the uncovered wagon and with his tomahawk felled him to the earth. Mr. S. endeavored to save himself by flight but was also overtaken and killed." * * *

This annoymous accuser of the Mormons speaks as ignorantly of Capt. Gunnison as he did of Col. Babbitt. He says:

"It was the same policy that prevented Lieut. Gunnison from reporting the true state of things in Utah."

If he had known anything of Capt. Gunnison he would have known that the Captain had published his views of the "state of things in Utah." But we shall quote from Drummond's letter to Judge Black. He says:

"Again, sir, after a careful and mature investigation, I have been compelled to come to the conclusion, heartrending and sickening as it may be, that Capt. John W. Gunnison and his party of eight others were murdered by the Indians in 1853, under the order, advice and directions of the Mormons:

We shall not take the trouble to meet this accusation, but submit the following from the work of Mr. Carvalho, the artist, who accompanied Col. Fremont's last expedition to the Rocky Mountains. Mr. C. says:

"We arrived at Fillmore City, in Parvain Valley, Millard county, at 5 o'clock. This valley is sixty miles long and fifty miles wide; the Seveir Lake is forty miles from Fillmore. Within ten miles of the city, to the west, four fresh water lakes are to be found. Fillmore City, contains one hundred and fifty families, one thousand head of cattle, three hundred sheep, saw-mills, and flour-mills, etc., etc. A wall of adobes is built all round the city, protecting the inhabitants from the Indian aggressions.

"Capt. Gunnison's party were encamped at Cedar Spring, in this valley, at the time of their massacre.

"This afternoon, accompanied by two interpreters and several other gentlemen, we proceeded to the Parvain Indian's camp, to see their celebrated chieftain, Kanoshe, whose portrait I was anxious to obtain. I found him well armed with a rifle and pistols, and mounted on a noble horse. He has a Roman nose, with a fine intelligent cast of countenance, and his thick black hair is brushed off his forehead, contrary to the usual custom of his tribe. He immediately consented to my request that he would sit for his portrait; and on the spot, after an hour's labor, I produced a strong likeness of him, which he was very curious to see. I opened my portfolio and displayed the portraits of a number of chiefs, among which he selected Wa-ka-ra, the celebrated terror of travellers, anglicised Walker, (since dead). He took hold of it and wanted to retain it. It was, he said, 'wieno,'—a contraction of the Spanish 'bueno'—very good. I also learned from him, through the interpreters, the following facts, relating to Gunnison's massacre.

"There were about thirty Parvain Indians, encamped six miles, N. W. of Gunnison's camp, on Cedar Spring. Potter, a Mormon guide, and one of the exploring party went out to shoot ducks; one of the Parvains was also shooting rabbits, and hearing the explosion of fire-arms, he marked the direction, and followed the men to their camp. This Indian was the son of a Parvain Chief, who was killed by a party of emigrants, under command of Capt. Hildreth, about two weeks before. Marking the spot, he repaired to his own camp, and commenced to make inflammatory speeches to his tribe; he made a fictitious scalp out of horse hair, attached it to a pole, and elevating it, commenced the war dance; the rest of the Parvains continued dancing until midnight.

"They were incited to revenge, for the unprovoked murder of their old chief; who, together with some women and young men, went into Hildreth's camp merely to beg food. They were ordered out, and force was used to take away their bows and arrows; in the scuffle, one of the Americans got his hand cut with an arrow-head, when they were fired upon with rifles, and several persons killed; among them this old chief.

"The Parvains, before day, started for Gupnison's camp, surrounded the party who were breakfasting under cover of the willows which grew on the banks of the creek. Capt. Gunnison was the first man who had finished his breakfast; he arose, and while speaking to his men, the Indians with a tremendous yell, fired upon them. Capt. Gunnison raised his hands and beckoned them to stop. The men immediately fled, only one man fell by the first fire on the spot. The men's first endeavors were to reach their horses; the Indians pursued them, and shot them from their horses. The American party never fired a gun, the last man fell three miles from camp.

"Kanoshe, the chief, was sixteen miles away from the scene of the massacre, and knew nothing about it. One of the tribe brought a horse into camp, and told Kanoshe what had transpired. Kanoshe took the horse to the Mormon settlement (Fillmore), and gave it up to the authorities. He then proceeded to the Indian camp for the purpose of procuring the property of the slain, to render it up to the Americans. The Parvains were exasperated at his interference, and several arrows were aimed at him to kill him.

"His indomitable courage alone saved him. He finally persuaded them to give up the papers and effects of the slain, which he delivered to the proper authorities. The Mormon guide was also slain."

The charge of Drummond about the Mormons poisoning the Hon. Leonidas Shaver is in perfect keeping with the charges to which we have replied. We shall only say that Judge Shaver was highly respected by the Mormons in Utah, and his death was sincerely regretted.

In closing this lengthy notice of the present charges against the Mormons in Utah, and the rumor of force being sent to that Territory, we cannot do better than ask the administration at Washington, and all who have any respect for themselves as citizens of the United States, can they, with the knowledge of these facts, wonder that the Mormons have had little respect for such filthy defamors as Drummond and men of his stamp, who have been sent out there as Federal officers?

The New York Sun on Utah.

Our attention has been called to an article, headed "The Utah Difficulty," in the New York Sun of the 8th inst. We say "our attention has been called to that paper;" for, to speak the truth, we seldom look at our neighbor, sharing as we do in the general feeling of the reading public that it has small claims to the title of a newspaper. Though its qualifications for usefulness are indeed very limited, its meddling propensities are largely developed, and instead of confining itself to the only sphere of usefulness which its warmest friends can claim for it—"help wanted" in a Dutch grocery, or "situations wanted" for Bridget or John—it not unfrequently tackles its neighbors in attempting, we suppose, something by way of variety to relieve its general dullness.

We are informed that "The Mormons in Utah" have lately come in for quite a large share of the Sun's attention, and received no small portion of its low, vulgar spleen: with the past, however, we shall not now deal; the article before us is sufficient for the present.

The substance of the article we refer to is that the Mormons in Utah are "a treasonable herd of fanatics, and impostors, and outcasts of society—gathered from the four quarters of the globe"—who "practice their immoralities, and plant their vices in our soil, under the authority of a licentious creed and lying revelations;" that Mr. Fillmore did wrong in appointing President Brigham Young to the chief authority in the government of the Territory; that Mr. Pierce committed as great a blunder in retaining him there; that "Mr. Buchanan must not repeat the blunders of his predecessors;" that "a firm and fearless man for Governor" is wanted; and that "the Mormons will not rebel when they are convinced that they cannot conquer; they will not fight when they understand that the United States will put down their rebellion at whatever cost."

To the above should be added, that the Sun goes in strongly for the Federal Government asserting and maintaing its political authority in that Territory, and says "the moral voice of the country calls on President Buchanan to arrest the licentious autocracy of the pseudo-prophet Brigham Young."

The editor of the Sun appears to us to have chosen "the Utah difficulty" as a text to spin out something for variety's sake, and in the absence of facts to support his choice was forced to commence with twaddle; finding nothing to say to the point, he twaddled on with a "so on and so forth," till he ended just where he began—in twaddle—his readers nothing wiser on "the Utah difficulty"—himself, we should think, considerably relieved from a load of low, vulgar invectives that were lying on a heart deeply imbued with the high and refining influences of Billingsgate or Five Points.

"A treasonable herd of fanatics, and impostors, and outcasts of society" is easily written, no doubt; but we call upon the editor of the Sun for a relation of the facts which justify the charge of treason against the people of Utah. Facts, Mr. Editor, facts; we want facts, facts which none can gainsay—publish them, or we publish you to the world as a mean, contemptible libeller. What treasonable acts were ever committed by the Utonians, when, where, and by whom witnessed? Publish them to the world—we defy you to publish them. Some Granny tale about what some one heard, what another one said who had seen somebody else who was acquainted with the forty-seventh cousin of another somebody who thought that the Mormons were "a treasonable herd of fanatics" is not enough. We want evidences of their treason and fanaticism, not according to the dictum of Moses Beach of the New York Sun, but evidences of their treason "as strong as holy writ," according to the Constitution of the Republic of the United States of North America, and fanaticism, according to Abraham, Moses, and Christ. On religion we are willing to be tried as fanatics at any moment by the record of the lives, principles and practices of the authorities we have named, and in politics we bow to the Constitution. The Utonians are, in addition to a "herd of treasonable fanatics," said to be "impostors and outcasts of society." On whom do they impose? The Mormons in Utah have a faith which is certainly not popular; but who has shown it false and without foundation? No one. It is easy to cry impostors, but quite another thing to prove the fact. The zealous Protestant regards the Catholic Jesuit as an impostor and arch-deceiver, and the Jesuit looks upon the Protestant missionary as the servant of the Devil, who sows the seeds of disobedience in the hearts of the children of men against the authority of the Mother Church—the one is an impostor in the eyes of the other, and the Mormons may be regarded by the editor of the Sun as unfavorably; but what of it? Are we to have a war on religious grounds? Mormonism may have the appearance of an imposture to Mr. Beach; but if that gentleman professes any of the popular man-made religions that abound in Christendom we can assure him that his faith is as absurd in our eyes as ours can possibly be in his. We do not, however, trouble him, nor lie about him and the professors of any species of religion called christian, as he does about us. We let every man act for himself, choosing whom he shall serve, how he shall worship, and we say that no man has any right to interfere in the religion of another, however ridiculous it may appear. Were they zealous for the glory of God, as they would have us believe, we could tolerate their efforts to convert us from Mormonism to what they regard as better and holier systems; but their constant misrepresentations, abuse and lies force us to conclude that they seek not our salvation but our destruction. We try to find out another cause for the enmity against us, and would be glad to excuse our enemies if we could find the slightest ground for their apprehensions of evil, but we discover none.

The Sun rants about sending out force to enable the Government to maintain its authority in Utah. There is not a Territory in the United States where there is more peace and order than in Utah, and where the government is more respected. To cry against Mr. Fillmore for appointing Brigham Young to the Governorship of Utah is to the credit and not to the discredit of Mr. Fillmore. Mr. F. acted like an honorable man, a man who dared to brave the rabble and the bigoted. His name will go down to posterity honored and respected, while his traducers will be forgotten or covered with shame.

To the Saints

Constituting the New York Conference.

HAVING been appointed by the wisdom of God to preside over you, we feel it incumbent upon us to address you from time to time through the medium of these columns on such things as we consider necessary and essential to your salvation. God in His infinite mercy has condescended to allow your spirits to take tabernacles on this globe, that you may become acquainted with the routine of a mortal career. For that purpose the Lord has endowed you both with physical and mental powers, with certain senses, that through the instrumentality of these gifts you might become aware of your prominent position in the scale of creation as intelligent responsible beings.

But, independant of that, you are in possession of the noblest blessings which the great Elohiem could confer on pilgrims in this vale of tears;—the light of the true and everlasting Gospel, as it is emanating in all its primitive beauty from the meridian sun of Godliness;—the light of eternal truth, the source of which is to be traced in those holy places where the spirits of the dead drink the waters of immortality, is again shining upon you. The gates of divine wisdom leading to celestial exaltation, are unfolded; angels have again come from the mansion of glory with the glad tidings of life and salvation;—a channel of communication with God through the restoration of the legitimate Priesthood is again opened, and a fathomless, unsearchable stream of revelation is being poured out upon you, illuminating thus the inmost chambers of your souls, and kindling in your bosoms the love of eternal truth.

As Saints of the Most High, you occupy the most prominent place in the arena of humanity; but inasmuch as you have received the light of Heaven, and possess more knowledge concerning the relationship with God, and His purposes concerning you, than the rest of mankind, the greatest responsibility is resting upon you to honor your position by a strict obedience to all heavenly mandates, by a faithful discharge of the solemn duties which are devolving upon you.

Brethren and Sisters, the path to eternal life is shown to you, but remember that the realization of every blessing, whether temporal or spiritual, whether concerning this life or that to come, depends entirely upon your own exertions. Inasmuch as God has endowed you with noble gifts, he wants you to use them, and puts you, consequently, in such positions in which you have a full scope for their exercise. Believing and knowing that everything is controlled by the supreme wisdom of Jehovah, you will have to acknowledge His hand in all things; and if events should transpire which are disagreeable to your feelings and anticipations, remember that you have to bring everything pertaining to yourselves in subjection to the will of God—hence you will have to learn how to control your feelings, and when you have succeeded in that, you will be able, with the assistance of the Holy Spirit, to meet every event of a kind Providence with the resignation of a true Saint. But before you acquire the power of self-government, you will have to learn your dispositions to watch the secret strivings of your hearts, and thereby you will find out your weaknesses, and see the necessity of putting a double guard on them, and then you will become self-acting beings, and your actions will be confined to the limits of consistency and reason.

Learn to improve your minds by seeking after the knowledge of God; beautify your souls by the cultivation of noble and exalting principles and sentiments; be faithful, energetic and firm in the cause; do away with everything impure and unholy; let your tabernacles be the temples of God; show to the world by your actions and words, that you realise the importance of your solemn calling, and that your sole aim is to increase in faith, intelligence, and in everything constituting divine perfection. Be Saints in your domestic circles; attend to your family duties; instil in your children correct principles; seek the Holy Spirit; and if you act thus, we say unto you, in the name of the God of Israel, you will be blessed with the blessings of Heaven and Earth.

ALEXANDER OTT, President.
CHARLES C. DULIN, } Councillors.
WILLIAM H. MILES, }

Elder Feramorz Little.

This gentleman called upon us on Wednesday on his way to Washington. We have already published an account of his trip with the last mail from Utah. He was greatly surprised to read in the papers about "the state of things in Utah." He says it is going from home to get news with a vengeance. He has handed us the following—a copy of a letter he sent to the editor of the New York Herald. We shall see if friend Bennett means anything like fair play.

MERCHANT'S HOTEL,
NEW YORK, April 15, 1857.

EDITOR HERALD—Sir: As myself and Mr. E. K. Hanks are the last persons who have come to the States from Great Salt Lake City, I deem it my duty to bear testimony against the lying, scribblers who seem to be doing their utmost to stir up a bad feeling against the Utonians. We left our homes on the 11th of Dec., brought the last mail to the States, and certainly should know the state of things there. The charges of Judge Drummond, are as false as he is corrupt. Before I left for the States, I was five days every week in Great Salt Lake City, and I witness to all the world that I never heard one word of the burning of nine hundred volumes of law, records, &c., nor any thing of that character, nor do I know, or ever heard of anything of the dumb boy story he talks of.

There is only one house between my house and the Penitentiary said to contain "five or six young men from Missouri and Iowa," and I do know that up to the day I left there were only in that place of confinement three Indians who were convicted at the time of Col. Steptoe's sojourn there, for having taken part in the massacre of Capt. Gunnison and party, which Drummond now charges upon the Mormons, even though Col. Steptoe and the United States officers then in Utah investigated the affair thoroughly and secured the conviction of three Indians alluded to. This is an unblushing falsehood that none but a man like Drummond could pen.

The treasonable acts alleged against the Mormons in Utah are false from begining to end. At Fort Kearney we learned all about the murder of Col. Babbitt and do know that that charge against the Mormons is but another of Drummond's creations.

I have but a short time at my disposal for writing, but must say that I am astonished to find in the States rumors against Utah. We left our homes in peace, dreaming of no evil and we come here and learn that we are the most corrupt of men and are preparing for war.

Yours, &c., FERAMORZ LITTLE.

Dr. Bernhisel.

Two weeks ago we noticed the departure of this gentleman for Utah. Unexpectedly he has been again in our midst a few days this week. He returned on private business, and left again for St. Louis on Friday.

Rockville Centre, L. I.

On Saturday last, in accordance with a previous appointment, Judge Appleby, Elder McCune and ourself threw ourselves into a stage in Brooklyn, destined for the above named place, for the purpose of visiting the Saints in that region. At about six o'clock we arrived at the house of Brother Benedict, where we were kindly received and hospitably entertained by him and his amiable lady. Next day, in spite of the severe rain storm, Brother Benedict took us, in his carriage, to the house of Brother Petit, at which place we met a number of the Saints, others were prevented from coming on account of the severity of the weather. We found a very excellent spirit prevailing among those present, and a determination manifested by them to fulfil the requirements of the Gospel; to sustain the Church; to magnify their calling; live their religion; dispose of their property as quick as possible, and go to Utah. We dined and supped with Father Petit, whose children around him, in the same neighborhood, reminded us of one of the old Patriarch's, surrounded by so many "olive branches." His Brother Ezra, also in the same neighborhood, with himself and family, all talk of bending their steps westward as soon as practicable. We enjoyed our visit; felt very much at home; enjoyed the good spirit of the Lord in their midst; were treated with generous kindness and hospitality; and returned on Monday morning to the Great Babel of Gotham. We hope they will be enabled to carry out their good intentions, and that we may soon strike hands with them in Zion.

President P. P. Pratt.

"My Fiftieth Year" from the pen of President Pratt, will be read with great pleasure by his numerous friends. We received it some weeks ago, but in the midst of pressing business laid it aside, and, through absence from home, it has been forgotten till the other day, in arranging our letters, we picked it up and added our response.

Correspondence of Elder McCune.

New York, April 14, 1857.

Editor Mormon,—Dear Sir: In accordance with my promise, I resume my pen to give you a few items in connection with my labors in the Burmese Empire, etc. When the war broke out in Burmah in the beginning of 1852, I was ordered there on service with the ordnance park—Burmah Field Force—detached for duty with the Pegue Division of the army, designed for the subjugation of as much of the Golden-footed King's dominions as they wanted. Of which the best half was appropriated by the then ruling powers in India, on the principle, I suppose, of might making right, telling his majesty of the golden foot, who naturally felt dissatisfied at such a procedure, that, if he would keep quiet, they would allow him to keep the remainder of his possessions, but, if not, they would take the balance from him also.

I was at the same time invested with authority to plant the Gospel standard in Burmah, and build up the Church, wherever my duties with the army might lead me. I, in accordance with my mission, took an early opportunity of looking round for a suitable place to preach in, but not finding any available house, I sent round a circular to the European portion of the army that lay near me, inviting their attendance at one of the principal entrances of the great Sheawy Dagon pagoda, (the Burmese inhabitants being worshipers of Boodah Godama,) where I promised them a lecture on the principles of salvation by a Mormon Elder. A number came to whom I faithfully delivered the message of these last days, telling them of the kingdom of God spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, that the honest-hearted of all nations and creeds were pressing into it, informing them of Joseph Smith's calling as a Prophet of God, and inviting them to repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins. I shortly after obtained possession of an empty phongee house, i. e. a priest's house, and for a time had crowded audiences; a number were baptized and a branch organized.

A short time after my arrival, I was invited by two American Baptist Missionaries who wished me to treat medically some of their sick people, as I had in addition to my other callings, become a Homœopathic practitioner. This led to an intimacy between us and many were the strong protestations of gratitude on their part, but when I at last announced myself to them as a Mormon Missionary asking their opinion of it, they vehemently opposed the delusion, as they called Mormonism, inviting me to appoint a time to come and discuss the subject with them, to this I consented on condition they should allow me afterwards to take to pieces the organization and doctrines of the Baptists, to which they consented.

We met accordingly at the house of the Rev. Mr. Vinton, who treated the subject as well as myself calmly and courteously, but the other, the Rev. Mr. Kinkade became, upon finding the truth too strong for his reasoning, quite abusive to myself, the Prophet, the Apostles and Saints generally, being so much excited as to beat the table with his fists and frothing at the mouth. He utterly refused to bring anything to the test of the Scriptures. At this stage of the proceedings, I told him that I must decline having any further discussion with him, as he had proved himself altogether unfit to discuss the subject as it merited, and further that as he had proved himself an enemy of all truth, a most wicked man, that it became a part of my duty to warn him, that unless he repented he should likewise perish. Being ordered about this time to take charge of the ordnance park appointed to accompany a column of the army under General Steel, C. B., whose duty was to go against Martaban, Billing, Sitang, Shoewy Gheen and Tonghoo, all strongholds of the enemy, and reduce them, I appointed an elder to preside in Rangoon and embarked on my new mission. It is not my intention to describe the carnage amongst the poor Burmese by our troops, but to confine myself to incidents connected with the preaching of the Gospel in that land. As soon as I got my park formed, I sent round the camp a circular announcing preaching by a Mormon Elder at my tent, every Wednesday and Sunday evenings, also Sunday mornings when not engaged with the enemy.

I had a goodly attendance for some time, and baptized three on the march, but the usual amount of hatred manifested to the truth was made frequently to appear in the repeated attempts to interrupt our meetings, by cutting the ropes of the tent during meeting, throwing stones, &c. When we had succeeded in driving the Burmese from all their strong-holds in the Sitang Valley, we encamped at the town of Shoewy Gheen, when I took possession of a deserted phongee-house, and turned it into a chapel, posting up written placards telling the hours of meeting, &c. I had not held above two or three meetings in my new chapel, when a combination was entered into to set fire to the house during the meeting, the mob accordingly came to the house; but the Lord put his hook into their jaws, for they went off after a time without making the attempt to fire the building, and the meeting proceeded to its close without interruption. On another occasion, they determined to rush in armed with sticks during meeting, but this also passed off as the other had done; the mob contenting themselves with beating the house with their sticks instead of us.

The authorities of the camp were as averse to Mormonism as the common soldiers, but they had the character of officers and gentlemen to sustain, and did not know how to interfere with it publicly; they would come sometimes within hearing, or get into a dark corner to hear, but were ashamed to be seen openly. They hit at length upon the plan of warning me to turn out, as Government claimed as theirs all the phongee-houses, and they required the timber of the house, site, &c.

Accordingly I moved out, and took possession of another partially empty phongee-house; but the authorities soon found they required this also, consequently I was officially warned again to turn out. I now took possession of an Image-house near a Pagoda, and through the kindness of the Engineer Officer got it walled in and floored, and again commenced preaching. The Burmese Gods in this house were from 12 to 14 feet high, built of bricks and mortar, and gilt over with gold-leaf; the effect when lighted was very fine, as the images reflected the light in the most brilliant manner, and appeared to be looking down upon our proceedings in their sanctuary with wonder and astonishment. I had not been long in possession before the authorities discovered that they required to run a wall through the back part of this, my new chapel, to enclose a powder-magazine, which had been erected for my ammunition. I was again warned to turn out, and they unroofed the house sufficiently to render it unhabitable, and then left off.

The Burmese, as a people, are, though less cultivated, much superior to the natives of Hindostan in general; the latter are distinguished for sycophancy, penuriousness, pilfering and lying, whilst their highest bliss is perfect idleness; whereas, the former are of a cheerful, happy disposition, faithful and affectionate in their family circles, and though the laziest of all people, yet, with a perfect indifference to money, except for the indulgence it brings, devotedly sincere in their religion, and cheerfully make any sacrifice, in order to be able to present a valuable offering to their gods, of gold, silver, wood and stone or to their priesthood. One of their ancient laws was, and is still in that portion of territory, under the rule of the King of Ava, was, death to the adulterer, inflicted by the husband, or brother, or father of the female, and yet it is quite common to sell their daughters when of adult age, to any man, white or black, who will pay the highest price for them.

I remain, dear sir, your obedient servant,

M. McCune.

Correspondence of Pres Geo J. Taylor.

Garden City House, Chicago, Apr. 10, 1857.

Dear Father:—I arrived here to-day about twelve m. after three nights of it on the cars, in fact I have not been in bed since I saw you at Jersey City last Tuesday. We went along very well after we started from the ferry with the exception of an awful shaking of our carnal tabernacles caused by the inequalities of the track, until we reached Dunkirk, where we missed the train for Erie or the connection as they call it, and were detained about ten hours waiting for another 'connection' and reached Erie just in time to find our 'connection' had gone and left us again. We had the pleasure of viewing that place as it were through a glass darkly for the space of four hours more, when we pushed on again and reached Cleveland at 9 a.m. of Thursday the 19th inst. 'Our connection' was good enough to wait for us here and we stopped a short time at Toledo and got our dinner, after which we met with no difficulty until we got to within 40 miles of Chicago between the stations of Laporte and Calumnet, when I waked up rather suddenly out of a dose I had been indulging in, to find the left hand side of the car I was sitting in absent and the end of another car sticking through and (as our car was still moving slowly forward) tearing out all the little obstructions it met with in its progress. As I found numbers of passengers leaping out of the side of the car which had been torn away above the windows, I picked up my carpet bag and followed suit, and by the time I was thoroughly awake I found myself standing in a slough of mud and water about up to my knees. I could not say that I had not sufficient presence of mind, for it seemed very active for a few seconds, but I thought that absence of body would be infinitely preferable in such an emergency. What caused the accident I don't think any one knows positively—four or five cars were injured materially, and three are fit for nothing but firewood. Several cars before and several behind us, escaped uninjured, only two persons were killed, an old lady and her niece from New Jersey. Mr. Stilson, the husband of the old lady referred to, was severely injured, it is doubtful whether he will recover or not; Seth Pitty, son-in-law of the old gentleman had his leg broken and his child was one of the killed, its head was crushed in behind quite flat, it must have died instantly. Several others were injured more or less, but none to compare with that family; one man had his nose broken and bent to one side and when I came on to the next station was sitting in a car trying to straighten it with his thumb and finger."

Your affectionate Son,

Geo. J. Taylor.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

England.—The British Parliament was dissolved by royal proclamation on the 20th March and the wave washed isle was at last advices all excitement with the elections. Palmerston is in good spirits and calculated returning triumphantly to full power in Downing street. Mr. Cobden, the mover of the successful resolutions, condemnatory of the procedure of the government in the Chinese war, which led to the dissolution of the parliament, has been busy in his opposition to the premier and has attacked him roughly.

The writs for the new Parliament were to be returned on the 30th of April. At Hong-Kong great excitement reigned among the foreign population, in consequence of an attempt made by the celestials to destroy the barbarians by poison. One of the ringleaders of that infernal plot, was arrested through the energetic interference of a foreign merchant, before the offender could make his escape for Macao.

According to the latest news received by the overland mail from Calcutta, the Emperor is reported to be dissatisfied with the measures taken by his officials in Canton, and to recommend a reconciliation with the English; if this be the case, we may soon hear of an adjustment of the present difficulties, but it is very doubtful.

France.—The war being over, Louis Napoleon is contemplating the introduction of a consistent economy in all the State departments and national establishments. The polytechnic school has been dissolved by the order of the Emperor—the boys were getting too republican. The solution of the Neufchatel question appears to the corps diplomatique as difficult as the famous riddle of the Sphinx. Nothing has yet been done at the Paris conference up to the 27th ult. and they seem all pretty sick of the business. The grand duke Constantine of Russia is shortly anticipated in Paris. In Algeria an expedition is contemplated against the Kabyles, a very powerful and warlike tribe. Longwood House rendered classical by having been the residence of Napoleon I. on St. Helena, and the tomb with his drooping willows on that Island, are said to have been ceded by England to France. The American spirit rapper Hume has been very successful in his performances in Paris, with the exception of some roguish tricks, which nearly caused his expose. The haute volee of the French capital is discussing at present with great interest the approaching nuptials of the Sultan's daughter, the magnificent corbeau of the bride, and other paraphernalia of Oriental magnificence and luxury. An interesting addition to the histoire scandaleuse of the French catholic clergy, has been furnished by the elopement of a grand vicaire with a beautiful penitent of his to England. It appears that the reverend father was not only confessor but lover of the young lady. The ecclesiastical Lothario has declared in a letter to his bishop, that he is renouncing his profession. Sensible man—it is not good to be alone.

Germany.—The old quarrel with petty Denmark is not yet settled, on account of the noted phlegm and disunion of the Confederation. The interference of the great Powers is refused, the question being a federation. Russia from selfish interests is siding with Denmark, and causes thereby the bottle-king Frederick to waver in the adjustment of the question and to humbug his subjects.

Austria.—The Archduke Albrecht, as Governor General of Hungary, is endeavoring to prevail upon Francis Joseph, the boy-emperor to grant the Magyars the liberal (?) and enviable (?) privileges of his subjects in the Lombardo—Venetian kingdom. The Austrian has still very accrimonious feelings against Count Cavour, on account of his liberal reply to the Piedmontese press. The Piedmontese government continues to be the nightmare of the Viennese Cabinet, considering the ministry of Turin to be the focus of the revolutionary movements in Italy. Meanwhile the Piedmontese government continues its policy, which threatens to disturb not only the social equilibrium in Italy, but also to overthrow the political system, established by the Viennese treaty of 1815. The Russian bear is still growling and refuses the admittance of English Consuls in the ports, till the evacuation is complete, and in order to keep the great Powers on the qui vive, it is increasing the Baltic fleet. Alexander of Russia, tired of the stubbornness of the brave mountaneers of the Caucasus, is determined to bring the war, which has lasted for more than 17 years, to an end, by exterminating the Circassians under Schamyl; and for that purpose he has not only secured the cooperation of several of the chiefs of tribes, but has also sent an army of 100,000 men to the scene of action.

Denmark.—The difficulty concerning the Sound Dues is settled, inasmuch as a treaty relative to it, has been signed by all the Powers interested. According to an on dit the Spanish Government is going to send an expedition against Mexico, for the purpose of invading that Country, having at the same time secured the aid of Santa Anna, who is rumored to have offered his services some time ago to Queen Isabella. The first division of the fleet was to sail towards the 28th of March for Havanna. The sending out of a fleet is said to be merely an energetic demonstration, to maintain the honor of the Nation, without incurring the risk of a land campaign. The Spanish government thinks of establishing a submarine telegraph between Cuba and the United States.

Naples.—The condition of the people is as wretched as ever. The long spoken of amnesty has at last come out and is only a political dodge, inasmuch as it excludes all politically compromised persons. The latter are reported to have received the promise of liberty under the condition of leaving immediately for the Argentine Republic in South America. Between Austria and Sardinia diplomatic intercourse has ceased, in consequence of which the respective plenipotentiaries at the courts of Paris and Vienna have received their passports.

Persia.—Insurrectionary movements of an alarming character have broken out.

Japan.—Important news have been received, that by an edict of the Emperor the ports of Simodi, Kabodabi and Nangesabi are open to English, French, and United States Vessels.

South America.—In Brazils some rumors are afloat about the formation of a new Cabinet. Yellow fever at Rio and Bahia.

Mexico.—News from Vera Cruz, represent that place in a state of great excitement, in consequence of the expected invasion of the Spanish. It appears further, that the clergy is very much against the new constitution, and endeavors to overthrow the present government by starting another revolution. In fact the ferment is so great, that the outbreak of revolutionary movements is daily anticipated. The army is determined to sustain the new constitution, and has declared its will by oath to that effect.

LATEST NEWS.

England.—The issue of the election is a triumph for the liberal party over the conservatives and for Lord Palmerston individually, inasmuch as some of his ablest and most prominent antagonists such as Bright, Gibson, Cobden and Layard are removed from the parliamentary arena, if the re-election of Gladstone and Roebuck has taken place.

Sardinia.—Owing to the favorable reception of the interference of the English and French Cabinets, a speedy adjustment of the differences existing between Austria and Sardinia is anticipated.

France.—Prince Napoleon is reported to go to meet the grand duke Constantine of Russia at Toulon.

First Annual Address

Of the President of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society.

Fellow-Citizens: It affords me great pleasure to meet you on the present useful and interesting occasion, full of associations having a bearing upon the upbuilding and prosperity of our newly established Territory.

Many of my fellow-citizens can well remember the circumstances under which the first soil was broken in this Territory, and in this city, by a band of Pioneers, with our beloved Governor at our head, who, nine years ago, left their families on the frontiers, and wended their way through a then trackless desert and wilderness to this place, and with an untried soil and climate, committed the scanty remnants of seed to the earth, and asked the God of our fathers to bless our labors and give the increase.

The same season a larger number of my fellow-citizens made Utah their resting-place, who, by the blessing of the Almighty God of Jacob, kept soul and body together through want and almost starvation until the succeeding spring, when another crop was put in, which bade fair for a good and plentiful harvest, but an army of crickets pitched their camp and made ready for an attack upon our crops. Many stout hearts fainted, while the prayers of the people were offered up to the Lord of Hosts that they might be preserved from the awful starvation that stared them in the face. The cry was heard. A host of timely gulls were mustered and sent forth to devour the crickets, which blackened the earth with their numbers.

Thus were we preserved to witness what we this day behold, which so far exceeds our most sanguine anticipation that we are lost in thought when we cast our eyes over the native productions, of our isolated mountain home.

The Home Manufactures would reflect honor upon any State in the Union, and far exceed my expectation. To say that they were equal to those of any other nation would detract from the real merit due, as it is well understood that Utah has some of the finest mechanics the world can produce.

The finest specimens of Sole, Upper and Harness Leather, of Cloth, Shawls, Hats, Caps and Muffs, Harness, Saddles, Bridles, Boots, Shoes, Nails, Mechanics' Tools, Carding Machines, Steam Engine, and very many other articles, properly elicited a good degree of interest.

The Agricultural department gave me much satisfaction. The fine specimens of Wheat, Flour, Corn, Barley, Oats, Beans, Squash, Beets, Turnips, and a great variety of other products could not be surpassed. The Fruits are excellent. The Peaches, Grapes, Apples, &c., are of the finest quality and flavor.

The Ladies' department furnished no inconsiderable amount of curiosity, wrought needlework and other Home-Manufactured articles, which has greatly added to the interest of our Fair. There were specimens of Linen, spun and wove by the ladies of Utah, and we would here urge upon the farmers the necessity of cultivating Flax more extensively; it is a native plant of these mountains, and is found growing wild to a great height in our kanyons.

The Plowing match came off with considerable spirit, and attracted much attention, and we anticipate another year will bring many competitors into the field.

The Show of Stock was rather limited. Some fine Horses, Cattle and Sheep were exhibited; but, for this superior stock-raising country, was far behind what it should be, and which we anticipate another year will far outstrip some of our other branches.

From my youth I have been intimately connected with agricultural and manufacturing interests and pursuits, and have always been deeply impressed with their great importance and utility.

That great master-mind, Jas. Buchanan, of my native State, and others of the United States with whom I have had the honor of an acquaintance, by turning their attention to the encouragement of Agriculture and Manufacture, have blessed the people beyond their expectations; and we in this Territory, with like pursuits, will truly cause the wilderness to blossom as the rose.

I believe this institution is the nucleus around which will be gathered the means of self-independence, for which we are indebted to the suggestions of our worthy Governor, and the action of the Legislative Assembly, who, at their last sitting, appropriated $1500 to aid in the enterprise; and we feel assured they will be more satisfied with the result, and at their next sitting will make additional appropriations to give strength and stability to the institution while in its infancy.

To the members of Awarding Committees, and to the Committee of Arrangements, who have acted in the spirit of their appointments, and have attended to their respective duties, I would, in behalf of the Board of Directors, tender our thanks for efficiency, promptness and energy displayed throughout their proceedings and management of the exhibition; and hope they will still give their aid and support to the institution; we do not consider our labors finished but only begun.

By the co-operation of the citizens, a great and good work can be accomplished in the furtherance of the interests of Agriculture and Home Manufactures in this Territory. An impetus has been given, which, if energetically and faithfully carried out, will bring about that consummation so earnestly desired—"Independence."

We shall be happy to receive from any of our friends practical communications on Agriculture, Horticulture, Mechanism, Manufactures, &c., applicable to this Territory.

We would also tender our especial thanks to the Governor for the accommodation of Buildings, Yards, Grounds, &c., for our Exhibition.

To my colleagues, the Board of Directors and officers, I tender my cordial thanks for their hearty co-operation with me, and their unwearied labors to carry into effect the objects of the Society, and pray the God of our fathers to crown our future efforts with success.

Edward Hunter.

From the Deseret News.

Governor's Message,

Presented to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, December 18, 1856.

To the Honorable the Council and House of Representatives of Utah Territory:

Gentlemen—

It is with pleasure that I embrace the opportunity again afforded to present for your consideration those matters of interest which pertain to the growth, prosperity, advancement and well being of our young Territory.

Through the blessings of an Allwise Providence we have been favored with peace, quietness, general health and a fair portion of the bounties of the earth, partially compensating for the losses of crops and stock of the previous year.

Let our gratitude and praise be given unto the Lord of Hosts for these mercies and favors, and with them may wisdom and understanding continue to flow unto us.

In accordance with acts of the Legislative Assembly a Constitution was formed and adopted, the census taken, and delegates chosen to present our application to Congress for admission into the Union as a Sovereign and Independent State. Recent advices from our delegates show that our application has not been presented, owing to the intolerance evinced by the predominant party in the House of Representatives.

The enumeration of the inhabitants showed a population of near 77,000 in this Territory, and it is presumed that the addition to our numbers, since that was taken, would amount to about twenty thousand. This gives an aggregate equal to or exceeding the ratio of representation for Congressmen, removing every objection, if any were made, to our admission, on the score of insufficient population.

The financial condition of the Territory being sound, but little need be said on that subject. The accompanying reports of the Auditor of Public accounts and Treasurer, however, show the small balance of three hundred dollars and eighty-eight cents against the Territory, if the assessments were all collected; Auditor's warrants in circulation amounting to $6032,38; a lessened revenue for the current year of $2348,39, owing, it is presumed, to the losses of crops and cattle, and to less than the usual amount of merchandize in market. I do not consider any increases of the half per cent necessary, believing that, with the usual degree of prosperity, rate will produce sufficient for all needful purposes.

The following appropriations have not been drawn from the Treasury:

Amount appropriated for State House arrearages, - -	$15,078.92
Amount appropriated for establishing boundary lines, -	11,318.00
Amount appropriated for educational purposes, - - -	2,500.00
Amount appropriated for a military school, - - - -	1,000.00

It is desirable that the Legislative Assembly lend its pecuniary aid, only for the accomplishment of those objects manifestly and immediately conducive to the public interest; among which construction of roads and bridges, the promotion of the cause of education, domestic productions and manufactures, the public defence and the usual expenses attending the administration of Government, which last mentioned are principally defrayed by the General Government, in consideration of our still remaining in a Territorial organization.

The annual State Fair, or Exhibition of Home Productions and Manufactures, was held in Great Salt Lake City on first three days of October last, and displayed a commendable interest on the part of the people in supplying our wants with articles of fruit, vegetables, cereals, stock and manufactured articles brought into competition, not so much for the prize offered, as to gratify a laudable ambition to excel and bear the palm of superior merit and excellence. This is a harmless ambition, and worthy of still further encouragement. Policy, as well as interest, dictates that we, as a people, should rely more upon home productions for our consumption.

For the advancement and progress of our Territory, we should enact such laws as are necessary for her benefit, the development of her resources and most conducive to her interest, regardless of what other States or Territories may have seen proper to adopt. The dissimilarity of existing circumstances might make theirs a bad example or precedent for us to follow, though beneficial to them. To call from the experience and history of the past, for the benefit of the future, seems wisdom, and so it is, so far as applicable to our condition; when it is not, it betrays a lack of forecast and penetration which disqualifies and renders inconsistent those who shelter beneath the shades of precedents. To review the laws, alter and amend where necessary, and adapt them to the present wants of the people, seems to attend the duties of Legislation in this age of progression and reform.

Owing to the absence and supposed death of the Secretary, Mr. Almon W. Babbitt, and there being no probability of an appointee of the General Government arriving here before another year, I supplied the place by the appointment to that office of Wm. H. Hooper, Esq. as Secretary pro tem.

The peace of the Territory has remained uninterrupted during the year, except by a few Indians who commenced hostilities in Utah county in the early part of March, which, though soon suppressed, caused the death of seven persons, mostly herdsmen, and the loss of a large amount of stock. The depredatory Indians escaped, and have since returned to their usual haunts, except the hostile chief who has fled to the Moquis for shelter. A suitable degree of care should be exercised to provide the Territory with arms, supplies of camp equipage and ammunition, to be kept in store for emergencies of a similar nature.

In conclusion, permit me to add that, while we congratulate ourselves upon the peace, union and prosperity which so eminently attend our efforts, we continually invoke Him who rules in the affairs of men, for wisdom to enable us to perform the duties devolved upon us with ability before Him, and fidelity to our constituents.

Brigham Young.

Utah Territory, Executive Department, Dec. 8, 1856.

Gov. Young's Message.

The last document we have received from Utah will be read at this moment with great pleasure by those who love truth and justice. Utah is represented by her enemies in the States to be in turmoil and confusion, preparing for war—and the governor's message to the Legislature comes at the opportune moment, breathing peace and good will to men—what a rebuke to his friends and calumniators!

Utah.

We received by the last California mail a copy of the Deseret News of February the 4th. All was well: the Saints doing their best to assist the emigrants who had arrived late in the season with the hand-carts and ox teams. A Lady's Relief Society had been formed for the purpose collecting assistance and disbursing it among them.

Captain Daniel Jones had been on the Salt Lake in a small craft, sounding the depths to see to what extent its navigation might be useful. The iron foundry has cast him an anchor of two hundred and fifty pounds—a good beginning.

The Exhibition Prize List.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are ncapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are he kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The four[th] is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.
